In the home of Fedka, Khavah is happy for a while, but the meanness of Fedka's mother, Parasha, quickly manifests itself and makes life for her a drudgery. This is greatly aggravated when Fedka's father, Ivan, starosta of the village, is ordered by the Czar's officers to banish the Tobias family from the village. Although Khavah does not know of the order, Parasha's actions toward her are so brutal, that she decides to stifle her pride and return to her family. She halts her father on the roadway and begs forgiveness, but he would have nothing of her and drives off in his cart as she falls crying in the roadway.

In the meanwhile Ivan prepares to carry out the order of banishment which by this time is known by every one in the village. The story comes to a climax when Fedka learns that Khavah has deserted him and rushes to the scene of the banishment. Here the order is read to Tobias. Khavah, in hiding, then comes forward and declares that if her family is banished she too must be banished, for she renounces her marriage vows to Fedka and is again a Jewess. The little family slowly wend their way across the hill tops to a newer happiness where only love will reign supreme.

About Metro Players

Charles K. Stern, assistant treasurer of the Metro Film Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles on business connected with the settlement of the estate of the late Harold Lockwood, left here Friday for New York. He will make the trip east via San Francisco, Seattle and Vancouver, B. C.

Maxwell Karger and George D. Baker this week left the Los Angeles studios for a brief trip to New York in the interests of the Metro company.

The Hale Hamilton company, under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, is at work on the production of a story of South America entitled, "Full of Pep."

Upon the completion of his present production, "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," taken from the William Dudley Pelley stories of that name, the Bert Lytell company will begin the making of another film of similar length entitled, "It's Easy to Make Money." The story was written by John H. Blackwood and will be staged under the direction of John Ince. Frank Currier has been cast for an important role in the forthcoming production.

The May Allison company which recently completed the production of "His Father's Wife," is at present making ready to start work on a film version of the Will Irwin Saturday Evening Post story, "Free," a tale of a parlor Bolshevik. The story has been put into scenario form by George D. Baker and will be staged under the direction of Herbert Blache. Pal Trenton appears in the role of the college-bred Bolshevik and Kathleen Kerrigan plays the part of his female co-worker.

As a means to speed up production, the Bert Lytell company has for the time being been divided into two units, one under the direction of John Ince making the bigger scenes of the story with Robert Kurrle at the camera, and Webster Cullison making the close ups and minor scenes with Eugene Gaudio, Nazimova's cameraman.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

William C. De Mille is at work on the production of a screen production of "Peg O' My Heart," adapted by Olga Printzlau from the Hartley Manners stage production of the same name. Wanda Hawley appears in the title role with Thomas Meighan in the leading masculine role opposite.

Under the direction of James Cruze, the Wallace Reid company this week completed the production of "You're Fired," a picture based on the O. Henry story which appeared under the title, "The Halberdier of the Little Rindsch loss." Wanda Hawley appears in the leading role opposite him.

Bryant Washburn has just completed "A Very Good Young Man," a comedy drama. Helen Chadwick appears in the leading role opposite with Helen Eddy and Anna Q. Nilsson in important roles.

The Robert Warwick company is at present on location in the mountains of Idaho, where, under the direction of George Melford, they are at work on the production of a film version of "Told in the Hills." This is taken from the novel written twenty-five years ago by Marah Ellis Ryan and which was regarded at that time as the most successful novel of the decade. Ann Little plays the leading role opposite Warwick. "Told in the Hills" is to be released as a Paramount-Artcraft special.

Under the direction of Irvin Willate, the Lila Lee company has this week completed their production of "The Daughter of the Wolf" which originally appeared as a magazine. Lila Lee appears in the title role with Elliott Dexter in the leading male part. This is a story of the north and is the first production in which Miss Lee has ever taken a melodramatic lead.

Vitagraph News Bits

Bessie Love, under the direction of David Smith, is at work on the production of a new feature which has a working title of "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine," and is based upon the story of that name by Florence Morse Kingsley. Wallace McDonald has been engaged as leading man opposite Miss Love and Aggie Herring, who appeared in her latest completed picture, has been re-engaged to play the role of Mrs. Connors in the current production. Dorothea Wolbert, Frank Hayes and Jake Abram complete the cast.

The William Duncan company has begun work on the first episode of a new serial, title for which has not yet been announced. The new chapter play is from the pens of Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock are at work on a comedy under the direction of Gilbert Pratt. Blanche Payson, Louise Granville, Max Asher, Billy Fay and Owen Evans comprise the supporting cast. No title has been assigned the picture.

Antonio Moreno and Carrol Holloway are working on episodes eight, nine, ten, eleven and twelve of their serial, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain."

Under the direction of James Young, the Earle Williams company is rapidly nearing the completion of their latest production, "The Hornet's Nest," taken from the story by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow.

Universal Newsettes

The Mary MacLaren company, under the direction of Tod Browning, this week began the production of a screen version of "The Petal on the Current," the story of a department store worker in New York. The story appeared originally as a Cosmopolitan novel from the pen of Fanny Hurst and has been prepared for film production by Waldemar Young. Miss MacLaren is supported by Robert Andersen, Fritzi Ridgway, Ina Claire and other well known Universal players. The company is to leave shortly for San Francisco where a number of exterior scenes will be made around the department stores of that city.

Only a few more days' work remains before the completion of the latest Dorothy Phillips production, "The Right to Happiness," which is being staged under the direction of Allen Holubar. In this picture Miss Phillips appears in a double role with William Stowell opposite and a supporting cast including Robert Andersen, Hector Sarno, Winter Hall, Henry Barrows, Margaret Mann, Stanhope Wheatcroft and Alma Bennett.

The George Seigmann company is well into the work of preparing "The Spitfire of Seville" for the screen. Hedda Nova, former Vitagraph star, appears in the leading role of this production with Claire Anderson, Marion Skinner, Alfred Allen, Leo Maloney, Robert Gray and Edgar Allen in the supporting cast. The story was written by Joseph Franklin Poland and put into scenario form by Waldemar Young.

Eric von Stroheim, author, director and star of "The Pinnacle" has brought his company back to the studio from the snows of San Jacinto mountain where he has been making exteriors in the production and is at work on the final scenes for this story. Francelia Billington appears opposite von Stroheim with Sam De Grasse, H. Gibson-Gowland, Jack Perrin and Valerie Germonprez supporting.

Monroe Salisbury, under the direction of Rupert Julian is making ready to start production on a picture entitled, "Devils Have Their Friends." The story was written especially for the Salisbury company by Elliott Clawson of the company scenario department and is being staged with William Stowell, Colleen Moore, Ethel Ritchie, Virginia Foltz, Sydney Franklin, Harry Du Roy and Arthur Jassman in the supporting cast.

With Frank Mayo in the title role, Lynn Reynolds' production of the screen version of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich," is well under way. J. Barney Sherry, Kathryn Adams, Lily Leslie, George Webb and Jack Gilbert make up the balance of the cast.

Here and There

The William S. Hart company this week returned from Sacramento, Cal., where they had gone to make a number of exterior scenes in the production of their next western subject.

After a few days' work at the studio, the company is to leave again for location, this time to Victorville, Cal., on the edge of the Mojave Desert where they are to make additional exteriors for the production. With them are to go as many prairie schooners as are available in Los Angeles and a company of between two and three hundred extra players who will make up the wagon train called for by the action of the story.

No title has thus far been assigned the production, but it is announced that much of the action takes place during the western migration following the discovery of gold in California in '49.

Hart appears in the stellar role with Jane Novak opposite and a supporting cast including Robert McKim, Leo O. Pierson and Lloyd Bacon, son of Frank Bacon, at present playing in the title role of "Lightnin'" in New York.

After three years as a producer of screen and legitimate stage productions for the G. M. Anderson interests in New York and Los Angeles, Jesse J. Robbins has severed his connections with that organization. Leaving New York, Mr. Robbins this week arrived in Los Angeles which is to be the scene of his future operations, which are to be confined to the production of motion pictures. Robbins is well known on the coast. For a number of years he was head of the Essanay studio at Niles, Cal., which post he relinquished to found the Robbins Photoplays company in Los Angeles. He was instrumental in signing Chaplin with the Essanay company. Following George K. Spoor's purchase of Anderson's interest in the Essanay company, Robbins remained with Anderson for whom he continued to make pictures in Los Angeles and at the company's Fort Lee studio.

At the Jesse D. Hampton studios, H. B. Warner is still at work on the production of "A Pagan God," a story adapted by George Elwood Jenks from the original story by F. McGrew Willis. William Desmond is making the concluding scenes for "Bare Fisted Gallagher" for the same company. Agnes Vernon appears opposite him.

Great Authors, Inc., announces a premier public showing of their recently completed filmization of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners" in the very near future. The story was made under the direction of Edward Sloman with a cast including Mildred Manning, Roy Stewart, Wilfred Lucas, Robert McKim and Graham Pettie.

Lloyd C. Haynes, president of the Brentwood Film corporation, returned to Los Angeles this week from New York where he has been for several months arranging for the distribution of the first of the Brentwood productions, "The Turn in the Road."

Art Rosson has been directing cowboys so long he is threatened with the Wild West fever.

Roy Stone writes to inquire when the 1919 edition of the Studio Directory will be issued.

Bill Duncan has lost his mind again and is stark mad in the production of another Vitagraph serial.

Press Agents have been lax for the last few weeks, as Hokum has not received a mistaken identity story.

Darrell Foss was nominated the "dude" for the lot in Metro the other day, and immediately retired to private life.

From out Bob Brunton's Studio way we have reports that Ernest Ward is practicing public speaking on the set.

Chick and Tiny Harvey, vaudeville troupers, were guests of their former associate, William Vitagraph-Serial Duncan.

Montgomery and Rock, the big Vers, are reported by us making another laughable comedy this week, all of which is not news.

Enid Bennett has had a vacation and now works day and night to make up for it, but she wouldn't say friend husband, Fred Niblo, is a slave driver.

Jack Cunningham has received eleven offers in as many days, but the magnetism of Frank Keenan keeps him on the job for that star.

Henry Lehrman went through town the other day in his $12,000 automobile and honked the horn at the Railroad Crossing.

Bert Lytell made an after lunch speech this week at the Los Angeles Advertising Club, and his hearers bought $46,000 worth of bonds.

The controversy of why Ethel Lynne has an "E" on her name was ended this week when the Christie star admitted the "E" stood for Ethel.

Bill Hart is back from the Sacramento River, where he corralled and rounded up the Mississippi River steamboats. Bill looks better after his vacation.

Adam Hull Shirk announces that his three weeks of training with Houdini has put him in ring side condition for parlor magic and the removal of bracelets.

J. Frank Glendon promises to tell what the "J" stands for as soon as his next picture is finished, and so we hold our breath.

John McCormack was seen snooping about several studios this week, but every place told it was a silent drama cannery.

And now we learn that George Ovey and Reggie Morris are co-working for the betterment of the Universal comedy.

Tortoise shell glasses are now being worn by Jay Belasco, and he disclaims any relationship to the well known producer.

Harry Beaumont was insulted this week when a party called him Bowmont. Harry is not the same man they named the oil fields after.

Theodore Taylor is alliterative if nothing more, for pipe this line about Alice Lake, who uses the makin's in almost every scene: "the roll of the roller."

Tom Mix is to be starred in the picture titled "Speed," and we predict he'll wear that black and white checkered overcoat of his, even if this is the silent drama.

Bill Desmond and H. B. Warner agreed to decide who is the best dressed man of the Hampton Studio by the flip of a coin now that they are the only two stars left.

The U Zoo has an innocent looking burro with genteel whiskers and rattlesnake disposition which they want to send over to Holland for the Kaiser to ride.

There is one periodical of the American journalistic sea that knows haw to spell the name of a certain William Fox star and so we print it below—MADLAINE TRAVERSE. We love ourselves and sing: "Of all my wife's relations I love Myself the Best."

Louis William Chaudest threatens to be the Caruso of the silent comedy drama, so his neighbors say. His instructor says he has a wonderful voice, but does not add for what.

Dorothy De Vore now claims she capitalized the "V" at the beginning of the War to indicate Victory, and then someone said: "You mean Vernon," and poor Dorothy was all fussed.

Who knows but what May Allison may prove an ideal stepdaughter—anyway, she is playing a part something like that in "His Father's Wife," but we don't know who he is; anyway, it is said to be a good story.

The Boys, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, were the honored guests of an Oakland annual celebration attended by thirty thousand and the girls nearly danced them to death. The Boys say it is 'ell to be so popular.

James J. Corbett, of squared circle fame, is reported to be gathering temperament all about Universal City because he was dropped in a sewer the other day. But let it be known that it was a made to order sewer.

"Brownie" Vernon, who disappeared from the screen about a year ago, has been discovered by Jesse D. Hampton, and shortly the public will look into her brown eyes when "Bare Fisted Gallagher" comes on the screen.

Al Holubar got away with a swindle sheet containing a charge for $22 worth of cigars, and the Universal cashier is expecting to see something similar on future expense accounts. Al, we wouldn't cause him any surprises.

"Mickey" Neilan has been so busy accepting congratulatory telegrams for uniting with First National that he has been forced to send letters of regret for nine dinner engagements. That boy Mickey is popular.

Double H Van Loan is writing a story for Bessie Barriscale entitled "Cash on Delivery," but followed his usual policy in taking the contract and receiving a check for half with the order. Van is a regular bisness man.

When Dave Hartford went to Canada he forgot all the World was not like California and was almost frozen to death. He has now applied for the position of chief booster of the Los Angeles C. of C. Dave can talk pretty loud, too.

Right'em Cecil Smith of Tom Ince's authorial staff has a new story with a new twist of the old triangle, and many of us are expecting several of the well known dramatists to turn over in their graves if they hear about it.

Hedda Nova, the Russia actress, is to be "The Spitfire of Seville" for Universal, but what does a mere matter of nationality mean in pictures as exemplified in the fact that George Seigman is to be the director and Joe Franklin Poland is the author?

Anna Quincy Nilsson is reported to have suggested the full name for the Burlington Route—Chicago, Burlington and Quincy—but is perfectly satisfied with the fame she is gaining by her appearance in Metro productions. Quincy is a pretty name, not a malady.

Peggy Hyland has been camping out in Bear Valley. Bear in this instance is a proper name, not an adjective. People up there will give Movie Folks accommodations, and there are no signs "Movies and Dogs not wanted," such as are seen in spots in Hollywood.

The Police Department's attention is called to the following item from Press Agent Taylor of Metro: "William V. Mong indulged in a three-way coin-matching game with Cameraman Arthur Martinelli and Assistant 'Mickey' Whalen and quit twenty-two cents poorer—if that's a news item."

Anita Stewart's picture in colors handsomely done by a lithographer of national repute was seen on our street this week. She had advice from the First National that the same kind of pictures were shown in many other cities of our size, and so the pleasure was not all Hollywood.

John Warren Kerrigan has found another position. Jack is a good boy. He loves all his former employees. He speaks in glowing terms of every one—a red-hot-glow. And now we learn of a movement on the part of his former employees, Messrs. Essanay, American, Universal, Paralta and Hampton, to club together and buy him a loving cup.

Tom Geraghty has come home to us after going about in the East. Tom says he almost went to bed one night, but now that he is back in Hollywood two days he has caught up with his sleep. Tom will contribute to these here columns, giving us his intimate opinions of things as they are back there. Tom is a keen thinker and never hits an Underwood letter key sideways.

Bruce Scenic Ready for First-Run Bookings

"An Essay of the Hills," the new Robert C. Bruce scenic, is now available for first-run bookings, the new prints having been completed at the laboratory and shipped last week to the various Educational exchanges. The picture will be remembered from its pre-release showing at the Rialto in April, where it enjoyed an exceptionally fine reception. The release to the exchanges is following the usual Educational schedule, approximately four weeks later than the first-run in New York.

Blackton Signs Barry

An important member of the supporting cast being assembled by J. Stuart Blackton for his newest production, the theme and title of which have not yet been announced, is Mme. Margaret Barry, the Russian actress.

Although Madame Barry is an American by birth, California being her native State, most of her career has had Russia for its setting. It is said that she was a protege of Madame Modjeska who inspired her interest in Russian and Polish art and influenced her decision to study abroad. popular of British Film Stars.

Charles F. Schwerin, who recently purchased a big block of southern territory on "The Unpardonable Sin"

Secures Miriam Sabbage

Film Booking Offices, Ltd., announce that they have secured the services of Miss Miriam J. Sabbage, the winner of the £500 First Prize of the "Daily Mirror" £1,000 Beauty Competition.

Miss Sabbage is stated to have many qualifications for film acting—the possession of a mobile face, high intelligence, and a keen dramatic sense, as well as being a thoroughly fine open-air girl and a very capable swimmer. She has in her the charms, it is said, of a very promising film actress and it is believed by Film experts that in the winner of the "Daily Mirror" Competition they have found a beautiful girl who bids fair to be one of the most popular of British Film Stars.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 2, 1919.

" Mother, I Need You (State Rights)—" A box-office attraction and liked by all. Big business two days."

" Romance of the Air " (Film Clearing House)—" Poorest feature for drawing power I ever run."

" Mr. Logan, U. S. A." (Fox)—" Extra good western. Mix draws fine here and his pictures are always good."

" Cannibals of the South Seas " (Exhibitors' Mutual)—" First half of this feature big and second half fair. Good pictures with good drawing power."

" The Make Believe Wife " (Paramount)—" Pleased everybody. Come on, Miss Burke. More like this. Big business."

" Woman on the Index " (Goldwyn)—" Frederick draws poorly, but comedy got us by."

" Mirandy Smiles " (Paramount)—" A pleasant surprise. Much better than we anticipated."

" Why I Would Not Marry " (Fox)—" Good production but no drawing power. Fell off second night."

" Good-bye, Bill " (Paramount)—" Clever travesty on the many Kaiser pictures. Poor business."

" Bondage of Barbara " (Goldwyn)—" Better than Mae Marsh has been getting."

" Little Miss Hoover " (Paramount)—" Nothing to it. Poorest Clark picture ever made. Average business."

" Smiles " (Fox)—" The Lees don't draw but they please greatly."

" Sis Hopkins " (Goldwyn)—" Not quite up to the publicity but pleased. Fell down second night."

" The Forbidden City " (Select)—" Fine production and excellent support to extraordinary star."

" Adele " (United Pictures)—" War story and the crowd says they don't want any more, so I am quits on war stories."

" Little White Savage " (Universal)—" Good entertainment. Fine little star and fine cast."

" The Trail to Yesterday " (Metro)—" Pleased to average business."

" Every Mother's Son " (Fox)—" Ran it, as it was all we could get to fill date on short notice. Poor film, poor crowd."

" Cleopatra " (Fox)—" A really big film which gave general satisfaction."

" The Hell Cat " (Goldwyn)—" Not as good as some of her films, but good."

" The Dub " (Paramount)—" Good average film to average business."

" Her Man " (Elaine Hammerstein-Pathe)—" Average picture, perhaps not that. Unknown star and unusual local event caused very light crowd."

" Here Comes the Bride " (Paramount)—" Very good picture to average business."

The Box Office Reports Have A Value That Stands Alone

The "safety standard" has not been forced upon any manufacturer. It can be used or not as the manufacturer sees fit. It is merely a matter of changing sprockets. The intermittents and other mechanical devices of the projector are the same. However, the more it is used and the more it is promoted, the greater the supply of non-inflammable film will become and the stronger will be the feeling of revenge against the man who stoops so low as to use inflammable film in the production of pictures in this "safety standard" width.

Should at any time in the future non-inflammable film be universally used the excuse for the "safety standard" will no longer exist. This, however, could not be done without years of warning, for, as we pointed out last week, the investment in prints produced on inflammable stock is so great that it would be absolutely wrong to ask the companies owning them to throw them into the discard until they are worn out.

It is, therefore, our opinion that the "safety standard," which shall use non-inflammable stock only is the proper solution for the problem of showing pictures in semi-public gatherings, at least at the present time, except where a fireproof projection booth is used, and no excuse should be allowed for the elimination of this enclosure, no matter what type of machine is used unless the film used is printed on slow burning stock.

E. K. Gillett.

DOMINATES THE FIELD

What Famous Players-Lasky Knows

THE producer—the successful producer—must bear in mind that the motion picture theatre is his outlet. It has the exhibitor's name over the door and is operated by him. But its business must be pushed by the producer as well as the exhibitor. He must send people into that theatre to buy entertainment just as definitely as if it were his theatre and he must help sell the goods to the consumers—the public—when they go to that theatre.

That's the reason for the Famous Players-Lasky high standard of production, for its service and for its national advertising of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

"The Fire Flingers"

A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

EVERYBODY in the country knows the plot of "THE FIRE FLINGERS," for they stayed up nights to read this famous serial in the Saturday Evening Post. And everybody wants to see the picture. Chicago has seen it—and all six of the big Chicago papers praise it unreservedly. To cite just one, the Chicago Herald says:

"'The Fire Flingers' is as good as its name. The picture has tang and tingle, action and mystery. It's modern, quick and nifty and if George M. Cohan would put words to it, might prove another 'Seven Keys to Baldpate.' Swift, staccato punches trail each other throughout and it is guaranteed to give you a temperature of 105 degrees."

Rob Reel says it's the greatest Universal picture of the year. And when you think of the other Universal Special Attractions—that's going some!

Mr. Douglas Fairbanks
Hollywood, Cal.

Dear Mr. Fairbanks:-

Please advise us whether your last picture released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, ''The Knickerbocker Buckaroo,'' was made by you under your original contract or is a ''Special''.

A prompt reply will be appreciated.

Very truly yours,
The Bridge Theater,
Baltimore, Md.

The Reply

May 7th, 1919.

The Bridge Theater,
Baltimore, Md.

Gentlemen:-

Answering your favor of May second, I beg to advise that our contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., was completed on February 5th this year and that ''The Knickerbocker Buckaroo,'' which is to be released May 18th is a special.

Trusting this is the information you desire, I remain,

Very truly yours,

Jno Fairbanks

An Artcraft Picture

Directed by Albert Parker

SPECIAL in Name and Extra SPECIAL in Value

FIRST run exhibitors are finding in “The Knickerbocker Buckaroo” an entertainment that is packing their theatres for long runs. Douglas Fairbanks at his best. A whirlwind of a comedy drama, with enough of plot to make it entertaining and containing all the elements which have made Fairbanks' former successes what they are.

You can book this as a special, promise great things and keep absolute faith on your promises.

Breathless Suspense

NO dramatic play, written, spoken or screened has ever approached the romantic interest of "Secret Service." In it are all the elements of love, suspense, action and surprise that have enabled it for years to hold its place as the most successful play of the American stage.

The production of this Paramount-Artcraft special is in keeping with its value to exhibitors as a money-making story with an enormous appeal. Robert Warwick is supported by a cast including Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Wanda Hawley, Casson Ferguson, Guy Oliver, Irving Cummings, Edythe Chapman, Robert Caine and many others.

A production worth an extended run.

The Door to Romance

SHIRLEY MASON as Nora Nolan unlocks a rich treasure store of entertainment in "The Final Close-up."

The story was one of the most popular tales appearing in the Red Book, and the picture is even better than the story.

Exhibitors who exploit this picture as a story-comedy of the movies will cash in on it. Its moving picture atmosphere has an appeal for thousands.

The adventures of the little Irish girl who won a husband at Winchester-by-the-Sea will tickle the fancy of all audiences.

It is worth playing up big.

In the literature of comedy as in the literature of drama, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation steadily maintains its policy of picking the best for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

"The Final Close-up" is one of the greatest light-comedy yarns that ever appeared in The Red Book Magazine.

How your sides ached over the pickle Nora got in at Winchester-by-the-Sea!

She, bargain-basement ingenue, ruffling it with the country club set—and caught with the goods.

To American Producers

An exceptional opportunity is afforded American motion picture producers for the distribution of their product outside of the United States and Canada, in the organization of which will immediately undertake the distribution of meritorious American features or productions of lesser length which possess novelty or unusual quality, through offices in the principal cities of the world, with headquarters in London.

For such subjects as are available and desirable, we will pay, cash in advance, the highest price consistent with their quality and their foreign value.

In addition, we offer the opportunity of forming an affiliation that will be permanently profitable.

we thank the thinking exhibitors and state rights buyers who have given us the benefit of their advice in selecting the title for a notable photoplay which we will release soon.

The titles suggested, and the number of votes each received, follow:

"THE SOLITARY SIN"	586
"THE GREATEST ENEMY"	197
"THOU SHALT NOT"	102
"IGNORANCE"	99
"THE WILD OATS HARVEST"	45

We would like to hear from those exhibitors who have not yet expressed their choice of one of these titles.

We shall announce shortly the name selected.

The picture will absolutely be one of the box office sensations of the year.

It is a production that everybody will want to see.

It is a production that nobody will ever forget.

It is tremendous in theme and story.

in Leave It To Susan

By Rex Taylor
Directed by Clarence G. Badger

The Two-Gun Girl From Flatbush

They left her in the middle of the Mojave desert with one dog and half a dozen bandits. She tied them up and brought them in and married the handsomest.

Tell that to the loyal legions of Madge Kennedy admirers in your city and what will be the answer?

Full houses.

You can't keep them away from this dainty bit of Eastern femininity who turned out to be a regular "two-gun woman" when the West gave her the Great Test.

FARRAR
in The STRONGER VOW

by Izola Forrester - Directed by Reginald Barker

Geraldine Farrar's fourth Goldwyn picture has the same power and grip as her "Shadows," "The Turn of the Wheel" and "The Hell Cat."

It has the same audience-pull.

It draws the same enthusiastic comments from the press:

N.Y. Eve. Sun: "'The Stronger Vow' is as full of action as 'Tosca' or 'Carmen.'"

N. Y. Eve. Post: "The picture is replete in thrills. It holds one's interest to the end."

Phila. Press: "Never before have the remarkable talents of Geraldine Farrar been given such wide scope, nor her cinema admirers so enthralled and thrilled."

Phila. Inquirer: "An absorbing tale of romance, intrigue and action."

Phila. Record: "Most powerful of Farrar's screen achievements."

Atlanta Constitution: "With not one tame or uninteresting moment in this latest Geraldine Farrar release, the world-renowned Goldwyn star is given opportunities to portray all the emotions that can engulf a beautiful girl in a whirlpool of tragedy, intrigue and love."

Atlanta Journal: "You will see Farrar in the next best thing to opera and in some ways better — her latest Goldwyn super-drama. And such a drama!"

New Orleans Item: "A thrilling drama, the most tremendous of Farrar screen offerings."

Carter De Haven

in their first Capitol Comedy

"In a Pinch"

BROADWAY chickens come home to roost, and they make a lot of explaining for the young husband who is trying to dodge his past.

In their first Capitol Comedy Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven furnish the kind of snappy, speedy, clean-cut fun which has won this famous team of musical comedy stars one of the largest salaries paid any vaudeville act in the past four seasons. Their drawing power has been tested and affirmed by millions of just the sort of Americans that make your biggest audiences.

"In a Pinch" is the first of a series of comedies of domestic life that will appeal directly and powerfully to the vast majority of your patrons — the young married couples who go more regularly to motion pictures than any other class.

Ask your Goldwyn branch when you can show your audiences these pictures of the funny side and the sunny side of life.

Henry Ford has a formula—highest value, lowest price, widest distribution.

He has applied that formula to the screen in the same daring and successful manner that he applied it to the automobile industry.

The Ford Educational Weekly has no rival. For its creator set a mark that only industrial genius could reach.

The success of the Ford Weekly is more than the success of splendid editorial judgment. It is the success of a principle never before applied to the short subjects of the screen—the best possible product at a "lower than possible" price.

RIALTO AND

—N. Y. Globe

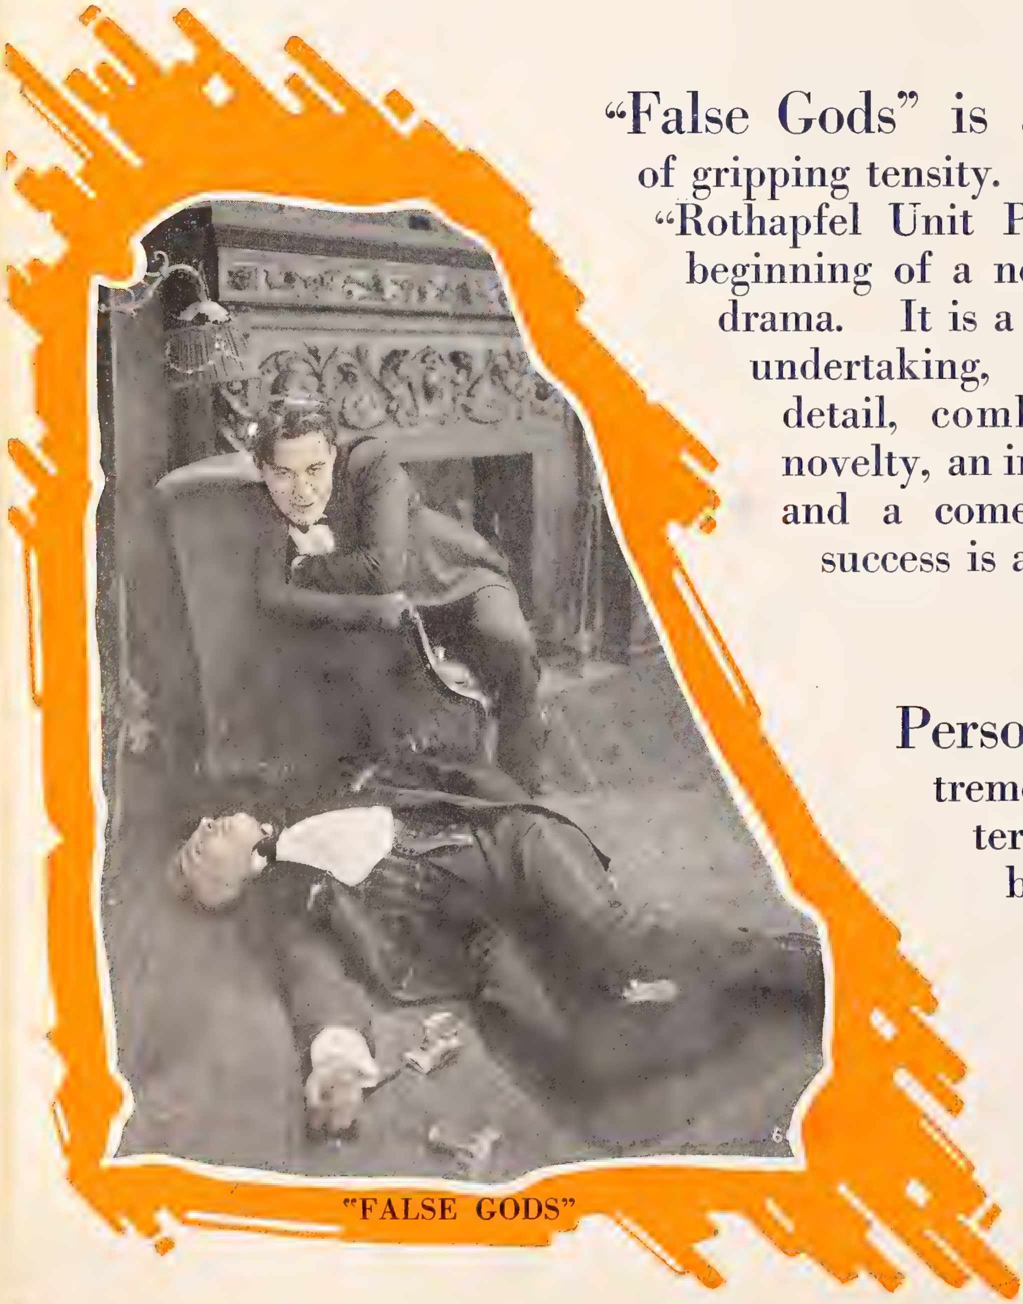
Mr. Rothapfel has done for the movies what Wagner did for opera; he has coordinated the arts into one harmonious whole.

—Sylvester Rawling of the N. Y. Evening World.

A cracking good sex play, outchambering Robert W. Chambers. The photography and titles are excellent, as is the acting of Grace Darling as the wife. Hugh Thompson is fine as her husband. In fact, it is an all-star cast. . . . . If Lloyd Sheldon can write more stories such as "False Gods," and Mr. Rothapfel and Wallie Van can put them on, exhibitors will be happy indeed, and will extend liberal patronage to the Rothapfel Unit Programme.

—N. Y. Clipper.



"FALSE GODS"

"False Gods" is a powerful drama of gripping tensity. . . . As a whole the "Rothapfel Unit Programme" marks the beginning of a new epoch in the silent drama. It is a daring and stupendous undertaking, showing mastery of detail, combining a wonderful novelty, an intensely gripping drama and a comedy of high class. Its success is assured.

—Buffalo Times.

Personally I liked it tremendously and, after interviewing hastily a number of producers and exhibitors the practical viewpoint I heard was: "It has gone over."

—William A. Johnston of the Motion Picture News.

The most wonderfully artistic interpretation of thought upon the screen that has yet been produced.

—Stuart Gould of the Omaha Bee.

"FALSE GODS"

Judging from the instant response of the large audience to the fine points of the bill, it was evident that none of the "Rothapfel shots" missed fire. . . . . For more than any other influence in the film industry Mr. Rothapfel first taught us what motion picture presentation might mean when aided by real music and art and surrounded by the atmosphere of a dignified theatre.

—N. Y. Globe.

The drama carries a generous amount of suspense, particularly in the last reels, which keeps one at high tension. The story is effectively worked out in detail and is surrounded with a veritable wealth of luxury and lavishness.

In the musical numbers accompanying the feature, Mr. Rothapfel has surpassed anything he has ever done in this connection.

—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A new idea, the practicability of which was demonstrated at this morning's showing. Success is assured for it. Mr. Rothapfel is to be congratulated on his achievement.

— Leslie Mason of the Exhibitor's Trade Review.

WILD FLOWERS

Rothapfel and superlative are synonymous. The man. His work. A dynamo which sent currents. Currents which electrocuted indifference; Which electrified life for millions in three institutions. And in the countless imitations. Unit, I understand, implies one and unification. Rothapfel will by his Unit join average persons and the arts. Therein lies greatness. Rothapfel and superlative are synonymous. The Unit is a superlatively Rothapfel success.—S. J. Kaufman of the N. Y. Evening Globe.

The final comedy was one of the highest class performances ever presented in connection with a program. The consensus of opinion was that the comedy was of equal class with the feature. In fact there was nothing on the program that was not of unusual merit.

—N. Y. Times.

An exquisite comedy, with a touch of mingled daintiness and roguishness which was decidedly captivating and will go well with any audience. There was no mistaking the genuineness of the laughter and applause with which this comedy was received by the crowd. . . If the type can be maintained it will rank high in the library of screen humor.—Billboard.

The program calls it a new-idea comedy and it certainly is. We would advise exhibitors in their advance notices to tell no more about this than the fact that it is written by the noted lyricist, George V. Hobart. Here is something that is going to create you a world of word-of-mouth advertising.—Motion Picture News.

The George V. Hobart new-idea comedy, "Wild Flowers," is uncommonly amusing. . . . . . The direction of this number is excellent. It has alertness, variety of business, brisk action and is dexterously acted by Yvonne Shelton, Templar Saxe, A. J. Herbert, Helen Weer, Walter McEwen and Eugene Acker.—Moving Picture World

Mr. Rothapfel, in his first Unit Programme, has demonstrated not only that he has the big idea, but that he possesses the genius for developing it.

—Portland Daily Press.

ROTHAPFEL UNIT PROGRAMME

Wonderful Entertainment.

—T. E. Oliphant of the N. Y. Evening Mail.

For downright cleverness, the pictured epigram, "A Thought of Equity," leads the bill. . . . . It is very short, but tells a whole reelful with unexpected humor.—Moving Picture World.

There is distinctly a theme—that of the pursuit of happiness running through the series of pictures, and they are blended so perfectly that the effect on the average spectator after the program is completed is that of artistic delight.—Motion Picture News.

The conclusion reached is that Mr. Rothapfel has given to the silent drama what the Ziegfield Follies and Passing Shows are to the theatrical world.—Buffalo Times.

"The Last Hour" was a novelty prelude presenting music. This depicts the beauty of thought incorporated in the composition of Massenet, whose "Elegie" was used for this picturization and transferred to the screen with telling effect.

Cream— or Skimmed Milk?

When exhibitors everywhere were demanding the right to book pictures singly on their individual merits producer-distributors clubbed them into taking programs or star series, or both.

Do you realize that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's position is exactly the same as the position of the exhibitor himself?

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation does not produce or own any pictures. We are merely distributors and, what is a great deal more important to you, merely distributors of good pictures.

We are not committed to accept for distribution any below-grade pictures. When we invite you, the exhibitor, to do wide-open booking we are ourselves "wide-open distributors."

We have the power to select exactly what we want; exactly what our best box-offiice and showmanship knowledge tells us will be satisfying and profitable in your theatre.

Augustus Thomas' "As A Man Thinks," J. Parker Read Jr's. "Sahara," Stewart Edward White's Benjamin B. Hampton Production, "The Westerners," and Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" are dramatic proofs of our power and capacity to select only big productions for distribution through our organization.

Don't be clubbed any longer into program or star series booking. Throw out all the dead stuff you still have under such systems just as quickly as you can send in your cancellations by registered letter.

Exhibitors Know This Production's Values

Ten big first run theatres had asked by wire how quickly they could have "Sahara" for pre-release before even the first prints had been shipped to the branches.

Before lithographs and accessories had reached the stock shelves of our thirty offices.

Orders have been placed for thousands of copies of the first Hodkinson two-color insert for use as heralds by exhibitors at prices per thousand even larger than the rental that hundreds of exhibitors pay for a motion picture to be shown in their theatres.

All Roads Lead To Rhodes

Screen's Daintiest Star

"The Lamb and the Lion"

"The story is truly human and appealing and moves with satisfactory rapidity. The appeal is general and should captivate any kind of audience in either the large or small towns. Nothing sensational, but a clean, pleasing entertainment." — Tom Hamlin, Motion Picture News.

"Thrills and comedy that strike public favor."—Exhibitor Comment, Dramatic Mirror.

"The admirers of Billie, and there are many, will like the picture. It is built for the star and fits. That is what the public will be most interested in knowing.—Exhibitors Herald.

AS HOOP-LA

"Hoop-La"

"By all the rules of the game, "Hoop-La" should confirm the rights of Billie Rhodes as a star. She is charming in this picture, and her acting is so sincere and convincing that she will undoubtedly make a strong impression on your patrons."—Exhibitors Herald.

"If The Girl Of My Dreams" has brought the crowds into your theatre, "Hoop La" should bring them in even larger numbers"—P. S. Harrison, Motion Picture News.

AS BOOTS

"The Girl of My Dreams"

"It is an entertaining production, founded on a play by Wilbur Nesbit, and tells a pretty little story." —C. S. Sewel, Moving Picture World.

"Presenting Billie Rhodes for the first time as a star of a dramatic feature, The Girl of My Dreams registers as a very interesting, well acted and well staged production."—Exhibitors Herald.

"Great; patrons pleased Billie Rhodes scored big. An extraordinary comedy. Get it quick before the other fellow." "A real success. Excellent picture, big business for seven days."—Exhibitors Comment Motion Picture News.

AS THE WEED

"The Love Call"

"Billie Rhodes is the star and nothing is demanded of her that she is not equal to."—Variety

"The picture has been produced with many satisfying touches and should rank well among the lighter offerings."—Helen Rockwell, Exhibitors Trade Review.

"Serves as the best vehicle Billie Rhodes has had since she entered the ring of feature stardom. Western drama with plenty of action."—Margaret MacDonald, Moving Picture World.

A Powerful Drama About Women

By man-made laws of tradition evolved centuries of sex-bound women emeshed in a slavery of sex. The bond by which man—in his natural desire for a mate—has held her, cheating himself of the SUPER-WOMAN.

The Other Man's Wife

is one of the most pretentious productions of the present theatrical season.

By means of a gripping drama with intensely interesting situations and a powerful ending, a big subject is presented in an extremely sensational manner.

If you cater to high-class audiences, do not fail to arrange play-dates for this exceptional feature immediately.

A HOUSE DIVIDED

THIS sensational production—the supreme effort of the great director of big special pictures, J. Stuart Blackton—is now being "booked-up" rapidly by leading Exhibitors in every section of the country. The William Fox theatres and the U.B.O. Circuit will play it immediately.

It is such a powerful story—produced on such a lavish scale—and is so cleverly and artistically photographed—that screen examination results in a booking each time it is submitted to the manager of a high-class house.

You cannot afford to wait before considering this sensational subject for early presentation in your theatre.

EARLE WILLIAMS in "A ROGUE'S ROMANCE"

By H. H. Van Loan Directed by James Young

A VITAGRAPH FEATURE

IKE a diamond of many flashing facets is this unusual story It is action—it is romance—it is drama—is comedy. It is lights—it is shadows. It is different.

"A Rogue's Romance" tells of a man who uld be a thief and "be a gentleman about it." And yet was Monsieur Picard a thief? Did not, after all, do more good—much more od—than he did harm? If a priceless neck-ce disappeared from a gorgeous ballroom, d it not re-appear in the form of bread for meless little children?

The war was over before the first scene of Rogue's Romance," when we first see onsieur Picard. He had won the Croix de uerre on France's fields of honor. Yet, ck in his tailored society clothes, he returns his old game, looting the jewels of women, d their hearts as well.

Respected in the town of Montoir, Mon-eur Picard lives with three little war orphans hom he has adopted. We see him romping ith his kiddies, enjoying their pillow-fights, lministering a laughing warning now and ien. He is happy in his guardianship—pro-cting his little ones from the world which, Monsieur Picard, he heartlessly loots. nd then the sunshine recedes and the shadow death enters the little home. A doctor is eeded—at once.

Slipping along the highway at express train eed, Picard's car breaks down near the villa Anton Deprenay, wealthy jeweler. He rces Mlle. Helen, Deprenay's daughter, to ive him the keys to the garage. He presents er with his war cross, his most treasured possession, as security for the car. And as he speeds onward through the night he bears with him the love of a woman.

The police, led by Duval, Prefect of Montoir, are hot on Picard's trail, and break into his apartments that night, but he escapes in Helen's car, which the Prefect recognizes. Winning his fight for the child's life, Picard returns the car the following day, but Helen refuses to see him. He must prove himself worthy of society before she can offer him the love that he has already won.

The scene now shifts to St. Nazaire, where Helen lives, and where Picard, under the name of Dubois, is the center of the gay social whirl. A necklace worth a fortune mysteriously disappears at a reception. The host gathers the guests in the library, turns out the lights, and gives the thief opportunity to throw the gems on the table and escape identification. Helen, to shield Picard, whom she believes guilty, throws her own necklace, a replica of the stolen one, on the table. But the flaring headlights of a motor car cut through the window and reveal her ruse. All is consternation, but Picard saves the situation by his sharpened wits. Later, he proves his innocence of the theft to the woman he has come to love.

Subsequent episodes—daring, thrill-laden—place the police so hotly on Picard's trail that he decides to escape danger by going into the very heart of it. He assumes the rôle of Magnier, a famous detective, and spoils the plan of a smooth-tongued promoter to victimize the town councilmen and many innocent buyers of stock. He then writes a letter to the Prefect assuring him that the much-sought "Monsieur Picard" has ceased to exist.

And, verily, he has, for convinced of his reformation, Helen marries him and with her he strolls out into the sunlit highway of honesty and true love.

Here is compelling drama, ending in a crashing climax. And skilfully threaded through the story are gay scenes of ballroom and tavern, Apache dances and countless flashes of gay night-life. "A Rogue's Romance" is easily the most unusual play in which Earle Williams has ever appeared. It will be talked about.

BOOK IT TO-DAY.

EARLE WILLIAMS AS AN ARCH SOCIETY CROOK

EARLE WILLIAMS has never so completely triumphed in a characterization as in that of "Monsieur Picard" in "A Rogue's Romance." Here is a polished gem of story, given a rich and unusual setting.

In exploiting this picture, make it clear that Earle Williams delineates the suave, polished "Arsene Lupin" type of character—although his work in this newest feature can be compared to nothing that he has previously done.

first national's booking policy

AS an organization owned and controlled by the biggest exhibitors in the world, First National Exhibitors' Circuit's policies and systems of distribution were determined more than two years ago by its members to accomplish:

OPEN BOOKING: Thereby relieving them of the burden of rental contracts for inferior productions forced upon them as the premium for series contracts for star productions they do want.

ELIMINATION OF INFERIORITY: by uniting to give to capable stars and producers sufficient latitude, in finances and market independence, to make bigger and better pictures without having their booking opportunities restricted by the system which compelled the strong to carry the weak.

INDEPENDENCE FOR STARS, PRODUCERS AND EXHIBITORS: by inaugurating a system of distribution which places every star and producer strictly on his or her own merits in the exchanges and at the box office.

On occasions when it is deemed advisable first to demonstrate to exhibitors the box office value of a star, the "single picture" booking policy is advocated for the first release only, so the exhibitor may decide for himself the advisability of booking the remainder of the series in a single contract.

First National's star series attractions, past, present and future, never have been, and never will be, a burden on exhibitors. The releases of these artists are sought by exhibitors in "star series" contracts. Exhibitors refuse to book one star production, advertise it heavily, play to big business, and then leave open the way to a competitor to annex the next of that star's releases.

This is First National's only deviation from a practice of "open booking" in the fullest meaning of the phrase: The big non-star, non-series specials, such as "My Four Years in Germany," "Tarzan of the Apes," "Auction of Souls," and others, are booked on the single picture basis, and independent of any other attractions.

That distinction always will exist in First National. It is the line of equity between safety and danger to exhibitors.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY

The NEW YORK WORLD says:
"The Son of a Gun" is one of Anderson's best bits of work. It takes one out of the crowded streets into the wide spaces and face to face with odd human crises seldom met with in Broadway.

The SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER says:
"Red Blood and Yellow" one of the latest of Gilbert Anderson's quick trigger shows, seems to be just as popular with the proletariat as have been all other "Broncho Billy" offerings. "Red and Yellow" has a regular story and a very good one at that.

Only the Best is Good Enough!

¶ None but the best! If this is your business motto, then you will be interested in the Spoor-Thompson automatic method of processing film. Motion picture producers of great insight and foresight are rapidly adopting this far advanced and highly developed system. Not only does it give you highly artistic effects in your positive prints, but it is a tremendous saving. You are doing your pictures and your business an injustice unless you get the best that is offered. Our sales manager, Mr. Charles F. Stark, will give you details.

Odds and Ends of News

RUMORS current for many weeks and beginning to take definite shape hint at the formation of another cooperative exhibitor group embodying many of the principles underlying the two widely differing organizations now in existence—First Natonal and the United Theatres.

The reports have taken various forms; they are, perhaps, of no more value than most rumors that come and go in Filmland. But even rumors have this one value—they indicate the trend of thought of many film men, the direction toward which a few are working.

And it is undoubtedly true that there are forces seeking to work out policies based on an active interest on the part of a new string of theatres.

The success of First National and United Theatres is naturally the primary cause of this tendency. Another incentive is the development of the open market idea to such radical proportions that it leaves some of the old-line film men grasping around for some new guarantees to replace the discarded security of the program method.

This is a further realization that in the big theatre men of today, with their large realty holdings and palatial auditoriums there is a real power and solid strength.

Developments of the summer months will bear the closest watching. Many weary days and nights are being spent in New York in the development of Fall policies.

And many of our erstwhile cocksure leaders are taking long, long looks before they leap.

London or New York?

A FILM man to whom we mentioned John T. Tippett's announcement in this week's trade publications found the news of more than ordinary interest. He summed up recent developments in this manner:

"Famous Players-Lasky forms a British producing company; financial interests all through Europe are forming combinations to break down the American supremacy of the motion picture industry; Fox established a chain of twelve exchanges throughout Europe; and now John D. Tippett, an American film man who has been in Europe for the past six years, makes a statement that London will shortly be the inevitable centre of the film world.

"Wouldn't it be interesting to get opinions on this subject? Is London going to capture the financial power of the film business? What do other American film men think of the subject?"

There are possibilities here for discussion. Perhaps, also, if we care to go still further in search of trouble, there is room for talk in the hint that the propaganda possibilities of the screen would not be overlooked by any foreign capital reaching a commanding position.

But we are not in a mood for borrowing trouble. Some two years ago when we declared New York to be the film capital of the world we were chided by London for playing into the hands of the Hun.

So now that London is in a position to make its own fight with the weapons of real business we are perfectly willing to sit on the sidelines.

Which will it be—London or New York?

St. Louis in June

A SINCERE effort is being made to bring about a real exhibitor convention this year. Peter Schaefer, Frank Rembusch, and their co-workers are striving to bring about a business-like session that will lay the foundations of a solid national organization.

They are working under a handicap built by previous exhibitor affairs—the indifference formed by listening to much blowing of trumpets followed by an inglorious fizzle.

But the moment seems ripe for a do or die effort. The encouragement of every branch of the industry is necessary. Exhibitor organization was never so necessary, nor has its fate ever been in the hands of a more earnest group of workers.

St. Louis is the place; June 11th the date.

Short Subjects Coming Back

WE have commented before on the fact that practically all of the numerous exhibitors coming to New York within the last six weeks seem to be seeking particularly the latest ideas on theatre building and equipment.

That is the paramount thought; it is the reflex of the theatre building boom that is on in full force.

Next in importance to most of the exhibitors with whom we have talked is a search for good short subjects. The forgotten one-reel comedy, the despised scenic, the tolerated magazine—all are coming into their own.

"Only give us these subjects with touches of class," they say. "The war brought us a new grade of patronage in search of the news weeklies and big topical specials. We are building handsome structures to keep that class of patronage. And short subjects that are 'different,' that have the touch of intelligence, will help us to satisfy this new clientele."

Dealing in Personalities

Paramount convened last week in the usual fashion. Opened the convention, closed the convention, and then there was silence. But if the things we hear are correct there is still considerable burning of the midnight oil over on Fifth Avenue. The district managers are still in town and with Walter E. Greene and Al Lichtman plugging away we may expect some big news in a week or so. These distribution experts have a problem on their hands—but we'll say it's in good hands.

Just after we got this page safely to bed last week and had tucked the sheet in carefully all around the news began to break. We just succeeded in slipping in the rumor that Sid Chaplin had signed with Famous-Lasky at $200,000 a negative.

The week also brought official confirmation from Fifth avenue, and yesterday brought a wire from Los Angeles that merely changes our figures.

The story out there is that Sid has contracted to deliver four-feature negatives a year for a million dollars—with a paltry bonus of one hundred and fifty thousand.

Which, we are informed, means that Sid will get more real money than Charlie collects in a twelve-month period. Our whispering friend puts it this way: "Charlie won't get as much per negative because his productions are two reelers. And he doesn't make enough two reelers in a year to equal Sid's figure. So there you are."

True enough—there we are. But will the topic be dismissed as easily in the Chaplin family councils?

J. D. Williams got "all het up" this week at the many definitions being given the words "Open Market" and dropped a load of TNT in the middle of the landscape. The statement which appears on page 3572 of this week's News is a scorcher for this stage of the discussion on marketing methods and should start the argument off again in full force. Every time J. D. makes a statement we advise you not to miss it. This time we repeat the advice with double emphasis.

Speaking, as we were, of the news that broke just after we went to press, there is the story that "interests friendly to Famous Players-Lasky have secured control of the Rialto and Rivoli." This still lacks official confirmation; but neither has it been denied. And the "authoritative sources" quoted give such details as the fact that Hugo Reisenfeld will continue in charge, and that the programs will not be confined to Paramount subjects.

The above was Friday's story. Then on Saturday we were told that the same "friendly interests" were stretching a hand out toward Minneapolis. We don't know why Dame Rumor picked on Minneapolis—this is a great big country.

Then the wildest rumor of a wild, wild week came from Los Angeles on Wednesday. Some one must be stepping on that magic rug at the Alexandria. The story is that a new theatre circuit is being formed of which Adolph Zukor and Arthur Kane will be the executive heads, with Lee F. Ochs rounding up the members.

Lee denies it absolutely; Arthur Kane is on a fishing trip in Maine; Adolph Zukor has business to attend to.

Join in with us now and say "Many happy returns of the day" to the three "Reg'lar Fellers" on the opposite page. At the present high cost of living we didn't have the price of a real cake to send to Universal on its seventh birthday, so we got Harry Palmer to draw a picture of one to hand to Messrs. Laemmle, Powers and Cochrane. This industry forgets mighty quickly, but we don't think it should forget the tough battles put up by this trio for the independent manufacturer in the early days. And exhibitors should remember them for many battles fought in the years between.

George Cook, a lithographer with a heart as big as a twenty-four sheet, passed away on Tuesday. We can't say any more.

Carl H. Pierce is enroute to New York to take up a local option fight at Huntington, L. I., after having attended the exhibitors' banquet in Rochester.

Sam Rorke is in New York representing the Katherine McDonald productions.

The print on "The Flame," touted as a special, is on the way East convoyed by Bre'er Carleton. Arrives on Friday.

You haven't forgotten to make a mark in your note-book for that dinner on June 18 to Sydney Cohen, Sam Berman and Charles O'Reilly, have you? If the Waldorf-Astoria on that night doesn't hold the greatest motion picture assemblage ever collected we'll miss our guess. One thousand is the conservative figure set on the attendance. And if you are not one of the thousand you'll be kicking yourself for a month after the event. Take our tip now! Mark the date indelibly—you can't afford to forget.

Stand up for a toast! To Miss Parsons, daughter of P. A. Parsons, who arrived in this world on Thursday. Yessir, both mother and daughter are doing well.

We'll bet the above event brought about some doings at the A. M. P. A. luncheon on Thursday. Daddy, in addition to being advertising manager of Pathe, is president of the aforementioned A. M. P. A.

James E. McBride, of Fox, has been confined to his home for several weeks. Tough luck, Mac, but we're all rooting for you to be back on the job soon.

Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the California and Portola theatres, San Francisco, was a visitor to Motion Picture News office during the week.

Mr. Roth reports wonderful progress in exhibitor conditions in the West in the past year.

Bill Rudolph journeyed out of town to Washington, Baltimore and Wilmington during the week. Then we learned that Bill had bought that territory on "The Unpardonable Sin." Go to it, Bill.

"Everybody's Business!" The words are splashed all over Motion Picture News this week. It sure is some title!

If the picture measures up to the title we suppose, after all the "Virtuous" combinations we had, that we will then get "Nobody's Business, "Your Business," "Somebody's Business." Oh, rats.

W. H. Gueringer, assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, left for the Sazarac town Wednesday after several weeks in New York.

Lieutenant Jim Anderson blew into town Saturday. Shook hands with the boys, and then traveled on to Detroit. After all these years Lieut. Jim is once more working for the Warners.

While Papa William A. was busy in London, Alice Brady stole a march on him Tuesday evening and married James L. Crane, the actor. The Bridegroom's father, Dr. Frank Crane, tied the knot.

Throws Hot Shot Into Open Market Discussion with Statement That Series Policy Is Exhibitors Only Protection—Harry Raver Writes Next Week

J. D. WILLIAMS this week threw a charge of TNT into recent discussion of marketing methods with an open statement declaring that "the single picture policy means chaos," and that star series booking was the exhibitors only protection against an intolerable condition.

The Williams statement will undoubtedly create a storm of comment. It follows closely on the heels of the announcement by other distributors of an individual picture policy and is certain to bring a sharp reply. Exhibitors also are likely to join in the discussion now at such a warm state.

Harry Raver was another film producer to enter the discussion this week. As we hinted last week there are many who will question Jesse Goldburg's narration of history in that issue, and Harry Raver takes occasion to do so this week.

RAVER IS NEXT

HARRY RAVER'S opinion of the opening of the open market will be published in next week's issue of Motion Picture News.

He has something interesting to say. Watch for it.

"Frying Pan to Fire"

"The theatre man is being jumped from the frying pan to the fire," declares J. D. Williams in his statement, which follows:

Reform forces seeking to relieve exhibitors of the restraints and injustices of the unequitable program contract system are literally jumping the theatre owners from the frying pan into the fire in adopting the "single picture" booking policy as the alternative.

This latter method wipes out, at a single stroke, the most vital principle of business practice in the industry—exhibitor protection. It says to him, in substance:

"Here is a big star attraction. Book it. The rental is high, but the production is exceptional. It gives you a great and popular star, a wonderful story, matchless direction—guaranteeing positive results at the box office. Advertise it heavily. Put behind it every atom of showmanship you possess. You don't have to take any other subject to get it. No strings, of any character, are attached. It is a single picture. You can book the next production this star releases in exactly the same way."

There is no theory in predicting the developments, so far as the exhibitor is concerned. He wants that particular star. He wants several others, because he knows they are certain in popularity and appeal. He books the single picture. He exploits it. The results are phenomenal. He enhances the local popularity of that star. He gives that star the benefit of a big advertising campaign. He associates that star with his theatre. So far, excellent. But—

There are very few exhibitors without competitors. The exhibitor who plays the single picture goes back to his exchange to book the next one as an individual attraction. What assurance has he that his competitor, knowing that the door is wide open to him to capitalize the other fellow's work, may not arrive ahead of him, offer more money for the second one, get it, and profit immeasurably from the money and effort the losing exhibitor invested to exploit the first production?

There is no assurance against this with the "single picture" policy. It makes cutthroats of the exhibitors. They are placed always on the defensive, without one item of consideration in their favor. Advertising is cumulative in value. The publicity promotion an exhibitor gives to a star in one production helps popularize the next release in which that star appears, providing, of course, that the first attraction has merit. Why should the exhibitors be deprived of the right and privilege of profiting from the money they spend to advertise a star? There is nothing that is fair or just in any measure in a system that destroys the very foundations of an exhibitor's success. There is no equity in a method that cannot assure exhibitors that they will be protected so long as they are satisfied to pay the market price for any star's productions.

The real trouble in the past was not the star series contracts. Exhibitors wanted contracts for series productions in which appeared stars popular with their patrons. They needed no master intelligence to point out the necessity for thus protecting themselves. The great difficulty with the program system was the latitude it gave producers and distributors to use the star productions as clubs to compel exhibitors to book weak and inferior releases with unpopular stars. The open market promised to destroy this club. Exhibitors welcomed open booking as the means of avoiding the arbitrary dictates of the program distributors.

The Norma Talmadge productions are not a burden to exhibitors. Exhibitors who have patrons with whom Miss Talmadge is popular welcome a series contract for her releases. It is their protection. There never has been a time exhibitors did not consider the productions of Mary Pickford an asset for their theatres. They want the safe haven of a series contract for her pictures. The majority of them have, ever since she became a popular star. But they did not want the less than ordinary subjects they were compelled to take in order to obtain Miss Pickford's releases on a program.

The opinion of exhibitors is virtually the same about the Chaplin comedies, the productions of Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith, W. S. Hart, Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Nazimova, Constance Talmadge, or any other of the stars who are high in popularity with the public.

Exhibitors tolerated the program system, submitting to the demands that they take the bad with the good, because they knew that the stars who were money getters at the box office were indispensable to their existence as theatre owners and operators. They paid the big premiums in unprofitable pictures demanded by the distributors so that they could get star series contracts, with its attendant protection.

Now, the "single picture" policy blandly refuses to give them the protection for which they have been compelled to pay so highly in the past, when these stars were on programs. Where is there anything constructive, progressive, or beneficial to the industry in this, It is making tumult out of chaos.

Practically every star series contract in existence gives the exhibitors a medium of protection against the possible decline of quality in the work of any star whose releases are so booked by the one-picture cancellation clause. If exhibitors sign a contract for a series of three or six star productions, confident that they are real box office attractions, and find that they are not up to the previous standard, they are legally privileged to cancel by respecting the one-picture clause.

What is it that makes a successful vaudeville theatre? The protection provided by its franchise in a circuit. In that field of entertainment a star signs a contract for one season or more. Each house on the circuit is thus assured that it will not be compelled to fight a losing contest with opposition for second appearance of that particular star, in a new act, after he or she has been heavily advertised and "put over" to a successful season of three days or a week on the first appearance.

In the motion picture business the exhibitor cannot have this protection with stars whom he has popularized in his theatre.

There is not a large distributing concern in the business today that would consent, for an instant, to the same conditions in its relations with stars and producers that are imposed upon exhibitors in marketing star productions to them on the "single picture" basis. Would Paramount, United Artists, Metro, Select, or First National agree to a "single picture" contract with any of their respective stars? No!

Would Paramount contract for but one DeMille production at a time? Would its executives consent to any such arrangement, which would place the next DeMille release within the competitive grasp of other distributors? No!

Would Metro consider it good business to contract with Nazimova for but one picture at a time? Would they thus leave the way open for another distributor to buy her next production, and get the cumulative advantage of the great advertising and promotion campaign Metro had given to the previous Nazimova feature? No!

Would the promoters of the United Artists' Corporation have gone beyond the first stages of organization if they had been unable to conclude contracts with Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith which insured to their exchanges a series of productions by each of these artists? Would they be willing to contract for only one "single picture" at a time, knowing that every competing distributor had equal opportunity

"Australia is Due for a Record Boom"

Verdict Is That of Harry Musgrove, Managing Director of Australasian Films, Ltd.—That Organization Invading Far East

"WITH war restrictions such as the United States has not known about to be removed, Australia's motion picture men are looking forward to an opportunity for real progress," declares Harry Musgrove, managing director of Australasian Films, Ltd., and now in New York on business. "You must remember," he continues, "that Australia has been through four years of the war and that naturally the industry in that territory has been largely at a standstill. To-day, however, a building boom is about to start, and with it will come progress in every factor of picture presentation."

In the course of an interview on conditions in Australia, Mr. Musgrove also gave out the news that Australasian Films had well under way plans for expansion of its interests to all of the Far East, an announcement of unusual importance to American producers.

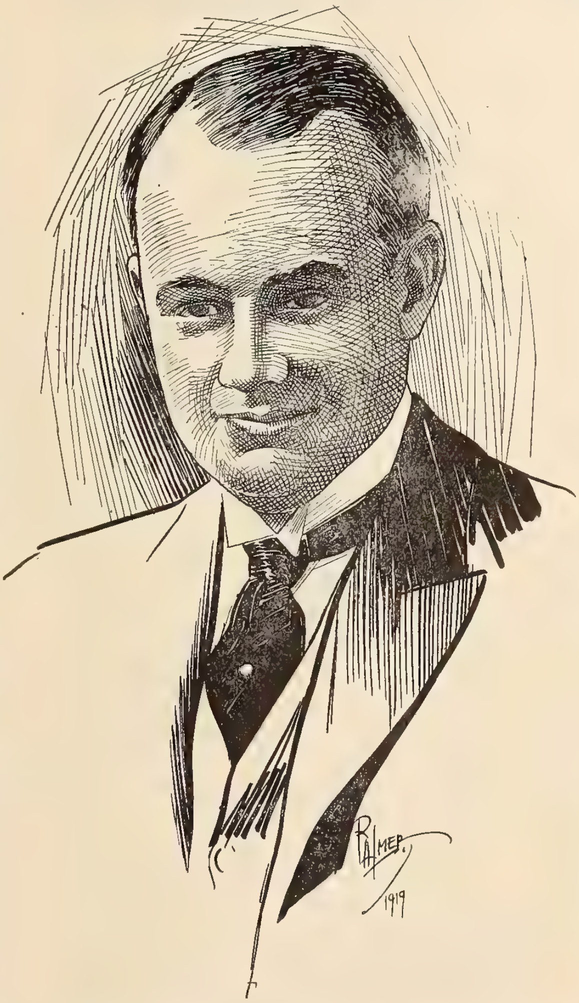
Four Years of This

"You have had building restrictions in this country," Mr. Musgrove continued, "and naturally when we speak of restrictions in Australia you think of regulations similar to yours. But there is no companion. Why, we couldn't spend a hundred dollars on one of your houses without going through a maze of red tape. The expenditure of even a few hundred dollars for a needed improvement meant a trip to Melbourne—which would mean a trip to Washington to you—and the hardest work to get the permit.

"Australia's picture theatres were well advanced five or six years ago in comparison with this country. And while we have naturally reflected such improvement in pictures as has come with the past few years, you can readily see that with such restrictions as we have had there has been little opportunity for theatre advancement.

"But six months after the cessation of hostilities all restrictions will be removed. And Australian picture men are more than optimistic over the prospects.

"I know that our own organization is setting no limit on expense or trouble to 'carry on' with the industry in the bright days that are coming. We are planning for three new houses of a class with the best in this country, one each in the cities of Sydney, Melbourne, and Adelaide. In fact, one of the principal purposes of my trip at this time has been to see the beautiful theatres that have just been completed in this country and to talk with your exhibitors on their plans. It is very possible that I will take back with me one of your most prominent architects and experts on picture theatre construction.



"Through various subsidiary organization controls thirty houses in that territory.

"But the territory is not as rich as many American producers would seem to consider it," declared Mr. Musgrove. "You must remember that Australia's five millions of population are centered along the coast line in a comparatively small number of towns. I estimate that there are seven hundred theaters in the territory, but of these at least seventy-five per cent. are showing only one, two or three nights a week. About seven and one-half per cent. o fthe seven hundred theatres are first run houses.

"Australasian Films is at present handling in this territory the production of First National, Pathe, Jewel, Vitagraph, Triangle, and we are in the market for all the big independent features that we can buy."

Mr. Musgrove's announcement of an invasion of the Far East by Australasian Films is of especial interest since it will mean that American producers have an opportunity to dispose of the Far East and Australia with the one turn-over. "We are not buying rights unless we can get both the Far East and Australia. We have completed connections of the best sort with the Dutch East Indies, India, Manila, Japan and Shangai. We have our own branch at Shangai. Negotiations are also under way for connections with Java."

Mr. Musgrove's organization has a completely equipped studio in Australia, with the latest Bell and Howell equipment. Occasionally Australian productions are made here, while the studio is open to other producers who may care to use it.

E. R. Gordau, who will be active in the Far Eastern work of the Australasian, is also in this country at the present time. Millard Johnson, Australasian's permanent representative here, is enjoying a vacation in Australia. Mr. Musgrove and Wynne Jones have been carrying on the activities of the office.

Many Exploitation Aids

A vast array of valuable exploitation aid have just been fully completed for the screen production, "Colonel Bridau " according to announcement by the Entente Film Corporation of 247 North Eleventh street, Philadelphia, owners of the United States rights which they are now disposing of to territorial right buyers.

Among the aids furnished for exploitation as described are two elaborate art lobby display, hand-colored photos, black and white photos, three styles of striking posters, handsome illustrated booklet, special slides and other novelties.

No expense has been spared, according to the Entente Film officials, to provide powerful exploitation aids for "Colonel Bridau."

Alice Brady Marries

Alice Brady, stage and screen star, was married on May 20 to James L. Crane, an actor.

Miss Brady and Mr. Crane were married by the Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, father of the bridegroom, at the Crane residence. The bridegroom's mother and sister were Miss Brady's attendants.

William A. Brady, who is in London with Mrs. Brady (Grace George), was notified by cable of his daughter's wedding immediately after the ceremony.

Joyce Begins New One

After completing Charles Klein's famous success, "The Third Degree," Alice Joyce is having a change from Broadway dramas, and has begun work on "The Spark Divine," a story by Alicia Ramsey. Miss Joyce will be directed by Tom Terriss, who recently earned considerable praise for his handling of "The Lion and the Mouse."

Famous Players-Lasky for Europe

New $3,000,000 Corporation Formed in London by Company Which Will Produce Super-Pictures on Famous European Backgrounds

FORMATION in London of a great $3,000,000 corporation which will produce Paramount-Artcraft motion pictures against famous European backgrounds and build studio plants in the capital of the Old World is announced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, number 405 Fifth avenue. The name of the new firm is the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

Construction of extensive studios and production plants on a scale equalling those of the Hollywood and Los Angeles districts in America will be started immediately by the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., it is said. London is to be central headquarters for production, since most striking Old World color is available in Wales, Southern England and the Scottish lakes regions.

Special pictures starring American and continental artists made in Europe will open up a new epoch in the motion picture art according to the corporations announcement, made yesterday by Emil E. Shauer, who has just returned to New York after four months abroad. He said:

"The possibilities opened up by peace for international competition and cooperation by American industry, and in particular the motion picture industry, are boundless.

"British financiers who have joined this American enterprise include Major David Davies M. P., well known coal and landowner; Major Norman Holden, Alexander Nisbet, W. J. Burdon Evans, Albert Hurst, the woolen manufacturer, A. W. Kerley, Thomas Wrigley, banker; J. H. Kippax, who controls Manchester cotton manufacturies, J. G. Thompson and George, Isaac, and Abraham Collins. J. C. Graham, identified for some time with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be managing director of the British organization.

"Agents of the corporation headed by Albert A. Kaufman formerly Eastern Production Manager will leave immediately for Europe. Actors and actresses, famous throughout the United States, will leave soon after."

Chicago to Have Chinese Picture Theatre

Louis Sing, one of Chicago's Chinese merchants has launched a novel project in the building of a one hundred thousand dollar theatre it is said to be located on property adjacent to Chicago's Chinatown with a seating capacity of about twelve hundred and which will cater principally it is stated to the natives of the flowery kingdom, furnishing them with a home grown variety of entertainment with all vampire and sex problem films eliminated which, according to the sponsor of the enterprise "makes the Chinaman sick." According to Mr. Sing the orientals are in need of an amusement resort in Chicago, and he means they shall have one all their own. Sing gives his little daughter, Silvery Waves, the chedit of being the originator.

That Settles It!

Despite the fact that the close of the open-market discussion was announced in the last issue of Motion Picture News, Harry Sherman declined to "let it go at that," with the result that the following telegram reaches our desk as we go to press. It speaks for itself: "You asked who opened the open market—Harry Sherman did." (signed) Harry Sherman.

Levey's Anniversary

In observance of the second anniversary of his inauguration and assumption of the management of Universal's Education and Industrial departments, Harry Levey was host Saturday afternoon, May 24, at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor to members of his department and Universal officials.

Says Chicago Will Have Largest Theatre

News comes from Chicago that Balaban and Katz of Riveria, will give that city the distinction of having the largest theatre in the country. Plans are being completed for the erection of a six story building with a frontage of 225 feet and a depth of 125 feet, in Cottage Grove Avenue near Sixty-third street for theatre purposes only.

The theatre it is said will have a seating capacity of over five thousand, surpassing anything ever erected for pictures, and will cost it is stated about one million dollars. It will be built along the French architectural lines with play rooms, rest rooms and lobby, will be five stories high, it is said, and patterned after the chapel of Versailles, with full stage for scenic presentation of pictures, and will have a fifty piece orchestra and big chorus.

Rapp and Rapp who are the contractors will start work in six weeks it is said and the theatre will open next April.

Famous Players Hosts to Visiting Officials

In honor of the district managers and special representatives in session in New York, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was host to the visitors and members of the home office organization, to the number of nearly one hundred, on Thursday evening, May 15, at Castle Cave. All of the company's Eastern executives were present, it is stated and the spirit of mutual loyalty and goodfellowship which permeated the gathering as well as the feeling of pride in the past and enthusiasm for the future, which was at all times evident, it is said, made the assemblage one of the most noteworthy in the annals of the motion picture industry.

Bacon Gives Dinner

Gerald Bacon, whose affiliation with Frank Hall and the Independent Sales Corporation as producer was recently announced, gave a dinner at his home in New York to members of the trade and daily press on Saturday, May 17. The occasion was in the way of a celebration of Mr. Bacon's initial step in producing his first picture for the Hall interests.

Mr. Bacon was assisted in entertaining his guests by Mrs. Gerald Bacon. Among those present were: Kelcey Allen, S. Jay Kaufman, Louella Parsons, Alison Smith, Harold F. Rendall, Louis Reid, Laurence Reid, Ben Grimm, Walter K. Hill, C. S. Sewell, Al Cormier and Peter Milne.

Ben Ross in Metropolis

After owning state right exchanges in the Minneapolis and Middle West territories, Ben Ross affiliated himself with the production of "The Black Stork" in Chicago.

Then a plunge in films in the Indiana territory. Mr. Ross then went to Texas and interested himself in several oil ventures. He is now visiting New York with the determination to return to the motion picture business.

To Show "Virtuous Men" to Prison Inmates

Because of its impressive title and the particularly virile American story which it tells, "Virtuous Men" has been selected by the Entertainment Committee of Sing Sing and Auburn Prisons for special showings to the inmates. The S-L production, which stars E. K. Lincoln, contains all of the elements required for showings of this nature by the committees who chose the films for the two prisons. Its absence of objectionable features it is said together with the story of regeneration of a young "down-and-outer" which "Virtuous Men" infolds, is in exact keeping with the ideas promulgated by the various prison authorities in the welfare work which they carry on through means of speeches, pamphlets and screen entertainment.

As a special feature of these showings it has been arranged for E. K. Lincoln, star of the production, to appear with the film at the different institutions, at which time he will make a short speech.

Percy Marmont Returns to the Screen

Percy Marmont has returned to the screen, and is now at work as leading man to Alice Joyce, the Vitagraph star, in her forthcoming production, "Vengeance."

Marmont's screen career has already demonstrated his versatility and talent. He has appeared as leading man to Elsie Ferguson in "Rose of the World" and "The Lie"; then came "Three Men and a Girl," in which Marguerite Clark was starred. An engagement as leading man in "The Turn of the Wheel." Immediately after came "In the Hollow of Her Hand," in which Alice Brady was starred, and "The Indestructible Wife," also supporting the same star.

Doris Kenyon Poems

A number of the poems of Doris Kenyon, De Luxe Pictures star, whose latest production, "Twilight," has just been released, have reached book form.

Miss Kenyon's father, Dr. James B. Kenyon, has just published a volume of his most meritorious poems under the title, "The Harvest Home." In the back of the volume are more than a dozen of Doris Kenyon's later poems which have recently appeared in leading magazines and newspapers.

Miss Kenyon expects to issue soon a volume devoted exclusively to her own poems.

Middleton Praises Snell

George Middleton, who produced all of Beatriz Michelena's past successes, considers "Just Squaw," which Robertson-Cole will release through Exhibitors' Mutual, the greatest story she has yet appeared in. As among her past successes are numbered "Salomy Jane," by Bret Harte; "The Unwritten Law," by Edwin Milton Royal; "The Woman Who Dared," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, the statement of Mr. Middleton is a high compliment to Earle Snell, the author of "Just Squaw."

Lou Tellegen and his wife, Geraldine Farrar, have gone to the West Coast to appear in pictures for Goldwyn

Sturgeon with Universal

Rollin Sturgeon, the well-known director, will direct exclusively for Universal within the ensuing year according to an announcement made by that company. Mr. Sturgeon is said to be one of the most capable directors in the film industry and his wide experience is said to have given him an insight into the many angles of successful producing.

Sturgeon it is stated made three of Universal's bigger pictures.

Green to Star in Series

Miss Dorothy Green, who appeared with Montagu Love in "The Rough Neck" recently on the World program, has been engaged by World Pictures to star in a series of productions which will be made at the World Peerless studio at West Fort Lee, N. J. Miss Green, who has been starred as a "vamp" in a number of productions made by other concerns, will essay an entirely new line of screen impersonations in her forthcoming World pictures.

Miss Percy With Haworth

Eileen Percy, one of the screen's most talented personages, has been engaged by the Haworth Pictures Corporation to appear opposite Sessue Hayakawa in "The Gray Horizon," which Roberson-Cole will release through Exhibitors' Mutual. Miss Percy has played with Douglas Fairbanks in "Wild and Wooly," "Down to Earth," "The Man from Painted Post" and "Reaching for the Moon."

Stahl Joins American Films

It is announced that John M. Stahl has sold all his interest in the Tribune Productions featuring Florence Reed, and with the completion in directing his last picture, "A Woman Under Oath," has joined the American Cinema Corporation, where he will direct Mollie King in a series of special productions.

Universal Celebration Starts at Astor

Joe Schnitzer, Harry Berman and E. H. Goldstein who direct the national sales policy for Universal pictures together with general sales manager Sam Zierler joined the sales staff of the Big U Exchange at a luncheon recently in the Yacht Room of the Hotel Astor, and there started the celebration of the seventh Universal anniversary.

Those present were:

Sam Zierler, Charley Moses, Joe Schnitzer, Harry Berman, E. H. Goldstein, Harry Levey, W. C. Herrmann, E. W. Kramer, C. H. Shock, W. R. Wilkerson, Charles Rosenzweig, Lou Levey, Fred E. Baer, A. Reinleib, Edgar B. Haines, L. Kutinsky, Dave Sohmer, James Holden, G. Nathan, George Steiner, George D. Uffner, Henry Huber, Phil Winnick, L. B. Sherwood, Leo Abrams, Ben Appel, Leo Fox, H. Furst, Nat Goldberg, H. Sacks, Nat Liebskind, Joe Miller, Frank Williams.

Cecil B. DeMille Starts Passenger Air Route

Cecil B. DeMille, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has the distinction of having started the first regular passenger air route in America, it is stated. His service has already started, and Mr. DeMille expects that it will satisfy a great demand.

Mr. DeMille has purchased from the Canadian Government four Curtiss planes, and has employed four experienced aviators, all but one of whom have been just discharged from the army. The only civilian is Al Wilson, known as one of the best civilian aviators in America. He will be general manager of the company, and Lieutenant Christopher V. Pickup, an expert army aviator, is head pilot and mechanic.

The company has been incorporated under the name of the Mercury Aviation Company, with Mr. DeMille as president.

Bradford Visits New York

Ralph Bradford, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation's Chicago exchange, was a New York visitor last week.

Before taking charge of the Triangle Exchange in Chicago about eighteen months ago, Mr. Bradford opened the Triangle Exchange in Minneapolis, and later on opened the First National Evchange there for the Saxe interests. He afterward managed the Universal at Minneapolis.

Five years ago Mr. Bradford was the Chicago manager of Mutual. He reports conditions in his territory as most brilliant.

Leah Baird Attends Ball

Leah Baird, star of Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks," distributed by Hodkinson, has announced her intention of attending the motion picture ball in Richmond, Va., May 24, as a guest. It is understood that about a score of stars and representatives of the motion picture industry will be present.

Brooks Installs Special Department

Thomas B. Brooks Company, which is responsible for the Rothapfel, Independent, Selznick and Select colored inserts that have appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS announces through its representative, B. Minden, that owing to increased demand for art in advertising and exploitation of motion pictures, the company has installed a special department with specialists in the art of designing and color work at its head and that artistic advertising will be given as important a place in its schedule as its other branches.

Mr. Minden in making this announcement said: "For the past few months producers of motion pictures have given more attention to the art of advertising and have gone from the straight black and white effects to the colored inserts. And in doing this they have found that the results obtained more than equal the additional expense. Art in the motion picture has been given to the advertising. The producers have realized this with the result that this form of advertising has increased in demand fifty per cent in the last few months. The Thomas B. Brooks Company is specializing on this work and feel that its company has given the best that modern art in advertising can give."

To Oppose Music Royalties in Cincinnati

Opposition to the proposed collection of royalties on music played in motion picture theatres is to meet with decided opposition in Cincinnati, it is stated, as the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Association is to be formed within a week. This organization will include exhibitors in Cincinnati, Harrison and Norwood, Ohio, and Newport, Covington, Dayton, Bellevue, Ludlow, Ft. Thomas and other Kentucky suburbs.

The keynote of the new organization was struck at the temporary meeting it is said when it was shown that the majority of members are opposed to buying music from publishers who seek to charge royalties on music played in the 100 or more theatres that will comprise the membership. Members have pledged themselves on this point.

Convention Expects to Draw Many

It was announced this week that more exhibitors have expressed their intention of attending the annual convention of exhibitors this year, at St. Louis on June 25 and 26, than any year previous. The headquarters for the convention will be the Hotel Statler.

The National Executive Committee has arranged for the meeting to be one of business throughout, without any money-making schemes, and this is said to be meeting with the approval of all exhibitors.

National Secretary Frank Rembusch and the balance of the committee held a meeting in St. Louis last week and completed all the details.

Moss Engages Langsfield

B. S. Moss has engaged Leon Langsfield to manage his Broadway theatre. The latter has been in charge of the Stanley theatre here for the past two years and is said to have a good all-round show record behind him.

You're All Wrong, Says J. D. Williams

with them to obtain the next production of any of these four producers? No!

And still, exhibitors are supposed to accept conditions that could not prevail for a month with the sponsors for those conditions without jeopardizing every dollar invested in their enterprises.

Basically, there is comparatively no distinction between the theatre and the public and the exchange and the exhibitor. The distributor wins prestige and business by the quality of his attractions, and through the popularity of the stars and producers whose output he offers to exhibitors. Exhibitors achieve position and patronage for their theatres for identically the same reasons, excepting that their market is the public.

Any exhibitor who does not demand, and get, the same protections for every dollar of promotion money he spends on a star of any value to his box office is aiding his competitors to bring about his downfall.

The "single picture" policy can have no excuse for its practice in any effort to establish fair rental prices for the varying degrees of quality in productions. Stars and producers know how much money they must receive in gross rentals from each release to defray the cost of production and allow a profit. The amount can be determined before a picture is put on the market. The present method of fixing rentals according to zone or urban populations is a feasible and fair basis of determination. If, by this system, Kalamazoo must pay $100 a day for first run, the distributors can charge that amount. The fact that the exhibitor makes an unusual profit at that rental should not affect the rental. The star or producer is receiving the amount which, in proportion to population, is equivalent to the price previously decided upon in figuring that zone in its ratio to the total gross receipts needed to pay production costs and show the desired profit.

The star or producer should get his or her production costs back immediately upon release, because they must have it as working capital with which to begin the next picture. After they are assured of this what more can they legitimately expect if the relation between them and the exhibitors is to be equitable and mutually fair.

The star or producer can insure the profit desired on the investment in each picture by arranging a schedule of prices according to existing and well known factors, and by keeping the approval of all rental contracts, on this basis, as an authority to be exercised by them or by their representatives in the individual exchanges or at the head office of the distributing company.

Any exhibitor who has contended with the malicious practices of the program system—and where is there an exhibitor who has not—will most certainly resent the obvious import of the "single picture" policy. It does not contribute a single benefit to exhibitors which is not now at their option. With but one exception they are privileged now—and they have been privileged for months past—to book the new and recent productions of the stars and producers fostering it without being compelled to take any other releases, of any character or description. Further, they have had the protective advantages of star series contracts whenever they were requested.

Producers Association Holds Meeting

In the hope of benefiting the three principal factions of the motion picture industry by closer acquaintance, co-operation and organization, a meeting was called by officers of the Motion Picture Producers Association and held Thursday, May 15, for the purpose of perfecting an organization. The meeting was highly successful and resolutions were adopted authorizing W. S. Smith, General Manager for the Vitagraph Company, who acted as chairman of the meeting, to appoint committees representing exhibitors, exchanges, and the producers, to formulate plans for such an organization.

After a two-hour session at a luncheon held at the Athletic Club adjournment was taken after all voted for calling a second meeting to be held May 22nd, when permanent action will be taken.

The Producers Association invited all managers of Los Angeles Exchange and theatre owners to this meeting and about fifty in all attended.

There were talks by Joseph Engel, treasurer of the Metro Film Corporation; C. H. Christie, Pres. of the Producers Association, and the Christie Film Co.; Clark Thomas, Business Manager Ince Studios; T. L. Tally, Vice President First National Exhibitors Association and owner of a Los Angeles theatre; W. H. Clune of Clune Theatre Company, Will Wyatt, Manager Mason theatre; F. A. MacDonald, President Theatre Owners Association, and owner of the Portola theatre; Harry Ballance, Famous Players-Lasky Exchange and M. Gore, of the Gore theatres.

Banquet to Sunday Show Champions

On Wednesday evening, June 18, at the Waldorf Astoria in New York, a banquet is scheduled to be tendered by the motion picture industry of the state of New York to Sydney Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly and Samuel L. Berman in recognition of their successful efforts to legalize the showing of motion pictures on Sunday.

William Fox is devoting much time in acting as Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements in making a huge success of this affair.

Among the features of the evening will be a dance after the banquet in which hundreds of the most noted screen and stage stars and celebrities will participate. Already many of the boxes in the Grand Ball Room of the Waldorf Astoria have been engaged by screen stars.

Hall's Brothers Arrive

With the arrival of the 78th Division this week from overseas, Sergt. Harry T. Hall, 312th Infantry and Edward C. Hall, 309th Ambulance Unit, same Division, both brothers of Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, will arrive in Hoboken to meet a rousing welcome arranged by Mr. Hall. The Halls have served eighteen months in the army and have been, it is said, in the thickest of the fighting on the American front in France.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Helping You to Newspaper Service

JUST about the time that exhibitors in cities having a census population of 10,000 or more receive their copy of this issue, all of the daily newspapers in those cities will be receiving a letter from this office asking for data concerning their attitude toward motion pictures and the attitude of exhibitors as a whole in their section toward advertising.

In brief we are attempting to take a census of the newspapers as a whole as to their relation to the industry. Later we expect to extend this to newspapers in the smaller cities.

This is done for no other purpose than to help you and the industry as a whole, because there is every evidence that the time is ripe for greater newspaper cooperation, more space devoted to photoplay matter, and thereby greater interest on the part of the public if the exhibitors will do their part.

We are doing this in behalf of the industry just as we have done all the other things to secure greater cooperation and which those of you who have followed this department carefully, realized. We have not the slightest interest except to see exhibitors increase their business by doing better advertising and at the same time get the fullest share of attention.

And equally earnestly do we believe that the newspapers will be benefitted.

FROM its inception MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been an ardent advocate of advertising and with almost the first issue of this magazine W. A. Johnston began a series of editorials on the different phases of advertising and urging the theatres to use the newspapers—at a time when few were doing so.

That policy has been continued through the years and with the establishment of the Exhibitors Service Bureau some two years ago there was started the first concerted effort to improve the newspaper advertising and to gain the greatest share of cooperation on the part of the dailies.

We began a systematic survey of what the newspapers in the principal cities were doing. We did not go into theories but we reproduced the pages themselves and told you where papers were doing what they should do and where they were failing to do their part. And in the same articles we took up the advertising of the exhibitors and pointed out where they were failing to get results.

Because we believe that the only constructive criticism is the frankest sort we had to say some unpleasant things in these articles concerning some newspapers and some exhibitors, but we feel sure that any one who has followed this department will see that much good has been accomplished.

We have cited again and again here the cases of big newspapers like the Kansas City Star and the Denver Post that have been converted immediately after the appearance of these articles. Every exhibitor from either of these cities and from the scores of others where there has been marked improvement has given us the credit for blazing the way.

WE are today reaching through these pages and through private correspondence hundreds of exhibitors and giving them aid in their advertising to the best of our ability. Our time is yours for that work and you can feel sure that we do not hesitate to find fault nor do we withhold merited praise.

But we want to carry this whole movement further forward—to practically cover the whole nation.

It is impracticable at the start to take up the very smallest cities having dailies or to get into the weekly field for the moment, but we believe that the reflex of this census will have a great effect on those published in cities under 10,000.

NOW—WHAT YOU CAN DO——

As we have said, this letter to the Advertising Managers of all these dailies will be received by them at the same time that you get this copy of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

We expect that the great majority of them will promptly reply, but there are some who will hold back, either because they do not consider the matter important or because they think that there is some secret benefit to us in this census.

IF you have been reading the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for any length of time you know exactly what our position is and what we are seeking.

NOW FOR YOUR PART——

After you have read this call up the advertising manager of your newspaper. If he hasn't received the letter, tell him that it is on the way. Explain to him the interest that we have taken in newspapers and motion pictures and their working together for mutual betterment. Say to him that it is important that he fill in the blank that he has received and return it to us.

And at the same time if you can evidence to those advertising managers that you are becoming more and more interested in advertising, you will have done yourself a considerable service.

It is the ideal time to press forward along these lines.

We are going to do our big share.

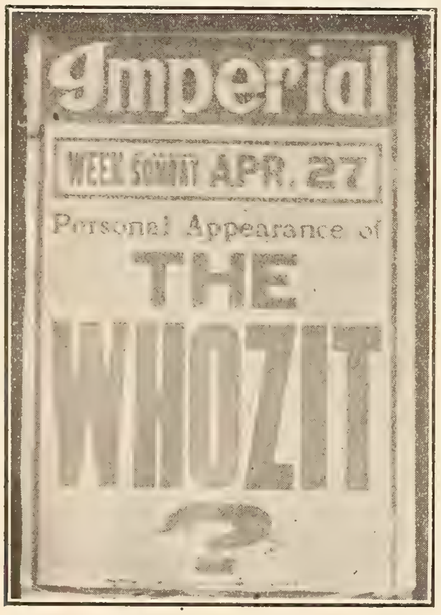
Help us along with it, and help yourself toward better advertising and toward getting better service from the newspapers by evidencing your desire to do better exploitation.

ALL ABOARD—LET'S GIVE THE BIG PUSH AHEAD.

Partington Arouses San Francisco Curiosity Featuring Personal Appearance of "Whozit"

ARRANGING a "personal appearance" for a wire-haired fox terrier, and building a $500 stage setting for the presentation of a single-reel is all in a day's work with Managing Director J. A. Partington, of the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco. His recent letters to the Educational Films Corporation, not only testify to the novelty of his plan for handling the Robert Bruce subjects, "The Wanderer and the Whozit" but prove conclusively that the ends have justified the means, and that more such advertising opportunities would be welcomed.

Through the courtesy of Marion H. Kohn, of the Consolidated Film Corporation, Mr. Partington secured "The Whozit"—the funny-faced dog that is co-starred with the familiar Great Dane in the Bruce picture. All over San Francisco one-sheet posters were displayed, and in all the house advertising clever press matter was utilized to create the greatest amount of curiosity in the coming of the very mysterious "Whozit." Long before the first performance in the week of April 27th, Mr. Partington was convinced that he had picked a winner, as far as audience appreciation was concerned. Scores of telephone calls had been received, and the capacity business that resulted was clearly foreseen.



These striking one-sheets had all San Francisco talking

Robert Bruce, his Great Dane and the "Whozit"

The showing of the "Wanderer and the Whozit" was the opening number of the Imperial program. This served to partially satisfy the curiosity that had been created, but did not in any way dampen the enthusiasm for the surprise which Mr. Partington had prepared to follow. As the picture finished, the curtain rose, and "the Whozit" himself was seen, posed on a great rock, overlooking a lake, with the moon shining through the trees. Great care had been taken with this stage setting, and the effect was gorgeous. To say that the audience liked it all is putting it very mildly indeed. The so-called feature, with the million-million dollar star, faded into the background when compared with the impression which a live-wire manager could make when the opportunity came his way.

Mr. Partington's handling of this particular subject is not easily duplicated, but is a demonstration of what may be done with a single-reel, and there are many short-subjects to be had that contain all the necessary elements for just such clever exploitation, lacking only the initiative of an exhibitor who can see a money-making opportunity and make the most of it.

NOBLE GETS BUSY

He Puts Over Hundred Per Cent with "Roaring Road"

NEXT week we will print an account of the way that Paul E. Noble, advertising manager of the Liberty and Columbia theatre, Portland, Ore., put over Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road." It is a story mighty well worth reading and we are sorry that we could not make it for this issue. But it's worth waiting for.

There are some other big exploitation stories for the next number and still more to follow. We are thankful for the increasing cooperation that we are getting from exhibitors and we hope that it is going to continue until every good idea, every fine piece of work, everything worth while is going to be recorded in this department, which is conducted for the benefit of the exhibitor alone.

San Francisco Paper Publishes Roth's Picture Views

Last issue of the Sunday San Francisco Examiner carries an interview with Eagen H. Roth which occupies all of the screen page except the portion devoted to the layout and to advertising. In this interview Mr. Roth pointed to the progress that had been made in motion pictures, and mentioned especially the musical prologues, the comedies and news weeklies.

When your folks keep taking smiles out of your theatre you have to make them all the faster.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Putting It Over 3 Weeks

It can be done.

Those who think there are no wide-awake exhibitors way down in Texas should rub their eyes and awake to the fact that there is at least one who still knows a thing or two when he sees it. The "it" in question is "Mickey."

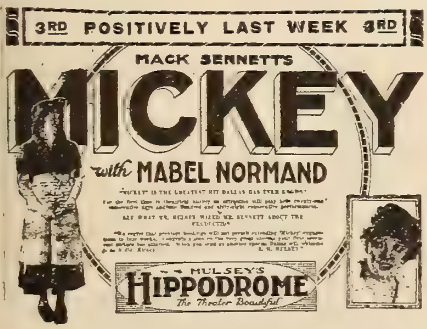
The discoverer is E. H. Hulsey, the young millionaire theatrical magnate, who owns a string of theatres scattered through Texas, as well as being a member of the Board of Directors and vice-president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Hulsey owns the three largest theatres in the city of Dallas, and has announced his intentions of starting construction of another one to seat 3,500. Hulsey is far sighted and knows a good thing.

But to get back on the subject of, it can be done, the wise ones informed Hulsey that "Mickey" could never expect to play two consecutive weeks at any one of his theatres. Picture like "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," and others could hold up for extended runs but, "Mickey"—never; "who ever heard about "Mickey" in Texas, they said.

Then Hulsey thought a moment, and called in his advertising staff and turned the matter over to Jean Finley, his publicity director, with instructions to put "Mickey" over, and put it over in a way that would show up a certain number of those who knew it all.

The first step in the ad campaign was the compiling and getting out of a complete press book containing thirty-five different press stories so well written that the newspapers instead of hunting a pigeon hole or laid it aside for future reference.

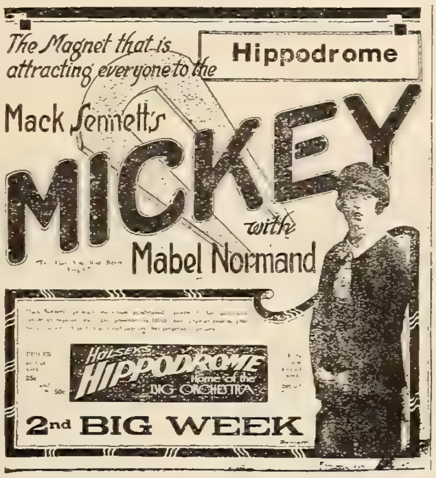
The next thing on the program was the newspaper advertising campaign. Instead of spending all the money the attraction could hope to take in the first week, a conservative ad plan was mapped out whereby every dollar spent would account for several dollars returned at the box-office. The services of the theatres' special artist were secured, and three nifty ad cuts made up as well as some scene and cartoon drawings.



At the start of the third week this four-column seven-inch was used featuring Hulsey's telegram to Sennett

After the newspaper campaign had been laid out, the billposter was brought in, and over 5,000 sheets of paper ranging from a half-sheet block letter snipe to a 24-sheet stand were ordered up for two weeks' showing in advance.

Co-operation of all the local music dealers was secured when the wonderful advertising possibilities of the song and comedy combined were shown them. The five and ten-cent stores made window displays of the sheet music, and featured it immediately preceding the showing and while the production was playing. The Columbia Phonograph Company, which has five retail distributors in the city of Dallas alone, arranged for a double-page spread of advertising featuring the "Mickey" song on their record. The leading department stores who also handle Columbia and Victor records along with the Aeolian Vocalion made handsome window displays.

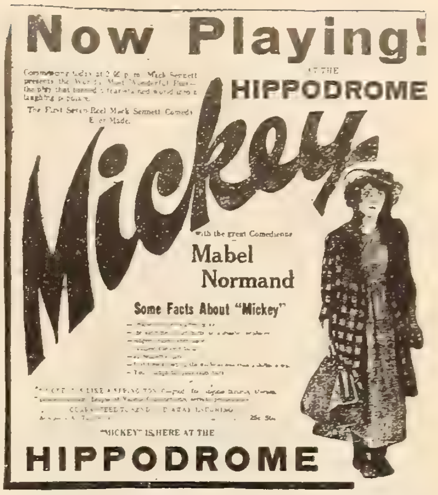


With the start of the second week advertising was kept up strong and quarter pages used, the displays featuring the title especially

Singers were secured for the Hulsey theatres, and at opportune times during the intermission the song slides would be flashed on the screen, and some one in the audience would start the catchy lilting air of the chorus of "Mickey."

Next on the program of exploitation was window specialities. A local water color artist was obtained, and throughout the city of Dallas and its suburbs, wherever space was available a neat sign in colors announcing the coming of "Mickey," was painted on the windows of drug stores, on the mirroors of confectionaries, and even on the most prominent display windows of the local merchandise and furnishing stores.

On the first opening date, Sunday, April 27, twenty-five minutes after the box-office opened the theatre was packed and remained that way until long after the usual closing hour. When the final count of the day's receipts was completed, it was found that "Mickey" had almost doubled the previous record-breaking day. Monday, in one of the hardest rain and wind storms ever known to that section of the state, the theatre again broke another record by playing to more people and more money than it did on any like date since the house became one of the Hulsey string. The first week was hardly half over when arrangements were consummated for holding the attraction over for three instead of two weeks.



This quarter of a page heralded opening of the engagement after a series of advance displays had been used

The second Sunday the play was accorded the same success that it had received the week before, and when the week closed it was discovered that another record-breaker had been hung up.

The third week is uncompleted at this writing, but box-office reports to date show that it will equal the record by any single attraction playing a one-week stand at the Hippodrome.

At the conclusion of its record-breaking engagement, "Mickey" will have played twenty-one consecutive days to a total of one hundred and sixty-eight performances in a city of one hundred and fifty thousand people, where it was said to be impossible.

But at the same time reports received from the Zoe theatre, Houston, another of Hulsey's string, indicate that the play is likely to run into its third and probably its fourth week.

If we are to take the motto of the publicity director, Mr. Finley:

"It Can Be Done."

BACK AGAIN

McCormick Will Be with Us Next Week with One of His Articles

We have gotten so many articles asking "What is the matter with the McCormick advertising articles?" that it will be good news to many exhibitors to know that he will be back with us next week illustrating one of his recent campaigns and telling why he did certain things.

Your Idea and Ours

WHEN you consider that this display occupies seventeen inches across six columns, you can appreciate what a smashing display was obtained by the Peoples theatre, Portland, Ore. It is only a mighty short time ago that this would have been condemned as a great waste of space. The only criticism of the display is that there was not more of a selling argument offered, no matter what the size of the type used.

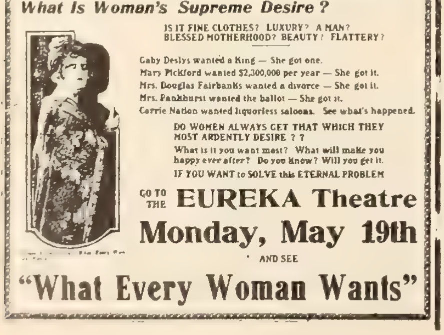
But the great thing about this is the great flash effect. There is not a person on earth who has the slightest interest in motion pictures that can turn over the page of the Oregonian on which this appeared without reading the display. It occupies the greater part of the page and the attractive face of Miss Reed does the rest.

The whole effect of this picture is to convince the public that it is an unusual offering, for the title has been made bigger and stronger than that of either of the stars and then the smaller matter refers only to the fact that this scored a great success in New York and Seattle and that it is a "hundred per cent picture."

Don't be afraid to risk a little hard drilling so that you can get in step with the procession.

LOTS of mighty good advertising has been called forth by "What Every Woman Wants," but the Eureka theatre, Philadelphia, has done one of the cleverest things in a display that is printed in the Eureka Community News, a combination of a house organ and a weekly paper for the people of that section of the city.



What Is Woman's Supreme Desire?

IS IT FINE CLOTHES? LUXURY? A MAN?
BLESSED MOTHERHOOD? BEAUTY? FLATTERY?

Gaby Deslys wanted a King — She got one.
Mary Pickford wanted $2,300,000 per year — She got it.
Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks wanted a divorce — She got it.
Mrs. Pankhurst wanted the ballot — She got it.
Carrie Nation wanted liquorless saloons. See what's happened.

DO WOMEN ALWAYS GET THAT WHICH THEY MOST ARDENTLY DESIRE ? ?

What is it you want most? What will make you happy ever after? Do you know? Will you get it.

"What Every Woman Wants"

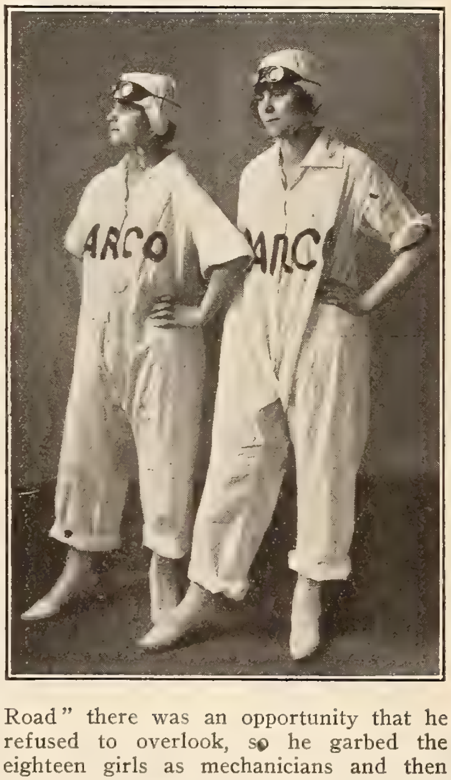
Since this occupies a top position in the paper criticism of the typing can be passed by with the observation that we would have made a little larger the question "What is woman's supreme desire?" Then we have the reading matter:

> Gaby Deslys wanted a king—she got one.
> Mary Pickford wanted $2,300,000 a year—she got it.
> Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks wanted a divorce—she got it.
> Mrs. Pankhurst wanted the ballot—she got it.
> Carrie Nation wanted liquorless saloons—see what's happened.
> Do women always get that which they most ardently desire?
> What is it that you want most? What will make you happy ever after? Do you know? Will you get it?

Whatever else may be said about this it will attract attention and arouse curiosity.

When you get down to brass tacks keep 'em shiny with energy.

RALPH RUFFNER, the live-wire manager of the Rialto theatre, Butte, Mont., pays special attention to the costuming of his ushers and has several sets of these for use on special occasions. But when there came along Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road" there was an opportunity that he refused to overlook, so he garbed the eighteen girls as mechanicians and then had "Arco," the name of Reid's car in the race, lettered across the breast of each "jumper." It was effective and caused a lot of talk.



Fellow who is always worrying about yesterday's problems is likely to be willed his competitor's today troubles.

A CROOK STORY WITH A LIBERAL ELEMENT OF ROMANCE

SAMBO'S WEDDING DAY— FOR FUN ONLY

THE FATE OF THE WORLD

ENTERTAIN — DELIGHT — CHARM

JACK O'DALE ON THE WURLITZER

HERE the Colonial theatre, Seattle, has taken its illustrations for "The Wicked Darling" from an advertisement that appeared exclusively in the News and it has certainly succeeded in getting lots of Priscilla Dean into the display. Each pair of the heads is coupled together with white lettering on a black background. For instance, the one at the top says: "She was a little actress down to her finger tips—but her fingers were careless" and the other: "One moment she'd be breaking your heart with the tragedy of her life and the next she'd be swiping your watch."

In the small box to the right center the reformation idea is brought out and then there is a line telling us of the romance of the story. There is a very clever little box at the bottom which says:

> The Fate of the World won't be settled by Priscilla Dean in "The Wicked Darling." It presents no deep problem to solve; it is not an epic of the great war or an argument for the League of Nations. But it does ENTERTAIN—DELIGHT—CHARM.

Space occupied is thirteen inches, four columns.

A well-souled theatre doesn't have to worry about the rains of adversity.

L. W. BARCLAY, advertising manager for the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., conducted a clever teaser campaign in advance of the announcement of "What Every Woman Wants" both through the newspapers and tack cards. This picture offers an unusual opportunity to get advertising merely with the use of the title and the success of the engagement at the Nemo theatre shows that campaign such as this will pay. Pick up most of the suggestions of producers and you will see that the first thing that the publicity man figures out is a "stunt" or "teaser" campaign regardless of whether the production offers suitable opportunities. The result is that the plan has been done to death, and we strongly advise showmen to use the plan only now and then when they have the title or some element that lends itself to such a campaign.

Four days before the announcement of the picture Mr. Barclay started his teaser newspaper campaign. Two styles of advertising were used, one set being three inches double and the other four inches single. In all of these the title was featured as the main thing preceded by the question "Do you know" in light italics and huge question marks. The smaller matter was changed in each display. For instance in the double column one that we have reproduced here the line is:

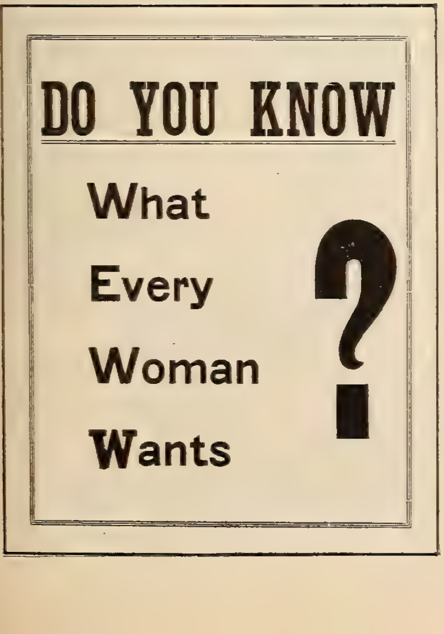
> Some say that woman mostly wants her own way, or the last word, or the moon and all the stars, or a couple of automobiles, or plenty of cats, or pretty clothes, or love in a cottage.

Then the single column display had this:

> Some say that there is a dominant desire; that every woman, rich or poor, woman of leisure and girl of the shop, has an overpowering craving for one thing and that it is a desire that is never satisfied.
> WHAT IS IT?

Following this came the regular announcement advertising and the Saturday before the Monday opening the theatre was able to get the cooperation of a number of merchants, and devoted a page to the advertising. We have printed so many of these tieups that we are not reproducing this one here.

Eight by ten tack cards were literally placed all over the city and surrounding country. These were printed on green cardboard and simply bore the question: "Do you know what every woman wants?" The type was large and black so that it could be easily read. The idea was to an extent given away by having huge cards with the same question in the theatre lobby though the display there, at first, did not explain what the question meant.



DO YOU KNOW

What Every Woman Wants ?

Adversity can oft be traced to perversity.

WE hope that we will always be able to give credit where credit is due. We have been pretty harsh in the criticism of the advertisement of some exhibitors, because we believe that the frank, honest sort is the only sort that is worth a Continental. And in the course of such criticism we have had to say some pretty mean things about advertising in cities as a whole. One of these was Albany, N. Y., but recently we have been able to print several specimens of good displays from that city and now we are mighty pleased to pick up a Sunday Albany paper and find two displays of theatres that not only break all space displays that we have known in that city, but which supply mighty good advertising.

It is interesting to note that Special Service Sections appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS on both of these productions and that the exhibitor was advised to get out and do more. Certainly both the Regent and the Clinton Square have followed that advice. And we feel mighty sure that both found that the advice paid, though it is exceedingly rare that two big pictures run for a week at the same time in the State capital.

Regent Theatre used eleven inches across seven columns with the black on white effect. Our criticism of this is that the title of the picture is hardly in big enough type. Yet we can see the effect that the Regent sought was that this was a big hit in the great city to its south and that the same production was now coming to Albany. The Regent has used very little reading matter following the sentence "It rocked New York to its foundations" with:

> From the time that it was first shot on the screen until the conclusion not a soul in the place took their eyes from the screen, and not a person left their seats, and when the finish of the picture came they rose from their seats in a body and cheered and cheered until the building shook under their mighty voiced opinion.

We didn't happen to be there when that happened, but it will get by because of the fact that the exhibitor has a production that will justify every promise that he had made.

Fifteen inches across six columns has been used by Clinton Square on "Common Clay" and the theatre has achieved the very best cut layout that we have seen on this offering anywhere. It's one that many others can copy to their profit. The name of the play-picture has been properly made the most prominent thing and then the upper picture shows the youth begging the girl's forgiveness with the quotation from Kipling at the side, and to the right is the scene during the raid in which the girl says, "I'm not a bad girl, officer, indeed I'm not." And then at the bottom is a picture of the girl shining her sweetheart's shoes.

Congratulations, Regent and Clinton Square theatres, of Albany!

Now and then advertising is just another version of the tortoise and the hare.

good idea about it all, and it's no exception in the way that John Hamrick arranged the displays for "The Turn in the Road" at his Rex theatre, Seattle.

You will remember that in his article in the issue of the NEWS of April 19, Nelson B. Bell, of Washington, commented on the cut that he used in advertising "The Turn in the Road." He said that he tried to get cuts with punch in them and that he took this one from a still because "it throbs with action." There is drama in every pin-point of it. It shows conflict—psychological, however, rather than physical. It shows fidelity to life in the naturalness of the characters. The girl is not a 'flapper,' the boy is modish, but not pomaded. The elder man HAS HIS HAT ON. Then he went on to say that no caption was needed. Correct.

MOST WONDERFUL PICTURE PORTRAYING THE GLORY OF LOVE EVER SCREENED

IT GETS YOU

Mr. Hamrick has used that same picture in his display—or rather in two of his displays, and that is the point to which we want to call your particular attention. The advertisement on the Sunday of the opening occupies five full columns. The Rex runs to black type, and little of it with the brick effect for the borders. Here he has made his personal guarantee as the best picture that he has ever seen stand out at the top, together with the run at Los Angeles and has called it "The dramatic love triumph of years" and "The most remarkable picture portraying the glory of love ever screened."

And what did he do when he decided to hold it over for another week? He used exactly the same cut as he did the week before. He knew that this picture had created a large amount of word of mouth advertising and he knew that there were probably lots of people who had been convinced by his first advertisement, but who had simply neglected to see the picture. Therefore he wanted to call their attention sharply to this fact and he could not have done it better than by using this.

In this one he has used two of the same phrases and then in place of his guarantee, he says: "Ask any one of the thousands who saw it here last week, and then in the box at the upper right: "It gets under the skin—grips—holds—satisfied."

Psychology in advertising? We should say yes.

Some people act literally on the command: Judge not, lest ye be judged.

JUST another case of doing things differently. Most exhibitors who had in hand the striking cut carrying the title of "Bolshevism on Trial" with the background of the Goddess of Liberty and the figures of Capital and Labor crushing Bolshevism, together with the half-tones of the four leading characters, would have then dropped all the selling matter under the cut, lengthening the display and making it a column narrower.

But Victory theatre, Tacoma, Wash., did exactly the right thing by setting all of the selling argument to the left in this case. It did not want to take a chance of anyone giving the cut a glance and then passing the matter by, because the writer wanted the public to feel that this picture really meant something to every person in Tacoma and that it was not merely trading on a sensational title. In the center of the long box is another in blackface calling attention to the fact that this was made from Thomas Dixon's "Comrades." The other matter is so good that we are repeating it here.

VICTORY

The demon, Bolshevism, swept the island colony off the coast of Florida, turned love into hate, happiness into misery, fertility into waste, peace into chaos, and men into beasts.

And then it was that the saner ones learned how Bolshevism crucified Russia—not socialism.

They learned, too, that Force never brings happiness.

In this little colony were some who came to write poetry, not to work. There were women, too, who believed that their forms were made for artist's brush and not to grace a kitchen.

And above all—they discovered that no one is satisfied with his own little job.

Mighty good stuff, with just a slight suggestion of spice, and, in fact, an all around good display.

It's a lot easier to turn a corner than to face something ahead; but do you ever get there?

WASHINGTON THEATRE, Dallas, Texas, relied largely on the cut of Miss MacLaren, the arrangement of the heavy border and lots of white space to get the attention to this three-column, nine-inch display. And then when the writer got that attention he proceeded to wade in and sell the picture to both the men and the women and make them all want to come.

In the upper left hand corner there is an appeal made under the heading "All Women," attention being called to the fact that the star, author and director are all of the fair sex. Balancing this in the right hand corner there is the word "He" in black face and then the continuation of the sentence "saved the honor of the wife he had never married." In both cases the words that are used in bold face should have been somewhat larger than the matter in Roman.

Then there are two more boxes below the title which read:

For the She's—
If you were hungry, almost starving, would you pass yourself off as the wife of a man you had never seen, to save yourself from starvation?
For the He's—
What would you do if you found a woman in your home that the world regarded as your wife when you knew positively that you had never married her?

These sentences might have been strengthened, avoiding the duplication of the starving reference and also saying in the line just above "When you had not even seen her before."

There would have been another improvement by omitting the rule around the Alma Rubens announcement. The other boxes would then have stood out better and the effect would have been less confusing.

Ancient Rome means nothing to you; but you've got to be alive on the current history of your town TODAY.

LIBERTY THEATRE, Topeka, Kan., has not been afraid to use white space in the advertising of "Common Clay," and aside from the fact that the half-tone of Fannie Ward does not print well and the name plate of the theatre is not sufficiently distinctive, it is good advertising. The theatre has devoted the upper part of the display to selling itself and then has used the title in the largest type.

Quotations from the New York newspapers are convincing and there are only two other selling sentences which are used in the lower corners. We are glad to see that the Liberty avoided the box effect with these for the reason that it shows that lots of boxes are used that are not needed.

We would, however, have used a dash or at least more white space between the portion of the display referring to the theatre itself and that about the picture. The former would have then stood out much better.

A THRILLER OF CITY LIFE WITH A WOMAN AS THE VICTIM

Rules are good, but why not be the EXCEPTION?

STRAND THEATRE, Providence, R. I., has done excellent work in bringing out the strength of the cast playing the DeMille production, "For Better, For Worse," by using the pictures of the six leading players at the right. Then the three principal characters have been used in the scene cut which did not come out as well as it might as the result of the poor retouching by the artist. Elimination of the background would have resulted in better effect.

But the point is that no will turn past these pictures, but everyone will stop and read the matter that is said about the picture. Here is the selling argument used:

> She wanted to hug him, but she pushed him away. Her heart burned with love for him, but she loathed him, too. He was the man of her heart, but he proved himself to be a coward in her eyes. Whenever she thought of walking to the altar with this man, she swore she would never do it. But she did. Did it willingly, gladly. The strange twist of fate that caused her to do it is one of the most thrilling stories ever told in pictures.

As usual, the Strand plays up but one of the attractions on the double bill and confines the second, "Oh, You Women" to small space.

THIS is a splendid example of how not to advertise. It is a fourteen-inch double column "display" from the Orpheum theatre, Duluth, Minn. We have quoted that word, for it is anything but a display. It is merely a mass of type, and that would be bad enough in itself, but absurd statements that are made are worse.

For instance we are told that it is "Ten times bigger than 'The Birth of a Nation.'" We might let that get by on account of the immensity of the war scenes but when we are told that it is "A million times more massive than 'Intolerance' we have to cry 'Enough.'" And then to make it all the more convincing there is a line that tells us that this is a "Billion dollar attraction."

Now here is a case where these things are not needed. The only effect that such statements can have is to hurt motion pictures. We don't suppose that anybody believed them. As a matter of fact if we did not know what the picture was and were relying on the advertisement of the Orpheum theatre alone we would have distinctly stayed away from the theatre that week—or have gone with the expectation of being bunked.

This sort of advertising creates distrust in all of a theatre's announcements.

Midnight Show Idea and Strong Advertising Get N. Y.'s Attention for "Auction of Souls"

RARE indeed, is it for New York to put over a real campaign on the exhibition of a motion picture, but this has just been done in a highly profitable manner by N. T. Granlund, director of advertising and publicity for the Marcus Loew Enterprises with "Auction of Souls." Mr. Granlund included the twenty-one Loew theatres in New York City in his advertising and jammed them all.

What Mr. Granlund did is a recital that contains ideas and suggestions for every exhibitor, not alone in relation to "Auction of Souls," but to the practice of the art of showmanship as a whole. As a director of advertising and publicity his task is manifold. He has to appeal to every class and type of theatre patrons. The multiplicity of Loew theatres in New York embrace in their respective clienteles the automobile trade, which demands refinement in the appeal to which it responds; the middle classes, who want better than ordinary entertainment wares, and who are almost as discriminating as the aristocratic patrons, and the fans to whom fifteen cents is the maximum admission within their means.

How he struck a response from all of them, breaking the box-office record in twenty-one theatres is best told in Mr. Granlund's own way:

"To begin with," he said, "there had just been a difference of opinion about how the public would receive 'Auction of Souls.' The manager of a big Broadway house had decided that it might not be a success. Mr. Loew thought differently. It was booked, and to me was given the task of exploiting it. Really, it wasn't a task. The subject is filled with wonderful advertising possibilities. The real problem was to choose the most effective of them. It is a mighty unusual picture. I've never seen anything at all like it. My opinion on this point suggested that it would be well to do things to advertise it that New York theatre patrons had never seen before.

"The first step was to create an advance interest. This was done by using slides containing copy reading: 'Coming Soon—The Only Motion Picture Ever Shown at $10 a Seat.' The reference to it at $10 a seat was used in every bit of literature we prepared. It always was coupled with the qualifying phrase: 'No Advance in Prices.' This created the impression that our patrons were going to get a bargain in screen entertainment. Every Loew theatre scheduled for a first run received one-sheets and three-sheets for lobby use, printed with the slide copy in big display type.

"Then the real campaign started. I selected eleven trailers from a print of 'Auction of Souls' at the First National Exchange, and wrote a form of address for managers to use. This explained the various scenes in the trailers. It had a tremendous effect. I ordered a big quantity of posters, of all sizes. What impressed me particularly, and what I urged every one of our managers to display prominently, were the captions beneath the scenes and figures on every poster, and on all of the lobby photos. The public stopped to read these. The captions dealt with facts, not fiction, and they captured attention in wholesale quantities.

"Managers, making announcements from the stages, invited the patrons to get 'Auction of Souls' heralds on their way out. This was a valuable stunt, because thousands of people requested heralds from the ushers and doormen, and, in reading them, our slide and announcement appeals were clinched. I bought big space in the newspapers. Local papers were used in Brooklyn, Harlem, the Bronx and other sections, while the New York City dailies published display ads. Several of the line cuts and copy from First National's press sheet were used with good effect.

Double column ads. continued $10 a seat idea

"Then came the advance 'midnight show' idea, which really did more to put the production over than anything else. This was a distinct departure from anything New York had ever witnessed in connection with a motion picture. It created nothing short of a sensation, to say nothing of several riots. It absolutely blocked Broadway at Forty-fifth street, in front of the New York theatre, at 11.30 o'clock Saturday night. It is a fact that forty policemen on foot, and a squad of mounted men had to be called to battle with the crowds before the street was cleared for normal traffic. Never, in the history of motion pictures on Broadway, has any other production received the public response that welcomed 'Auction of Souls' at that midnight show."

Mr. Granlund was diffident about taking personal credit for the idea of the midnight show. The fact is that it was his own conception, contemplated at first for all of the Loew theatres as an advertising scheme, rather than a source of revenue. He reasoned that the announcement of a special midnight show, at $1 a seat, was made necessary because the theatres could not accommodate the crowds at the regular performances, would convince people that only an extraordinary attraction would be started on its runs in this way. The psychology of the novelty of the affair also entered into his analysis of its value.

Five theatres were selected. The scheme proved a veritable knockout and a complete success from every standpoint.

"But there is this to remember," warned Mr. Granlund. "The midnight shows would not have been worth a tenth as much for advertising purposes if they had not been given in advance of the opening of the production in regular matinee and evening performances. I had tickets for the midnight shows printed a week in advance. They were placed on sale in the theatres and in neighborhood stores. Every usher and theatre attendant had them. Announcements were made from the stages about the midnight show, and as the people left the theatre the manager and his assistants stood in the lobby and sold the tickets. The sale was slow at first, but it developed astounding speed as the day of the special show drew nearer. Every one of the five houses was sold out, with every bit of standing room taken, three days in advance of the midnight show."

At the conclusion of the last evening show in each of the five theatres, these members of the audience who held tickets for the midnight show were asked to remain seated. When the other patrons had left the theatre, the ushers collected the tickets from those who had remained. Then the doors were opened to packed lobbies.

"The Red Lantern" Shown for All in Dayton After a Lavish Exploitation Plan Was Used

By Urlin Perrill

Publicity Director of the Dayton Theatre, Dayton, O.

"If you want to be healthy, wealthy and wise Hustle like Hell and ADVERTISE."

THIS is just as good advice now as it was originally written and it applies with just as much force to theatrical and motion picture exhibition as to any other line of endeavor.

Fortunately for the publicity director, the management of the Dayton theatre is a firm believer in the efficacy of advertising and his policy is of the liberal and oft repeated variety, so when he passed the good word along that "The Red Lantern" was to be the attraction for our Anniversary Week and said, "Go to it," we went.

Feeling that the celebration of the first birthday of the largest motion picture house in the Middle West should possess some drag with the local press we took up the question of a special edition with one of our papers with the result that we secured their very active co-operation, which culminated in the two page spread which accompanies this article. The circulation of admission tickets through the merchants brought us quite a bit of added publicity and we furnished the drawing from which the paper made the cut for the center display.

We also got busy with the merchants who had the song, "The Red Lantern," to sell, and we secured displays of exceptional character in four of our most prominent stores which netted us considerable business.

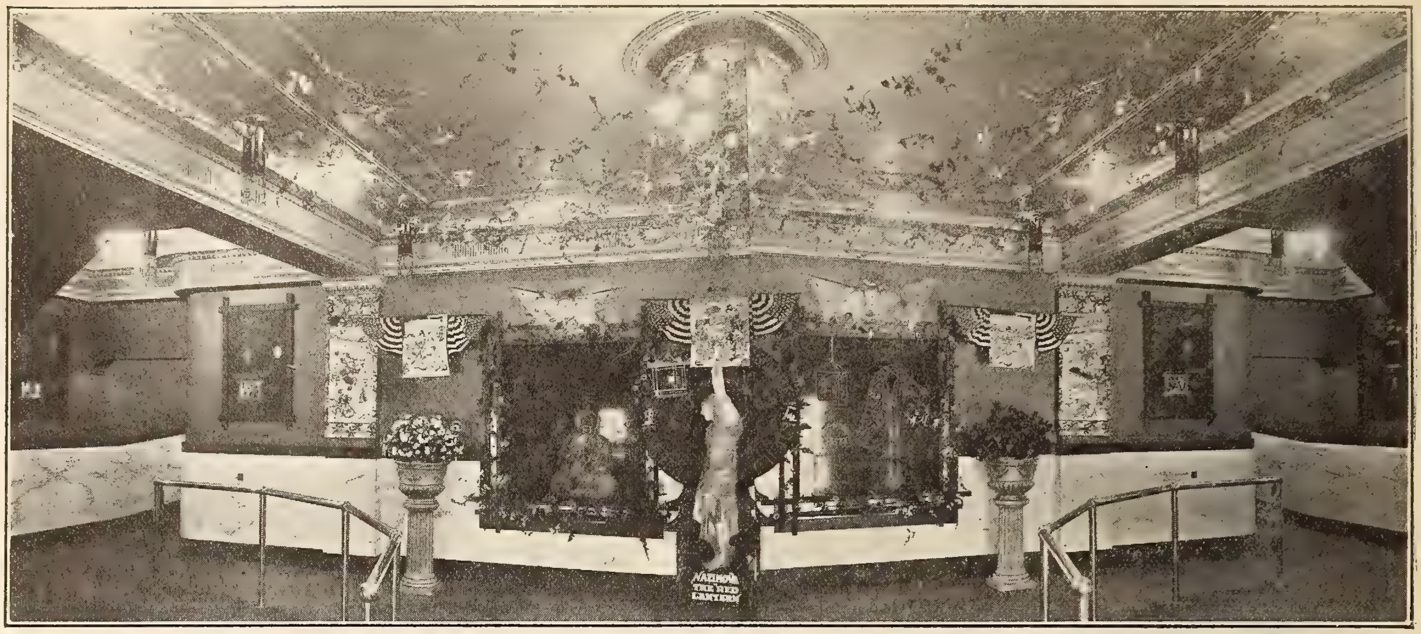
Advertising as tied up with leading merchants and tickets given to purchasers of certain amount of goods at these stores

The week prior to the showing of the picture we began our "teasing" campaign with a cut of the title written in Chinese characters. This we secured from one of our better educated Chinese business men, who was very glad to write it after being assured that the picture did not hold the Chinese up to ridicule. This teaser was followed the next day by teasers of another variety in which were featured the word "What?" with the title of the picture added. As the opening day approached we increased the size of our advertising and on Sunday, the opening day, we ran in all of the papers (three) specially drawn cuts about a quarter page in size. The cuts being the same as we used in a full page advertisement in the program at our local stock theatre, which also opened the same week.

That a proper atmosphere might accompany the showing of the picture we decorated the house with Chinese lanterns, flags, flowers, parasols, and miniature Chi-



One of the most artistic displays on record was made by Sam Harding, manager of the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, for the showing of "The Red Lantern." This photograph gives some idea of the appearance of the lobby. Ten girl ushers, doormen, ticket sellers and other attendants were dressed in Chinese silk costumes. Mr. Harding started his advertising campaign three weeks before opening, using 10,000 herald and "Red Lantern" stickers and all the boards he could get for the paper up to 24 sheets. Woolworth and Kresge stores cooperated in affording window displays and many drug stores and ice cream parlors advertised a "Red Lantern Frappe" nese dolls dressed as the characters impersonated by Nazimova in the picture. This feature of the campaign attracted much favorable attention and occasioned an enormous amount of conversation about the picture, resulting in added business that talk of this kind is sure to bring.

Our orchestra, which is an unusually large one (twenty pieces), under the direction of H. H. Thomas, also contributed much to the success of our anniversary week by playing an arrangement of music especially selected for the occasion by Mr. Thomas.

Taken as a whole our campaign of publicity on "The Red Lantern" and anniversary week was a most exceptional one and both the attraction and the Dayton theatre are all the better for it.

Manager Gates is a great believer in dignified and consistent advertising, feeling that it attracts to the theatre a class of patronage that eventually becomes a clientele on which great dependence may be placed. It also adds tone to the theatre and raises it above the ordinary picture theatre in the estimation of the public, a most desirable consummation, because it makes possible the obtaining of an admission price fairly commensurate with the attraction offered.

To you exhibitors who approach the advertising proposition in a half hearted manner I call attention to the opening couplet of this article, read it again.

California Sets Record with Views of Returning Soldiers

California theatre, San Francisco, has just scored a big success with its picture of the "Welcome Home" parade for the 347th and 363d regiments which saw service in France. Eugene W. Castle, western editor of Gaumont News and Graphic cooperated with the California and as the result of the arrangements the house was able to show the parade pictures some time before any of the other theatres.

Woolworth's store displayed the song and large pictures of the star at Kansas City

Two automobiles were used to carry the cameras and these bore big signs reading: "Gaumont News making movies for the California theatre." It is estimated that 700,000 people saw the cars and the camera men at work and that a considerable portion of these went to the California to see the pictures. The first scenes of the arrival of the soldiers were shown at the California in less than two hours after they were taken, a second section an hour after the parade had ended and the final ones at 4 p. m.

One of the unique points was that "stills" were taken at the same time and the California was able to have a lobby display of actual views that attracted a great deal of attention.

How New York Stages the Show

ONCE again women stars hold sway at all three of the big New York theatres this week. At one there is a farce comedy and the two others are of the tense variety, and, by a rather peculiar coincidence, in one of these the wife loses her life and in the other the husband is killed.

"Vicky Van," or "The Woman Next Door," with Ethel Clayton as the star, is the feature at the Strand, and then the comedy element is supplied by a Bobby Bumps cartoon and a Universal comedy, "Roaring Lions and Monkey Shines." There is an Outing-Chester scenic and the unusual varied Strand Topical, including something new to New York in the clever paragraphs from Smart Set.

At the Rialto, Pauline Frederick has a double role in "One Week of Life," and here again there is plenty of comedy supplied with a Sunshine, "The Lady Bellhop's Secret," and a Judge Rumhauser cartoon, together with the "Sayinks of Topplitsky." The scenic shows some views in Norway and there is a particularly brilliant rendition of the trio from "William Tell."

Rivoli offers practically an all comedy bill, with Dorothy Gish in "I'll Get Him Yet" as the feature, a Mutt and Jeff included in the Topical, and a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Back to the Woods." Prizma supplies the scenic end of it with "Glacier Park." There is a beautifully staged dance act included, and the peculiar arrangement of the Pictorial and the effect that is gained is worth studying.

Rivoli Theatre

WHILE it is not announced as a comedy bill that element certainly is dominant in the entertainment at the Rivoli this week, with the feature a farce and, a comedy, cartoon and most of the music light and catchy.

Suppe's "Pique Dame" which is seldom played is the overture and it delights the audience with its tunefulness. At the opening the music is light and trippy and then the cellos carry the air with the drums and piccolos coming in and the soft echo effect of the second violins. The first violins take up the air with a tripping dance. The brasses are mainly used light and the whole effect of the overture is happiness, making it especially suitable for a comedy program. It is played with the house lights all gold.

There are some beautiful scenes shown in "Glacier Park," a Prizma picture, but one criticism we have to find that there are at times too many people being shown and rather take one's attention away from the scenery itself. There are some fine shots of Lake Louise and a particularly beautiful one of a glacier mirrored in the lake. Some splendid cloud effects are also included. "In the Garden" is played once through and then the organ takes up the music for the remainder of the subject.

With a setting representing an artist's studio with the slanting skylight roof with blue light showing through and a single standing red light at the left of the stage and a red spot on the singer James Harrod, tenor and one of the favorites at the two houses, then renders "The Old Refrain."

Rivoli Pictorial opens with International pictures of English troops on guard at Limerick, Ireland, for the visit of the American commission consisting of Former Governor Dunne, M. J. Ryan and Frank P. Walsh. Close-ups of the three men bring applause while "Blarney Parade" is played. Pathe shows us views of the German peace delegation at Versailles showing how they are fenced off from the rest of the world. Here the music is "Dance of the Dwarfs" and it seemed to us when we heard it to carry a sort of kidding effect, with the martial effect of the horns somewhat burlesqued.

Now watch this very clever effect: Kinograms presents pictures of the "American University of the Dance," the Denishawn school at Los Angeles. First we see young girls thinly clad coming from behind the trees and toward the end there is one of the dancers that has little more than a veil on. So at the end of the scene there is flashed on the screen the title of the next portion of the Pictorial "Animals Wild and Otherwise" and every one in the house immediately connects the title with the girl last seen and there is a roar of laughter. Good stuff!

Now this little picture which is released by Educational got more laughs than we have known before in such a short length of time. At first there are pictures of kittens and puppies playing together and then a very cunning baby is introduced. First we see it playing with the bear skins and then at its exercises and next with a pipe. Then with the title "The great outdoors appeals to him" and we see the kid enjoying himself greatly in a mud puddle. The laughter is tremendous and equally only when the naked kid tries to eat jam and gets the most of it on his face and body. For these two numbers "air de Ballet" is played, followed through with "Caprice" (Canzonetta.)

Here is an effect worth trying. It will get you a lot of word of mouth advertising. We have never seen anything that made a greater hit.

Next we have Mutt and Jeff in "A Shell Game" which shows their side-splitting adventure with a huge crab. First he gets hold of Jeff while Mutt screams with laughter, the orchestra giving the whistle effects here. Sand paper effects are used for Jeff brushing his bald head and then loud whistles when the crab gets hold of his toe. Then when Mutt sticks it in Jeff's trousers there are even stronger effects. Then Jeff rushes to the target gallery and we have the shot effects as a man tries to shoot the crab and then to the butcher shop where Jeff used a link of sausage to "fish" it out. Up to this time there has been played "Tiddle de Winks" followed through with "Umbrellas to Mend" but with the scene in the Domestic Relations court there is a change to "I'm Not Jealous" which continues to the end.

We get back to news events with International showing how a "blimp" is made at the Akron, O. factory and then pictures of the C-5 leaving its hangar at Montauk, N. Y. "Chanson du Printemps" is the accompaniment. Then we have Pathe pictures of the fastest bicycle track in the world, the new velodome at San Francisco and here "On Horseback Gallop" is played. Under the caption "Let 'Er Buck" Gaumont shows us some views of Seattle giving a real wild west welcome to its returning troops with Indians and cowboys performing the stunts in the streets. We have the Indian yells and the effects of the revolver firing while "Wild and Woolly" is the music.

Now there is a peculiar ending for the Pictorial this week and one that is impressive because it is different. It is an Educational Films showing how the railroads in the west clear their tracks of the snow. We have the plows, the blowers, the sweepers, etc., at work and if there is any one in the house that feels at all warm they will certainly cool off with this picture. Production Manager Joseph LaRose has the effects of the plow and the locomotive working at the best for this picture. At the end the picture gets a big hand.

Now we have another one of dances staged by Adolf Bohm, of the Metropolitan, with a special stage setting by John Wenger and a musical setting prepared as only Dr. Riesenfeld knows how. The house lights go down to a deep purple with the orchestra bathed in blue and there are a few bars of music before the curtains part revealing two weird columns and a stairway leading upward at either side of the stage. There is one of the typical Wenger moons in the center and a coat of armor at the left. First we have a Harlequin and a Pierrette dancing and then a Cavalier comes in with his attention to the girls, there is a duel with swords until the girl separates them. Then she forces them to make up, but at the end the Harlequin is flung aside and the Cavalier wins the girl.

Then we have the feature, Dorothy Gish in "I'll Get Him Yet." At the screening "He Will Understand" is played and then with the introduction of Jones, Sr. we have "I Found the End of the Rainbow." This is played an unusual length of time, though it never becomes tiresome and we have the next change with the scene at the Jones home. Here we get a flash showing the pipe organ in the home and the music during this scene is properly carried on the organ.

"Liebsleid," the theme is introduced as the girl greets. Scoops and continues until the scene at the races when "The Globe Trotter" is used. With the arrival of Thursday night the music becomes "Chiffonette" until Susy sees to it that she gets a proposal and here the theme comes in again. Where the old man chases the youth out of the house "Dutch Wind Mill" is played and then for the scenes where the girl starts to track Scoops there is a change to "La Coquette" with "Impish Elves" played as she buys the wedding ring. With the title "The female of the species" there is a change to "Waiting" and as she lures him into the park "Un Peu d'Amour" is played with burlesque effect.

With the title "First pleasures of a poor man's wife" we have "Toot Toot" and then with the title "Love in a Cottage" the organ takes over the music and continues for quite a time. Playing "Yankee Girl" the organ comes back with the title "So peace reigns" and then as the husband enters the room there is a change to the theme, a numbered selection as he leaves, and the theme again as he comes back with the flowers. Where he sits on the couch and we see the cat arching her back at the man under it "Me-Ow" adds to the laugh. Then for the action that follows are numbered selections with "Dance Capriccio" as the father enters and then with the title "Her new manager" theme to the end.

Lights are in red for the second orchestra selection "A Royal Vagabond" and then comes a very funny Harold Lloyd comedy, "Back to the Woods." A dramatic allegro is used at the screening, and then with the title "Jeanne" we have "Ramona" changing to "Indian War Dance" with the title "Ready to shoot." When the bear is seen "Freitschute" is taken up and played through twice and then followed through with "A Day at the Circus." Where the villain grabs the girl there is a change to "Sacheau" and then with bedtime "Everybody's Crazy" and then when the bear appears again "Big Boot Dance" changing to "Fi Fi" with the embrace and continuing to the end.

Maurice Shaw's "Fantasy in C. Minor" is the organ solo.

Strand Theatre

BECAUSE the feature is tense and without laughs, Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett has placed plenty of comedy in the bill at the Strand this week and has used largely love songs and the more tuneful sort of music to set it off. The result is a well balanced bill with plenty of variety.

This is how Gimbel Brothers, the big New York department store, cooperated with Famous Players-Lasky in advertising "Fires of Faith" at the Harris theatre. Charles K. Ulrich's novel of that name has just been published by Grosset & Dunlap

Selections from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller" form the overture. At the star there are chime effects and the music of the organ from the orchestra and then it goes into the lighter effects. The lights are gold until a point where they are dimmed to blue in order to cover the appearance on the stage of Ed Montray who renders a xylophone solo during this number.

Strand Topical opens with the Pathe velodome pictures already described which are shown to the music of "Shooting Stars." Then come some mighty interesting Pathe views showing a duck hatchery at Marshfield, Mass. There are laughs and murmurs of "Oh, how cute" from all over the house as the little goslings, hundreds of them, are seen. "Chatterers" is played. Then we have Pathe taking us over the Panama Canal in an airship and here the views are most interesting, starting at the Atlantic side and continuing to the Pacific, the machine flying low enough to show everything clearly. "Summer Showers" is played here with motor effects from the side of the stage. This selection is continued through International pictures showing sailors risking their lives at Montauk to test new parachutes.

Now there comes another novelty with "Smart Set's Three Minutes of Wit, Wisdom and Wickedness." These are somewhat on the order of "Topics of the Day" except that they are taken from the paragraphs that appear in the fiction magazine. They are a little breezy such as: "Kissing a girl through a veil is like drinking a gin rickey in a shower bath" and "A girl's kisses are like pickles in a bottle. The first one is hard to get but the rest come sliding" and "A diplomat is a man who remembers a woman's birthday, but forgets her age." "Don't Forget the Salvation Army" is played through these, and quite timely with the Army's drive for finances in progress.

We get back to news subjects with Pathe pictures of the C-5 starting on her flight from Montauk Point. These are interesting pictures and they get a good hand. "Bullets and Bayonets" is the music here. Then International shows us pictures of King Alfonso honoring famous Spanish gunners and "Winzugs March" is used. Then come the Pathe pictures of the German delegates already described and this is followed by a cartoon. First it shows Germany pictured as a fat German seated at the table and refusing to sign the peace treaty at the behest of Humanity. But when that figure faints out and Gen. Foch appears in her place the German hastens to put his name on the dotted line. "Tell it to the Marines" is the highly appropriate music for these two.

"Itasca Makes Her Bow," being pictures of the lake of that name, is an unusually attractive Outing-Chester scenic with very clever titles. It opens with some striking cloud effects showing the gathering of a storm and then we have pictures of a private game preserve with the trained animals that "are taught everything except dancing" and then to the Cass Lake Indian reservation. We have some views of Lake Winnibigoshish, which a title says "sounds like an alcoholic expression, but we found water there." Toward the end there are convincing pictures of a big forest fire.

Music Hints For Entire Programs

Grauman's soldier "Jazz" band in action

"Le Depart" is played during these.

Now we get our first touch of comedy with "Bobby Bumps Eel—lectric Launch." We have Bobby and his dad out fishing with the dog chasing the fish from the old man's hook on to Bobbie's and then we have him catching electric eels which do the shimmee and then using them for a battery to run the launch when his father gets trapped on a shark's back. The organ carries the music for this.

Then Miss Dorothy South, soprano, sings "Carita" most effectively. She stands toward the left of the stage with a white spot on her during the rendition.

Ethel Clayton in "Vicky Van" is the feature, the story of a young girl who marries the elderly scion of an "old family" and then proceeds to lead a double life. "Among the Roses" is played at screening and this is followed through with "Remembrance" and then with the title "On their way to New York" we have "Canzonetta" until the auto is stalled when it becomes "Chanson du Matin." As the girl thanks him the second time "At Sunset" is used and then with the title "Unloved and continually crossed" the organ takes up the music for eleven minutes.

With the title "This introduced" where the pianist is seen we have a piano solo, very short played to action and then as he stops the orchestra comes in with "Reve de Amour." With the title "And you never saw Miss Schuyler," the music becomes "Annette," changing to "Recollection," and then with the title, "That night before Schuyler meets his wife," we have "Poem." Then when Vicky Van in spite of Schuyler's return decides to go through with her party there is a change to "Miracle of Love." At the point where she is seen to leave the men "Flirtation" is used.

When the girl asks where her maid is "Jennesse d'Hercules" is taken up until the flash of the way the four women take the news, when the organ comes in for seven minutes. Then as the detective is seen coming through the secret door "Elegie" is played and then as the maid tells how they escaped from the other house through that door "Kunihilde" is used, and then when the couple are seen alone together we have the last eight bars of "Miracle of Love." It is a most effective musical arrangement and one worthy following.

Redferne Hollinshead, tenor, then renders a double number, "A Farewell" and "Love Is Mine" in a way that delights.

Now there winds up the bill a very funny Universal comedy, "Roaring Lions" and "Monkey Shines," in which the lions and a monkey are responsible for a lot of fun. "Wedding Blues" is played at the screening and there follows through "Everybody Wants the Key to My Cellar," which is a very tuneful number and one that will be effective in connection with the July first drought. At the scene where the lion is seen chasing the monkey, "On the Mill Dam" is played, and then with the title "Society's latest fad," we get "Les Erinnyes," and there the organ takes up the music until the title, "Still sticking around," when we have the orchestra back with "L'Automne."

When the elephant is seen squirting water on the dancers "Lion Chase" is played, changing with the title "They gave him ten minutes" to "Gionanni D'Arco." Then there is a clever effect with the title, "Music hath charms," when we have a perfect imitation of a harmonica on the big organ and then we have "French Come to Yankee Land" to the end.

Handel's "Largo" is the organ solo.

Background of Bird Store Used by Grauman's in Playing "In a Bird Store"

WORTH while effects to give prominence to musical features of the program were made this week by Sid Grauman at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles, when a special setting representing the interior of a bird store was used as the background for the orchestra of thirty-five during the playing of the overture "In a Bird Store," under the direction of Arthur Kay.

This famous composition by Lake combined with the setting gave innumerable opportunities for the introduction of traps and novelties in the setting where scores of cages containing different kinds of birds and the lighting effects served to put the night scene on the street beyond, the glow from the street lights being the only illumination for the interior of the store.

Grauman's featured another musical number on the same program which is known as "Jazz-O-Maniacs," this is a jazz orchestra of elevent members, all being returned soldiers who organized while in France. They give a program of five numbers which runs about twelve minutes.

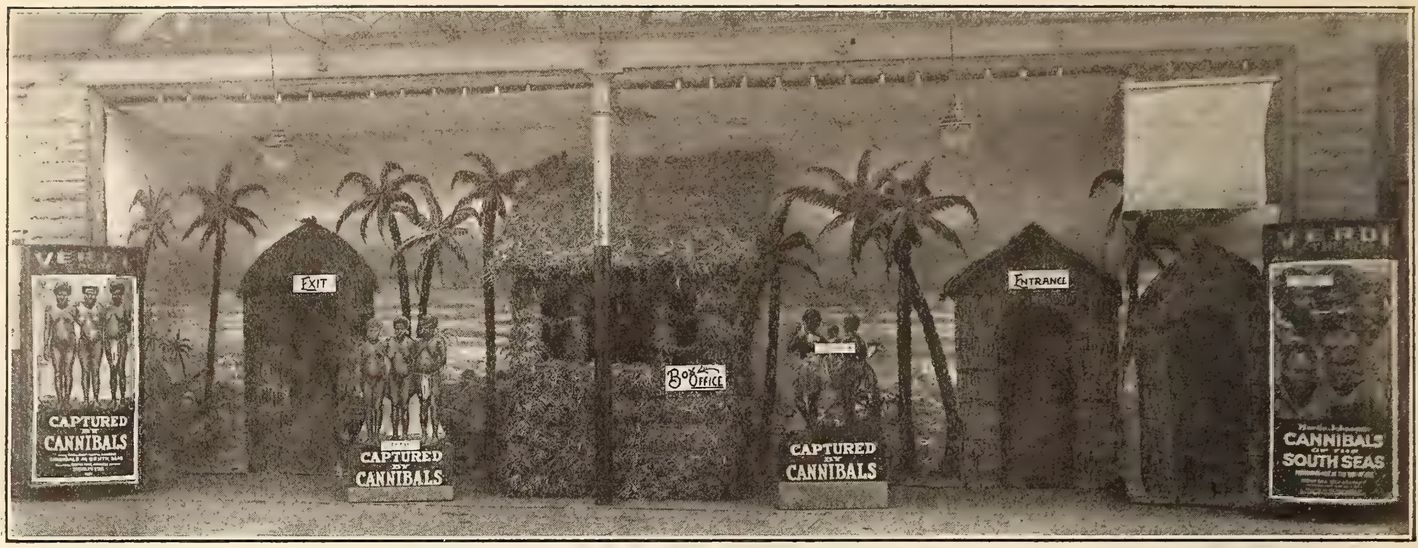
Rialto Theatre

THERE is an unusually long and very varied Rialto Magazine this week, with a lot of laughs in it and then a comedy, as usual at the end, to make us forget the rather tense qualities of the feature picture.

"Romeo and Juliet" is the overture. There is a very sombre, tragic note through this which we don't care so much for in connection with motion pictures, but of course it is a wonderful selection. It is played with the house lights all in gold, opening on the strings and reeds with the horns and drums coming in at the end.

"Northern Norway" is the scenic, an Educational release, and this gives us some interesting views of the snow-covered mountains and then the country with its shallow lakes and the little towns with their thatched roofs. Lalo's "Rhapsodie" is used for this picture.

Seated in the center of the stage without the curtains parted Leonard Van Dyke, cellist, then plays "Tarentella" and after that comes the Rialto Magazine, opening with Gaumont pictures of reopening the cabal at Ostend which the British blocked.



Striking lobby decoration of the Verdi theatre, Chicago

New York's Way

There are some fine views of the Mole showing how the English did their work. Extracts from "Pomp and Circumstance" are used here and others with the Pathe pictures of the German delegates. Then we have a touch of humor with the "Sayinks of Topplitsky," which includes "In business if you don't at first succeed, fail, fail again." "Polka Dot" is used.

Kinograms shows pictures of returning Canadians at Montreal bringing with them captured German guns and other souvenirs of their victories and here "Fighting Tommies" increases the applause. International shows us the annual stock show at the University of California agricultural school and "Long Boy" is used for it and for Kinogram views of operating on fish in Chicago. Then are the Pathe duck pictures, described to the music of "Crow Hollow" and the Panama Canal views to "I Miss That Mississippi Miss" with effects used.

There is a good series of laughs with the Silk Hat Harry Stock Company (Judge Rumhauser) in "A Run for His Money." There are effects used all through this and the orchestra has the time of its life with whistles, bells. At the start of the picture there is one strain of "Spaklets" and then a chorus of "Louisiana," following through with "Honey Bunch" until the title "Mad dog," when there is a change to "Club Gallop" and with the title "Three weeks later" to "The Bee."

We come back to the news with Kinogram pictures of the C-5. Here the music is so arranged that it affects the audience. "Ever or Never" being played with special arrangements. Gaumont pictures show navy balloons trying for distance records and then there are the International parachute views, described. Kinograms winds up the Magazine with pictures of New York's "finest" on parade. "Keep Going" is played from the Dayton views to the end.

Then we have the brilliant rendition of the trio from "William Tell" by Martin Brefel, Edoard Albano and Emanuel List and then the feature, Pauline Frederick in "One Week of Life." "Remembrance" is played at the screening and is followed through with "Camelia" and with the introduction of Scott we have "Saint Malo" changing to "Mountain Music" as the husband is seen on the couch. When we have Miss Frederick introduced as Marion "Bon Vivant" becomes the air and then with Lola's studio feast "Listen to This."

With the title "In the morning hours" "Rendezvous" is played and with the following day "At Sunset." Where the Sherwood couple are seen together there is "Melancolie" and with the interrupted rest hour another change to "Harrison Fisher." Where the girl declares that she adores children there is "In Love" played and then the organ takes up the music until the title "Midnight" and then when the husband asks "You're my wife, aren't you?" "Melodie" is brought in and then when he reads of the drowning of Scott and his wife "Leit Motif" is used and when he asks the girl to remain and be Mrs. Sherwood "Deluge" is played changing to "Why?" with the title "Do you mean what you say?"

House lights are blue for the second orchestral number, "Yankee Patrol," which opens with the rumble of drums and the blare of cornets and continues tuneful and very militant throughout.

"A Lady Bell Hop's Secret" is the very funny Sunshine comedy. "Oh, Lady, Lady" is played at the screening and then with the two old college chums "Step With Pep." With the title "He was all set" there is a change to "Archibald" and another to "Kinky" as the man is hit. When we are told that Slim was one of the lightest sleepers we have "Valse Doris" and then as the man shakes out the coat with the dust on it "Watch, Hope and Wait." At the point where the vacuum cleaner explodes "Ruspana" is taken up and played through twice, and this is followed by "Jazzing the Blues Away."

When we hve the regular annual celebration of Betty's sixteenth birthday "Wedding Blues" is used, changing to "Dinner Time on the Levee" as the pair try to steal the safe and to "Furore Galop" as the auto starts. It is played through twice and then follows "Trolley Galop" to the end.

Kewpie Dolls Are Converted Into Cannibals to Advertise Johnson Pictures

VERDI THEATRE, Thirty-fifth Street and Armitage Avenue, Chicago, put over a wonderfully striking lobby display during the recent showing of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," but it probably scored an even greater success with a clever little stunt—a result of the manager who thinks.

Every one has seen Kewpie dolls, but he is the first man to think of converting them into cannibals. Dyeing the dolls black and clothing them in grass-skirts and placing rings in their noses and ears, did the trick and the result was that every merchant in the section was glad to display them in his window. Reports from Chicago say that there were constantly crowds in front of the stores displaying these, and notices of the showing of the picture, and that they created an immense amount of word-of-mouth publicity.

The South Sea idea was excellently carried out in the lobby display as the photograph above shows. Grass hut effects were used, the ticket booth being converted into one and thatched doorways being erected around the entrance and exits. For the background there was a scene looking to sea from one of the islands and a number of palm trees. With the exception of one cut out and a couple of three sheets announcing the production, there were no other decorations.

This is a display that can be duplicated by any exhibitor and at very little expense. It is so striking that it is bound to attract attention of all passers-by and the experience of the Verdi theatre was that it not only brought big business but that it led to inquiries by many people who rarely attend motion picture exhibitions.

And the kewpies in the store windows sent lots of people down to see the lobby display.

Live News from the Producers

Ashley and Lonergan Join World Pictures

World Pictures announces the engagement of Arthur Ashley, well known as a screen star and director. Mr. Ashley and Phillip Lonergan, one of the best known scenario writers, is to co-star with Dorothy Green in a series of pictures. The first of these productions is now in work at the company's studio at Fort Lee. It will be released under the title of "The American Way." Frank Reicher will be the director. The original story is the creation of Florence Bolles, and was put in scenario form by Wallace C. Clifton..

Mr. Lonergan is to be on the staff of scenario and continuity writers under the direction of Charles Sarver, editor-in-chief.

He began his career as a writer of short stories, contributing to the best known of American magazines and weeklies. His picture experience has been with Reliance-Majestic, Thanhauser, and other landmarks of the industry. He is the author of "The World and the Woman," the screen version of "King Lear"; "The Girl Who Wanted to Live," "The Candy Girl," "Saint, Devil and Woman," "Her Beloved Enemy," and "My Country."

Exhibitor Praises Stewart Vitagraph Feature

A Vitagraph announcement declares that B. Lee Smith, manager of the Tudor Theatre, Atlanta, recently finished a week's run of "From Headquarters" at his theatre, and was so satisfied with the business garnered that he made haste to communicate with the Atlanta branch of Vitagraph to request first-run booking of the succeeding Anita Stewart release, "Two Women." This latter production Mr. Smith presented at the Tudor for the week of May 19th.

Mr. Smith, in a letter to George R. Allison, manager of Vitagraph's Atlanta branch, pays this tribute to "From Headquarters:"

"This Vitagraph picture is strong, intensely human, thrilling and satisfying. My patrons were delighted with the production."

Educationals to Support "Fit to Win"

Sales Manager John J. Iris, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has completed an arrangement that will provide "Educational" releases as the supporting program in connection with the showing of the Government health film, "Fit to Win," in Greater New York. Four theatres in Manhattan and one in Brooklyn are expected to use the program for an indefinite run.

To Re-Issue Sunshine Comedies

William Fox Will Release Second Edition Under the Group Name of "The Lucky Thirteen"

Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, in "The Divorce Trap," a current release

"BY command of the exhibitors of America, we have decided to release, with brand new prints and brand new paper, the second edition of the thirteen biggest and best Fox Sunshine Comedies we have made," says Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation. This statement is the opening gun of a campaign inaugurated to meet an exhibitor demand for comedies which is said to be unprecedented in the history of the motion picture business.

These Fox Sunshine Comedies, each in two reels, are to be released as a group under the name of "The Lucky Thirteen," and will be issued one each week throughout June, July and August. The first release, June 1, will be "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells."

The new prints that have been prepared especially for this series are from revised and re-edited negatives, and the resulting pictures are declared by the Fox organization to be even funnier and snappier than the original releases.

The new lithographs, it is asserted, will be the most elaborate and effective yet provided with Fox Sunshine Comedies, emphasizing the lions, the pretty girls and the unique situations which have been characteristic features of these productions from the very outset.

"This news," says Mr. Robbins, "is beyond question will be most important and most welcome to exhibitors throughout the country. The exhibitor's biggest problem right now is to find a good comedy to dress up his program properly. 'The Lucky Thirteen' solves this problem, and solves it right.

"The Rivoli theatre in New York and a host of representative theatres throughout the country have recently played the second edition of 'The House of Terrible Scandals.' Based upon the results attending its successful and uproarious engagement, these exhibitors have asked us to continue second editions of those most wonderful comedies."

The success of Fox Sunshine Comedies is attributed by Fox officials to the originality of the situations, the dare-devil stunts, the bevies of pretty girls who figure in them and to the antics of the comical animals. Elaborate production is also declared to be a large factor in their popularity.

Selection of the subjects to be included in "The Lucky Thirteen," according to Mr. Robbins, has been made on a basis of exhibitor reports. In writing to request that a second edition of Fox Sunshine Comedies be issued many exhibitors expressed preferences as to the comedies which should be included in the series. The following list covers comedies which the exhibitors agree have produced the most laughs:

"Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," "A Milk-Fed Vamp," "His Smashing Career," "Damaged No-Goods," "Shadows of Her Pest," "The Son of a Gun," "Hungry Lions in a Hospital," "Are Married Policeman Safe?" "A Self-Made Lady," "A Neighbor's Keyhole," "Wild Women" and Tame Lions," "A Tight Squeeze" and "Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express."

The group plan of releasing these productions, it is pointed out, enables the exhibitor to solve a whole summer's perplexing problems with one booking.

Miss Billie Burke's Latest Is "Misleading Widow"

"Billeted," the play by T. Jennyson-Jesse and H. M. Harwood, which Frances Marion adapted for Paramount presentation with Billie Burge as the star, has been retitled "The Misleading Widow." The new title is one of the first selected under a new system now in vogue at the Famous Players-Lasky offices, whereby a prize of ten dollars is given the member of the home office organization who submits the best title from the synopsis of the story of a picture which it has been deemed best to retitle. Each employee is allowed to submit to Whitman Bennett two titles, and from those submitted the executives of the company make the selection. The $10 prize for suggesting "The Misleading Widow" was won by Miss Sally Brody, of the Sales Department.

Barthelmess Scores Once More

Peter Milne Tries to Induce Him to Talk

JUST as Henry Walthall's reputation was made for seemingly all time through his performance in "The Birth of a Nation," so is that of Richard Barthelmess made in D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms." His work in pictures to come will be forever widely press agented by his work as the poetic Chinaman in the tragic epic of the screen. This is said with all due credit to Mr. Barthelmess' other performances as leading man for Marguerite Clark and, of more recent date for Dorothy Gish. But even Mr. Barthelmess himself impresses one with admitting that his "Chink" is his greatest performance.

We say impresses for Mr. Barthelmess refuses to talk about himself. He came on to New York to breathe some of the Atlantic air and to witness the premier of "Broken Blossoms" at the Cohan theatre. When an interviewer waxes enthusiastic about his wonderful performance and his equally wonderful makeup all he will do is smile and tell you that he only blocked out his eyebrows and set his face. He is indeed a very unsatisfactory person to interview. If one wanted to find out what a great director Griffith is, he might well talk to Mr. Barthelmess but this wasn't the main idea of the interview.

Asked what picture he was working on now, Mr. Barthelmess replied: "A western production, the next Griffith-Artcraft. Sort of a Bret Harte type of story. And then I have my contract with the Dorothy Gish company to fulfill. This lasts to the end of the present year. After that—."

Well after that Mr. Barthelmess isn't going to find it very hard to find work.

It was back when Herbert Brennon was producing for Selznick that Mr Barthelmess made his picture debut, taking the role of one of the brothers in Nazimova's first production "War Brides." Following this came five successive pictures with Marguerite Clark including the two "Sub Deb" productions, then with Goldwyn in "Nearly Married," and Vitagraph in "Wild Primrose." And after that with Griffith in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" and as leading man for Dorothy Gish in her Paramount pictures.

In other words Richard Barthelmess was practically unknown two years ago—that is on the screen. To-day he ranks as one of the leading juveniles on the screen. Quite a ranking and quite speedily attained for a young man of twenty-four years of age.—Peter Milne.

Moreno Signs New Contract With Vitagraph

NEWS comes from the West Coast studios of Vitagraph to the effect that Antonio Moreno has just signed a new contract insuring two more years of starring activities in the Vitagraph serials.

"The contract was signed a few days ago under circumstances which speak well for the complete harmony existing between producer and player in the Vitagraph organization," said an official of the company. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, Inc., who is at present in Los Angeles, made an engagement for an interview with Mr. Moreno at 3 o'clock in his office. At that time, Mr. Moreno appeared. Twenty minutes later, he was seen to leave the office, and bystanders catching a momentary glimpse of the two men framed in the doorway, saw them heartily shaking hands.

"In that short time," said the official, "the contract renewing Mr. Moreno's services for two years had been signed. Nothing speaks more eloquently the complete satisfaction of a star when a document so momentous to all concerned is signed in so few minutes."

What is declared to be a factor in Mr. Moreno's ready acceptance to serve Vitagraph further, entirely aside of the remuneration involved, was his realization that this organization has spent a million to bring his undoubted talents for the delineation of screen characterization before the public, with the result of an evergrowing circle of followers.

"This circle now mounts to the tens of thousands, and the mere announcement of a Moreno serial is tantamount to packed houses on showing."

Mr. Moreno, with Carol Holloway, is now engaged in the filming of "Perils of Thunder Mountain."

Karger Discusses Metro's Production Policy

THE motion picture as an art is making tremendous strides and will advance more in this direction within the next two years than it has since its inception, according to Maxwell Karger, Director General of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., who has arrived in New York from California to consult with other Metro officials on their new production policy, which President Richard A. Rowland recently announced.

Nazimova's sensational feature, "The Red Lantern," he points to as an example of what the future screen production will aim at. Overnight, he says, this famous star has advanced the art of the photodrama ten years, and coming productions will use this as a standard to measure their features by.

"Stories, acting, direction, and production are all on a higher plane now," Mr. Karger says, "and the future is to see even greater advancements in these fields.

"Metro, anticipating this more discriminating taste and eager to encourage better pictures, has already made elaborate preparations to be the first in the field with the bigger, better picture."

Mr. Karger is a strong advocate of good sub-titles. In fact he believes that the success or failure of a production often lies in the sub-title.

He will return to the coast within a few days, taking back with him the screen rights to some of the biggest plays and novels of the last decade, it is stated.

"Daddy Long-Legs" is said to be Mary Pickford's best picture. First National will distribute it from twenty-five exchanges

Nicholas Power Company Reports Expansion

The home of the Nicholas Power Company, at 90 Gold street, New York City, is being enlarged to take care of the reported increase in business. Power's Cameragraphs are said to be in such demand that new machinery is also being installed.

It is reported that "Fires of Faith," the Salvation Army production, being shown at the Harris theatre, is projected by a Power's machine, and that this accounts for the many favorable comments on the superior projection reported.

The United Theatre Equipment Corporation, through its various branches, reports sales of Cameragraphs within the last few days to Colonial theatre, Manchester Depot, Vermont; State of New Jersey, Village of Epileptics, Skillman, N. J.; Library theatre, Warren, Pa.; E. L. Garden, Souris, N. Dak.; A. W. Hall, Front Royal, Va.; Victory theatre, New York City.

"A Midnight Romance" Plays to Big Houses

"A Midnight Romance," the second First National attraction starring Anita Stewart, has just played to a series of packed houses, it is stated, at the Superba theatre at San Diego, according to a letter received by W. E. Knotts, manager of the First National Exchange in Los Angeles, from G. A. Bush, owner of the theatre.

"We advertised the picture in a big way, and we arranged some novel lobby effects," Mr. Bush said. "It is a hummer, and I recommend it."

Harrison Back to Screen

"Anybody's Widow" a new Christie Comedy, which is personally being directed by Al E. Christie featuring Dorothy De Vore with Earle Rodney, marks the return of Jimmie Harrison to the screen after an absence of eighteen months in the army, part of which Harrison spent with the 55th ammunition train in France.

Forms the John D. Tippett Productions

B. P. Schulberg's Recent Resignation from United Artists Explained by Formation of New Corporation to Create International Film Exchange Heralded as Novel Departure

THE explanation of B. P. Schulberg's resignation from the United Artists Corporation is found in the formation of John D. Tippett Productions, a corporation which will operate film distributing depots throughout the world, and the principal of which is John D. Tippett, Managing Director of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd., of London, the European corollary of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. of America.

Mr. Tippett is known throughout Europe as one of the most prominent film executives abroad and recognized in financial circles as well as a man of means. Added to his own resources, however, are said to be some of the strongest financial powers that have ever been interested in the film industry. He left America for England six years ago and inaugurated and conducted the European distribution of Universal Pictures. He founded the name of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co. for this purpose and has since made this trademark a potent factor in European film circles. Mr. Tippett is said to be the only American in the history of the motion picture industry to operate consistently throughout Europe through his own offices. Other American concerns are declared to have been following the practice of combining with European film houses for this purpose.

London Headquarters

The plan of John D. Tippett Productions is to operate distributing offices in all the principal cities of the world, with its chief office in London. Immediately upon his arrival in America, Mr. Tippett engaged B. P. Schulberg as manager of the enterprise in America, and the unlimited scope of the plan was so attractive to the latter, that it prompted him to resign as assistant general manager of the United Artists to assume this post.

With this combination of international film experience and unlimited monetary resources, it is said that the Tippett forces contemplate the construction of a mammoth international film company which will be of service to the industry on both sides of the Atlantic, with an international exchange in all corners of the civilized world.

Mr. Tippett believes that London is the natural capital of the commercial branch of the film industry, and that in the future the English film mart will dominate the moving picture markets of the world. In selecting London as his chief base of operations, therefore, he is only consistent with his theory that the commercial future of the industry will be dictated from the British capital.

It is said that the motivating reason for the creation of John D. Tippett Productions is his recognition of the new trend in film circles which is leading the motion picture toward the big special production individually exploited. It is in recognition of this fact that Mr. Tippett is forming this new company to conform with the more modern principle of film distributing.

Issues a Statement

In line with this thought, in a statement which he left for the American trade press just before he sailed for London a few days ago, Mr. Tippett said:

"For a long time it has been borne in upon us in Europe, as it must have been upon the trade in America, that the new era of special productions distributed on an individual basis, with each picture considered as a unique and distinctive attraction, is fast approaching, if not indeed already in our midst.

John D. Tippett, who has organized the John D. Tippett Productions

"Under these circumstances, any far-seeing film executive would be induced to adjust his organization to adapt itself to the new system of specialized distribution. Therefore, in taking this radical step, I am doing what any far-sighted business man would do, with the dawn of a new distributing regime showing itself so clearly over the film horizon.

"There is another very important factor in the situation which I believe is not being given sufficiently serious consideration by American film men—that is, the necessity for recognizing London in the future as the center, from a commercial view-point, of the film activities of the world. Geographically and financially situated as it is, nothing that I can foresee can disturb the conclusion that London is the logical bourse of the film industry.

"This statement may cause a controversy among film men in America, but I am prepared to meet such a contest of opinion with facts that are beyond dispute. London will undoubtedly dominate the film markets of the world in the future, because the European market, now that the war is over, will assume more and more importance to the American producer, and London is the natural key to the entire European film situation.

"It will be part of our plan to acquire all foreign rights, outside of United States and Canada, to the most meritorious American subjects obtainable, and to introduce into America the most ambitious film offerings of Europe, thus maintaining the first effective international film exchange ever established, and the only one ever devoted to this single purpose.

Extols Mr. Schulberg

"I am deeply gratified to have been able to secure the services of B. P. Schulberg to manage our affairs in America. His personal integrity and long conspicuous standing in the film industry in the United States bespeak that high standard of business ethics with which we will manage our offices throughout the world, so that any transactions with us will be not only a profitable, but a pleasant process."

Mr. Schulberg is now arranging for the inauguration of distributing offices in South America and the Orient, and the company began active operations immediately upon Mr. Tippett's return to London.

It is declared to be a peculiar coincidence that just at the time that Mr. Tippett boldly predicts the coming supremacy of London as the film center of the world, one of the biggest producing and distributing concerns in America is arranging to form a British counterpart of itself for the purpose of producing pictures in Great Britain, and a great number of important film executives are hastening to the other side, if indeed they are not there already, to form affiliations for their companies with English film agencies.

Goldwyn Tests Normand's Popularity

Goldwyn applied one of the most difficult tests of the popularity of a cinema star to Mabel Normand when they arranged to show her latest picture, "When Doctors Disagree," unannounced and unadvertised, at the Harlem Grand theatre, 119 East 125th Street, on May 9th. Late in the afternoon, the management of the Grand, a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,600 and which draws a metropolitan audience, agreed to show "When Doctors Disagree" without any previous announcement to their patrons.

The result proved conclusively it is said that Mabel Normand's personality holds the affections of thousands, to whom her unique kind of funmaking brings cheer and relaxation after a busy day.

Robertson-Cole Units are Busy

Every Effort Is Extended to Give Exhibitors Fine Type of Photoplays for Summer Season

THE various producing units of the Robertson-Cole Company, Division of Films, are bending every effort to fulfill the promises of the parent organization to give exhibitors, during the approaching summer months, the finest type of photoplays as a bulwark against the customary poor hot season business.

Four pictures are now in the course of construction in California, which promise in every way, it is declared, to be the equal of anything that Robertson-Cole has thus far issued through Exhibitors Mutual distribution.

The great outdoors furnishes the locale for three of the attractions under way, productions which are of the blood-warming type, and which will have a strong appeal, it is said, for any one who likes stirring drama.

Sessue Hayakawa, now that "His Debt" has been made ready for release, is working on "The Gray Horizon," which, when completed, will be one of the most artistic photoplays ever made in America, according to a statement by Haworth.

"Bare-Fisted Gallagher," the next William Desmond picture, is being filmed by Jesse D. Hampton in a picturesque but remote section of the San Gabriel Canyon, under the direction of Joseph J. Franz.

Billie Rhodes' "In Search of Arcady," another attraction which breathes of the romantic country of the Far West, has been virtually completed.

Bessie Barriscale, starring in her own productions, is now filming "Tangled Threads," which will be her next issue following "Josselyn's Wife."

"The Gray Horizon," on which Hayakawa is now working, has as its background the splendor of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. The entire setting of the picture is in the hills, and every advantage has been taken of the extraordinary light and cloud formations that occur over these beautiful mountains.

"Bare-Fisted Gallagher" was especially written for Desmond by William Parker, author of "What Every Woman Wants," and other successes. The San Gabriel Canyon, where the Desmond company is camped, was reached only after a long automobile journey from Los Angeles, and nearly an eighteen-mile mule ride into the mountains.

M. B. Havey, head of the scenario staff of B. B. Features, is author of "Tangled Threads," the Barriscale feature. Fred Myton made the screen version.

In "In Search of Arcady" Miss Rhodes is seen in one of the most loveable characterizations she has had.

Harry Garson Announces Production Plans

NOT only will all future productions starring Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet be made at the Garson studios in Los Angeles, but a series of motion picture dramas to be known as Katterjohn Specials will also be produced there under the supervision of the screen author, Monte M. Katterjohn.

This was made known by Harry Garson during his short visit in New York City last week.

"In securing the Katterjohn Specials," said Mr. Garson, "I was guided by my belief in youth and its enthusiastic tendencies where it has already shown vision and ability. Mr. Katterjohn's independent thought and past achievements justify the opportunity this serious presents.

"I have read the first story and also its detailed continuity, and feel thoroughly convinced that it will make a truly big box-office attraction. He has devoted many months in its preparation, intent upon making it the criterion for his future productions. I am also familiar with the plans for the pictures to follow, and the series recommends itself as an impressive array of valuable material.

"Distribution plans are now being perfected which will permit an unusual exploitation campaign of national scope."

W. H. Rudolph, Eastern representative for Mr. Garson, with offices in the Aeolian Building, New York City, stated that further details will be announced in the very near future, and that in the meantime Mr. Katterjohn is perfecting final plans.

Jos. Schenck Buys Stories for Talmadge

The Constance Talmadge Film Corporation's first picture to be released through the First National Exhibitors Circuit, was scheduled for May 26th. Several different stories have been purchased by Jos. M. Schenck, president of the new corporation, it is said, and the name of the first picture will be announced definitely in a few days. No expense will be spared to make this first First National picture, in every way, one of the most satisfactory productions, both from the artistic standpoint, it is declared, and with the careful view to the exhibitors' needs and popular appeal to the public, which has ever been released with Constance Talmadge in the stellar role.

The director for the first of the six Constance Talmadge productions will be Captain David Kirkland, who has come on from California to assume directorial duties for Miss Talmadge.

Fairbanks' Latest Is Said to Be His Best

Douglas Fairbanks makes his re-appearance as "Old Doc Cheerful," in his newest, and what is declared to be his greatest Artcraft picture, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," which was released May 18. The moral of the story is that doing something for somebody is a worthy and laudible ambition, but that unselfishness can sometimes be carried too far, and unless guided by calm judgment, may bring the unselfish one results he does not expect; and, secondly, that the proper place to start any reconstruction in character is at home.

In the cast are Marjorie Daw, William Wellman, Frank Campeau, Albert McQuarrie and Edythe Chapman. Albert Parker directed.

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

Laemmle Looks Out for the Exhibitor

The Demand of the Day Is for Bigger and Better Pictures and Productions, Says Company's President, and Universal's Ear Is to the Ground

ON the eve of its seventh anniversary, Universal announces its new policy as in keeping with its conception of the growth and development of the motion picture industry.

As an instance of this the exhibitor who obtains his pictures from Universal, will not only buy as heretofore under the open booking policy, but will be able to see what he purchases, it is stated, far in advance of the time for the showing of the productions he thus books. Amongst the productions which will be screened for the exhibitor will be the Stage Women's War Relief series of stage star pictures in which many famous players will appear, pictures starring Dorothy Phillips, Mildred Harris and others; "The Midnight Man," starring James J. Corbett; products by Eddie Polo; a new serial with Marie Wolcamp; and Universal Special Attractions, featuring Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey, Mary MacLaren and Priscilla Dean. The improved Screen Magazine will also be a weekly product. There are also said to be some big Universal productions in the making which will be brought forth later.

Announces New Policy

As Universal approaches the conclusion of the most successful year in its career, it not only celebrates its seventh anniversary as the oldest producing firm in the industry, but at the same time it announces its new policy for the ensuing season.

Long before next Fall, it is announced, Universal Exchanges will be in possession of new productions to be shown to exhibitors. The exhibitor, consequently, who obtains his pictures from Universal will not only buy as heretofore under Universal's famous fundamental open booking policy, but, in addition, will be able to see what he purchases far in advance of the time for the showing of the productions he thus books.

This is a distinctly new departure. It is in keeping, however, with Universal's established custom of rendering maximum assistance and protection to the exhibitor in purchasing wares for his theatre and his patrons.

New Productions

Among the productions which Universal will be able to screen for the exhibitor will be the famous Stage Women's War Relief series of stage star pictures. As has previously been announced, there are twelve two-reel productions in this series, bringing together for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, it is said, so illustrious a group of actors and actresses of both the speaking stage and the screen. In the first picture of this series appears David Belasco, seen thus for the first time playing a role since he became famous as one of America's greatest producers and managers.

Among the other famous footlight favorites in the casts of these pictures—all of them two-reel productions—are:

Pete Morrison has been assigned to appear in Universal Westerns

This brings together for the first time an aggregation of players said to be never before assembled in a single series of productions for the screen. All these plays, moreover—comedies and dramas—are by famous playwrights and scanarists, such as Frederick A. Kummer, Calder Johnstone, Kathleen Kavanaugh, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Rachel Crothers.

In addition, it is announced, the exhibitor will have placed before him some of the largest, most elaborate and most satisfactory and most satisfying Jewel productions ever shown under this famous brand name—the brand which, it is declared, was the first to convert the theory of exhibitors' open booking into actual fact. There will be, in this group, pictures starring Mildred Harris, Dorothy Phillips and other players whose names have become familiar the whole world over through their appearance in the Jewel products.

At the same time Universal will show to the exhibitors what has been described as the greatest serial ever produced—"The Midnight Man," in which James J. Corbett is starred. There will be also products by Eddie Polo and a new serial starring Marie Walcamp.

There will be more Universal Special Attractions, starring Monroe Salisbury, Harry Carey, Mary MacLaren and Priscilla Dean. Priscilla Dean will be cast in a limited number of Universal Super-Special Attractions. Her great popularity has increased in recent months to such an extent, it is declared, that the Universal star is now looked upon as one of the most attractive and winsome and winning feminine stars of the screen.

Universal will show, too, its improved, unique Screen Magazine, a weekly product which is stated to have behind it the cooperative advertising support of half a hundred of the largest daily newspapers in the country.

There will also be some Universal productions which cannot be submitted to this program of advance showing. These, now in the making, will be brought forth later. Thousands of dollars are being spent upon them, it is declared, but the nature of these productions is being guarded as a secret by Universal's officials, and for the time being, it is said, this secrecy must be maintained.

Laemmle Outlines Plans

These plans, as briefly outlined by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, are declared to be the most comprehensive in the company's history. "The demand of the day," Mr. Laemmle says, "as I have repeatedly said during the last eighteen months, is for bigger and better pictures and productions. Universal, as usual, has been awake. Its ear has been to the ground. Accordingly it not only now draws near to the completion of its most prosperous season of business but begins, at the same time, its most eventful and most successful year. On the eve of its seventh anniversary it announces a policy that is in keeping with its conception of the growth and development of the motion picture industry.

"Just as we have reduced our studio waste to the very minimum," Mr. Laemmle continued, "so will we reduce our selling costs to the very minimum, especially in next Fall's selling campaign. And, what's more, those exhibitors who help us reduce selling costs will receive the lion's share of all that they help us to save.

"Our plan is simply this: We have goods to sell. The exhibitor wants some of them, or all of them or none of them. It will depend entirely upon how good our pictures are, whether he wants many or few or none.

"We will first fix a fair price on each and every picture and then sell the exhibitor anything he wants."

"Big Four" Distributes Own Film

United Artists Aim to Open Distributing Depots in Fifteen Key Cities in States — Abrams Names Executive Staff

HIRAM ABRAMS, general manager of United Artists' Corporation, let it be known this week that plans are under way for the establishing of fifteen distributing depots—as the "Big Four" branch offices will be called—in the most important film centers of the country. Distributing Depots will be located in New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C.; Boston, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, New Orleans, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Dallas.

Following its first release, a Douglas Fairbanks picture, on September 1 next, United Artists' Corporation will release through its Distributing Depots its Mary Pickford productions, its Charlie Chaplin productions, its Douglas Fairbanks productions, and its D. W. Griffith productions. As announced last week, these pictures will be put out on the basis of straight open booking, the "Big Four" being committed to rental by the single picture only.

Ralph O. Proctor takes the post of assistant general manager. Mr. Proctor brings to the organization some twelve years of experience in every phase of the film rental business, with several years of exhibitor experience as a foundation. He has literally covered every section of the country, and his wide acquaintance with exhibitors and the problems peculiar to different territories makes his appointment by Mr. Abrams of prime importance to the picture theatres of the country. It bears out Mr. Abrams early promise that his organization was to be made up of men who had won their spurs on the firing line of the business.

Kenneth Hodkinson has been appointed business manager and assistant to Mr. Abrams. Mr. Hodkinson has had a number of years of intensive training and experience in the exchange end of the business both on the Pacific Coast and in the East, and has been associated with Mr. Abrams heretofore in the same position that he will hold with the "Big Four."

William W. Hines carries to his post as sales manager of United Artists' Corporation the experience of twenty years in the theatrical and motion picture business. Among his earlier associations were the publicity department of the Keith Circuit, advance representative for the Frohman productions, and an independent film exchange which he owned and managed. In more recent years Mr. Hines has been identified with the sales management of several of the big distributing companies, and was formerly with Mr. Abrams in the capacity that will have his attention with the "Big Four."

Paul N. Lazarus has been appointed advertising and publicity manager. Mr. Lazarus goes to United Artists' Corporation after a number of years in similar work in the film field. For ten years prior to his connection with the motion picture business, he was on the advertising and promotion end of the publishing business, some five years of that time being spent with the Hearst group of magazines—Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, Hearst's, Harper's Bazaar, Motor and Motor Boating

Mr. Abrams stated that he would very soon be ready to announce the names of his sales managers, who are to be in charge of the fifteen Distributing Depots. Pending the announcement of the opening of these fifteen offices, all the business of the company and the advance bookings of the first Fairbanks release for September are being handled at the home office on the ninth floor at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"THERE will be no let-up on the continued exploitation, advertising and publicity of the 'Ham and Bud' single-reel comedies," declared F. E. Backer, general sales manager of the one-a-week releases for Jans Productions, Inc.

"Our campaign is directed only to the exhibitor and for the exhibitor instead of to the state-right buyers. The theatre owner knows more than any one else the exact value of a well-produced cleverly constructed ridiculously funny comedy subject, and these same exhibitors have long memories.

"They, therefore, know the exceptional entertaining value of Ham and Bud. We can depend upon the exhibitors themselves to demand these single-reel comedies which have proved up so strongly five years ago. And as every exhibitor has a decidedly new list of patrons to-day, he knows that these proved successes will appeal to them strongly.

"And the styles in dress do not change in comedies as they do in society plays, and therefore like rare old wine, the Ham and Bud comedies will never lose their entertaining qualities through a mere matter of dress. Every print is new and of the ninety-two prints we purchased from the Kalem Company, we have chosen fifty-two of the best to be released, one a week for a year.

"I feel assured that the exhibitor demand is already so strong that the state-rights men throughout the various territories will be compelled to secure the rights as soon as possible."

Not only are Ham and Bud starred in all these single-reelers, but the leading woman is Ethel Teare, described as one of the most beautiful and clever comediennes of the screen. When Jans Production Company, Inc., recently purchased the Tom Mix reissues from Selig, the territory was disposed of in what is claimed to be a record-breaking manner.

It is now practically all closed, and the "Ham and Bud" comedies bid fair to go just as rapidly according to the great volume of inquiries which Mr. Backer reports having received. A striking one-sheet and 11 x 14 sepias are furnished with the Ham and Bud comedies.

Simplex Notes

Mormon Churches Adopt Simplex

FROM Salt Lake City, Utah, where the Morman church was first established, and which city is today the leading center of Mormon activities, comes the report through E. D. Smith, manager of the Utah branch of the Swanson-Nolan Theatre Equipment Co., Simplex distributors, that recently the following Mormon church wards installed the Simplex:

Roosevelt, Utah.
Bountiful, Utah.
Farmers and Wardamere Wards, Salt Lake City,

Vancouver's Finest Theatre Installs Simplex

The Perkins Electric Company's Western Branch manager, J. M. Rice, reports to the Simplex factory that there is considerable activity in the motion picture business since the cessation of hostilities, and notes a marked change for the better within the past few weeks. Machine sales, he says, are rapidly mounting up.

Among the Simplex installations within two weeks are those at the Osborn Theatre, Winnipeg, recently built and seating one thousand, where two Type "S" machines were installed; one Type "S" Simplex at the Dominion Theatre, Vancouver's finest moving picture house, and one Type "S" machine in the Province Kansack, Saskatchewan, and the Orpheum Theatre, Fernie, B. C., respectively.

Diamonds Used in Construction of Simplex

The diamond plays a very important part in the building of the Simplex Projector. In the large Grinding Department of the Simplex factory are located ten up-to-date grinders upon which are ground to a mirror finish and to the thousandth fraction of an inch the important working parts and bearings of the Simplex.

One of the features of these grinders is the magnetic table upon which are laid the parts to be ground. Rather than depend upon the operator placing a part on the grinding table in an incorrect position and in order to facilitate the work, these tables are equipped with magnet coils. The piece of work to be ground is placed firmly upon this table, the switch thrown in and instantly the article to be ground is rigidly held to the polished surface of the table. The grinder is set in motion with the table operating forward and back beneath the emery wheel, this wheel in all cases being carefully selected for the particular job of grinding at hand.

And here is where the diamond plays its part. In order to keep the emery wheel perfectly true both as regards to circumference and surface facing, it is necessary to smooth them off or "trim" them. There are various ways of accomplishing this end, but the very best, although the most costly, is that in which a good sized diamond is securely fastened to a short-stemmed pipe fitted on to a steel bar. This diamond is pressed against the swiftly revolving wheel and slowly rubbed across the face, producing an even positive grinding surface.

Says "Auction of Souls" Arouses Interest

"Auction of Souls," now being distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is being booked on the "see-it-and-take-it" plan by C. E. Holuh, Manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, First National franchise holders for Iowa and Nebraska. Mr. Holuh says the production promises to create a sensation in the middle west, where it has aroused the strongest commendation among exhibitors and others who have seen it.

Six on Broadway Create Record for Withey

Chester Withey, whose most recent picture, "The New Moon," in which Norma Talmadge is starred on the Select program, recently completed a year's record of which any director might well be proud. During the last year Mr. Withey has confined his efforts to the production of six features, every one of which earned prior place on the screens of New York's Broadway picture houses. Report also has it that they played in equally high-class first-run houses throughout the country.

Mr. Withey was the man responsible for "The Hun Within," an Artcraft subject, with an all-star cast of Griffith players, for "On the Quiet," with Jack Barrymore; "The Pursuit of Polly," with Billie Burke; "Maggie Pepper," with Ethel Clayton, and "Little Comrade," with Vivian Martin, all these being Paramount subjects. The pictures are widely divergent in nature, running the gamut of classification, including comedy, farce, melodrama and straight drama.

On completing "The New Moon," Mr. Withey was loaned by Joseph M. Schenck to the Paramount organization where he is now engaged in producing a special picture for this company, the nature of which is not revealed beyond the fact that there is no star and that the story is one of unusual strength and scope.

Announces European Contracts

Goldwyn Declares That Exhibitors in Central Europe Have Definitely Contracted for Entire Output up to September, 1919

Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn star of "The Fear Woman"

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, which some weeks ago made the first announcement of post-bellum European expansion with the signing of the peace treaty at Paris, now announces that exhibitors in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Poland, and in fact all countries that were cut off from distribution, have definitely contracted for the showing of the entire output of Goldwyn Pictures up to September 1919. Showings will start with the signing of the treaty which is now before the German delegation.

This means that every Goldwyn picture that has been made will now be sold in bulk to hundreds of European exhibitors. It means that Mittel Europa will get its first chance to see pictures made under the Goldwyn "ars gratia artis" emblem; for in the three years that Goldwyn Pictures have been in the making, perfect European distribution was impossible.

With regard to this spread in distribution, Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager of Goldwyn, has a statement to make. "Within the three years of their existence," says Mr. Ziehm, "Goldwyn Pictures have managed to practically cover the world. In all the countries of the globe, save Russia and the Balkan states, Goldwyn Pictures are shown in abundance.

"The results that Goldwyn Pictures have had in other countries has been so interesting as to stimulate a guess as to the work they will do in mid-Europe. There is no doubt that the Goldwyn type of picture has been a source of uplift to the amusement-going public of foreign nations.

"In China, Japan, the Phillipines, India, Burma, Ceylon, the Dutch East Indies, etc., blood and thunder is the dominant note in the popular appeal on stage or in picture. At first it was difficult for Goldwyn Pictures to find a foothold in these countries because of the melodrama which the Oriental public had learned to love.

"But I find to my increasing pleasure that Goldwyn Pictures, representing the refined and the clean in pictorial entertainment, are steadily growing in the public estimation of the Oriental audience.

"Belle of New York" Has London Revival

"The Belle of New York," the original stage production from which Marion Davies' Select Picture of the same name was adapted, has been revived in London with greater success, it is said, than at any time during the last twenty years it has been shown in that city. Select Pictures' version of the feature was released by Select about two months ago. Since that time it has played nearly all of the big first-run houses and hundreds of smaller exhibitors have also shown it. Without exception, it is declared, the screen version of "The Belle of New York" has been a box-office winner.

Sherry Appoints Representatives

Will Handle Sherry Sales Forces in all the Principal Sales Centers East and West

WILLIAM L. SHERRY, president of the Parex Film Corporation and the Sherry Service, has appointed within the last week representatives to handle Sherry sales forces out of Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, Buffalo and all principal sales centres East and West. Mr. Sherry is personally supervising the reorganization of the sales force, which will handle all sales direct through the Sherry Service, with physical distribution through Film Clearing House exchanges, except in New York City, Eastern New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut, which areas will receive films distributed direct through the Sherry Service general offices, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

The appointees are announced as:

G. W. Montgomery, with headquarters in Chicago, who has a force of twenty men covering Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Wisconsin and Iowa.

Joseph F. Young, with headquarters at Pittsburgh, who has fourteen men covering Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and Southern New Jersey.

Benjamin Levine, with headquarters at Buffalo, has three men covering Central and Western New York.

Frank J. Larkin, with headquarters at Boston, has six men covering the New England States.

The M. R. Film Corporation of San Francisco takes charge of sales in San Francosco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland and Denver, as well as intermediate territory. Representatives to have charge of the Atlanta, Ga., and Dallas, Tex., offices are in process of selection.

Mr. Sherry, who has just returned from a swing around the circle, expresses himself as confident of the sound future of the film industry and well satisfied with the outlook of the Sherry Service in every section of the country.

"It is not necessary to be a prophet or a seer," said Mr. Sherry, "to visualize enormous possibilities in the immediate future of the industry. Producers who were in doubt a few months ago as to the final conclusion of peace, are now satisfied that disturbing war factors in the situation will soon be eliminated, and the boldest among them began development on this basis some time ago.

"The result is already apparent in the increased confidence in all directions and a steady improvement in financial enterprise. This can scarcely be otherwise, in view of the tremendous native and foreign demand for everything American.

"My belief is that the outlook for all branches of the industry is most encouraging, and that such changes as are developing indicate healthy progress."

French Stars May Come to the United States

THAT William Fox is considering not only the filming of pictures in France, with American actors in the principal roles, but also contemplates engaging the best European actors for work in America, showing both sets of film throughout the world, is indictated by an interview he gave in Paris to a representative of the magazine, La Cinematographie Francaise, which says:

"In the course of the conversation Mr. Fox outlined the project of bringing to France the great American cinema stars, and of having them produce, in model studios, the scenarios of French authors. These films, according to him, would have one of the best means of more closely uniting the two countries, for they would be projected on the American screen. Following out the same line of ideas, he would engage our best French artists to produce in America films of the highest artistic type which would be exhibited on both sides of the Atlantic.

"But," added the American, "these ideas are still all in a purely theatrical state. I must study the practical end of it, and investigate various other details, which will decide my course of action."

The French writer goes on to state that "it is with all the energetic confidence which characterizes the business men of the United States that Mr. Fox and his collaborators enter the French market." Their first experiences have impressed them favorably, and serve only to increase their conviction that the Fox films will come to occupy a very important place in our programs, as well as the productions of other of the leading American houses.

Goldwyn Installs Distribution Night Shift

WITH the opening of two new exchange offices in Omaha and Salt Lake City, Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of Sales of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, announces that Goldwyn will be in a position to give overnight distribution in practically every city of the United States. There will be twenty-two Goldwyn "Service Stations" in as many branch offices.

With this expansion of Goldwyn distribution goes the determination expressed in the words of Mr. Feist to give the Goldwyn Exhibitor the best service and cooperation he has ever had offered him since the inception of the picture business.

"The value of giving service," says Mr. Feist, "has never been fully appreciated by the exhibitor. We are going to show the exhibitor that we do appreciate it. With the plans that Goldwyn is putting into effect right along, there can be only one result: that the business of the exhibitor will be the business of exhibiting and not the business of exploitation. Exploitation is the task of the distributor. Manufacturers of films must give their customers time to say "Hello, call again," to their patrons.

"With regard to publicity matter, Goldwyn is making special and progressive strides in the direction of an ideal system in every fair-sized city of the country."

Nazimova Feature Marks New Era, Says Metro

"The day of the month run, and, not in the very distanced future the era of the indefinite run, is at hand in motion pictures, according to exhibitors and exchangemen, who have been watching the phenomenal attendance records established by big theatres throughout the country showing Nazimova's newest super-feature, "The Red Lantern," declares Metro.

"Their prediction is based on the fact that in many cities where it has been showing for two weeks crowds have been greater in the last week, people being turned away by the thousands right up to the close of the engagement, than in the opening week.

"This has been the experience of the Merrill theatre in Milwaukee, the Rialto in Des Moines, the Plaza in San Diego, the Ziegfeld and Boston in Chicago, and the liberty in Kansas City, Mo."

Many Actors Registered with World Films

With the casting of "Phil For Short," the new World Picture now in process of production, with Evelyn Greeley as the star, there is said to be recorded on the books of the casting director of World Pictures over ten thousand actors who want to work in pictures.

At the studio at Fort Lee, which the World Pictures owns and where all pictures of this company are made, is kept a registry of actors in the files, which is stated to be as complete as human ingenuity can create, the name of the actor, what he has done in pictures as well as the spoken drama, his height, colorings, and general physical characteristics are kept. His address, telephone number, salary and, in fact, every available bit of information is said to be registered.

Morey Engages James

Gladden James, who played opposite Alice Joyce in "The Third Degree" has been engaged to play an important part, it is announced, in a new Harry Morey picture, which is now under production.

Mr. James is starting to come to the fore again after an illness which lasted over six months, and the coming productions, it is said, should see him back in his former stride.

"The Big Little Person"

"THE BIG LITTLE PERSON" says the Morning Telegraph, "is an appealing romance that gives Mae Murray opportunity to enact a role that is going to charm her admirers—a pretty characterization embellished by an attractively staged fairy tale." And Mae Murray is not the only "little person" in this perfectly delightful play, for there are many close-ups of some of the cutest children who ever went before a camera.

MAE MURRAY never fails to please for the reason that her plays are always surprises—always with a new twist, or distinctive settings, or fresh, unhackneyed humor, or delightful fancies in situations and costuming—generally, with all of these things to aid a personality which is one of the most engaging before the public today. View her at your nearest Universal Exchange in "The Big Little Person" and you'll see a picture that will charm 99½% of your audiences.

Mary MacLaren in "The Unpainted Woman"

THOSE who have Mary MacLaren in "The Unpainted Woman" on their list should understand that this is a homely story of love and the country, of a woman whom the title aptly describes, and that should be made plain. Here we have a character directly in contrast with anything of the vampirish, criminal, or high society stuff.

This is a story of country life, of the struggle of a woman for existence against all sorts of odds. There is some comedy element in it, but it is largely drama with a story that is very true to life. We would say so in the advertising without telling too much of the story itself, and you will probably get a lot of people to the theatre who will welcome a relief from the sensational.

In communities where there is a big working element stress should be laid on the point that this is the story of the fight of a "hired girl," a type especially familiar in the Northwest. You should say that this unpainted woman represents the ones of her sex to whom the nation owes so much.

Naturally the title will be played strong, and much reliance placed on the name of Miss MacLaren. You can safely tell your public that this story is entirely different from any in which she has appeared, and easily convince them with a few lines of selling argument.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they heve booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

SO the story runs: Gundrun Trygavson, a descendant of the Vikings, is a hard-working hired girl in the home of Mrs. Hawes, in Mullinville, in the heart of the wheat belt. Mrs. Hawes is one of the ultra pious sort who poses as a wonderful Christian, and then does a world of harm with her gossip. So in the evening when she is directing Gundrun to other work the girl reminds her of the promise that she couuld go to the dance that evening. Mrs. Hawes is shocked that he girl should go to a public dance unescorted, and a little later she is astounded when Gundrun explains that she is going with Charley Holt.

Now the Holts are the elite of the elite or the snobs of the snobs of the village. So Mrs. Hawes loses no time in getting Mrs. Holt on the 'phone, and informing her that her son is about to take a servant girl to the dance. Mother and daughter are shocked, and there is a scene, but the son shows a spark of manhood and defies them, but he shows his true character when he goes to Gundrun whimpering that every one is picking on him.

When Mrs. Hawes enters the kitchen and seeks to remonstrate with him, he replies: "We are going to get married. You can tell that to my mother, you nosey old devil." There are some comedy scenes at the dance and then the wedding. And following the wedding the moter disowns him, and the couple settle down in a little cottage.

The years pass, and there is now a little son of four years, and on the fifth wedding anniversary Gundrun has arranged a feast. But the only one who associates with Charley now is Heine Lorber, the town bully and drunkard, and Charley has acquired his habits. Earlier in the day Gundrun has asked him whether he knows what this is, and he replies: "Yes, it is my pay day. All you think about is getting my money."

MOTHER and son are waiting for the father, but instead of coming home he stops at the "blind tiger" with Heine, and after hours have passed insists that Heine shall accompany him home. And so Gundrun has to serve the two beastly drunken men. With the liquor they had with them consumed Charley decides that he must have more and takes the last of Gundrun's saving and goes with Heine. There, at the "blind tiger" a fight starts and Charley is struck over the head with a bottle.

After the doctor has told Gundrun that there is a slight chance for him, but that the slightest excitement will prove fatal Mrs. Holt comes to the cottage, storming at the girl and bursting into the room creating a scene that causes her son's death.

Through money she makes by taking in washing Gundrun now buys herself a small farm and now we see her working in the fields, doing a man's labor, but happy with her child. Then a new figure comes in her life.

Thrown off a freight train by the brakeman is Martin O'Neill, a tramp. Walking through the village Heine throws a rock at the stranger and gets a licking for it, with resulting enmity for the man, increased when Heine's lame dog leaves and follows the tramp away.

HUNTING for food Martin comes to Gundrun's cottage where his request

At right the lady of the "old family" is indignant that her son has brought a "hired girl" to the dance, and at the left she creates a scene that causes his death. Center, the girl and the man that brings her real happiness

At the right a comedy scene at the dance with Heine interrupting the young couple, and at the left the husband, now become a drunkard, with Heine as his boon companion, and their orgy on his fifth wedding anniversary. In the center is Miss MacLaren in her "party clothes," a striking picture for use in newspaper advertising is so speedily granted that he is astonished and replies "You don't expect me to work for this do you." When she invites him to sit down he adds, "It aint the custom to let bums sit down," but Gundrun replies that: "I don't know anything about bums. I only know one kind of folks—and that's folks." The child then takes "Bum" as his name and affection between the man and the child is established. And Martin is attracted to the trim girl in overalls.

Later that evening he comes to the house for a blanket. He has found an old bed in the stable and he announces that he is going to spend the night and help Gundrun further with her work in the morning. And after that he stays and stays, though she tells him that she cannot afford a hired man, he is there until the wheat crop is harvested and in the barn. But in the meantime there is more of Heine's enmity aroused for he has recognized Martin as the tramp who whipped him and as he controls the harvesting apparatus, he refuses to continue the work as long as Martin is around, but Gundrun steps in and takes charge herself.

THEN we see them on a trip to the city to get the supplies and there Gundrun insists that Martin shall accept pay for his work and forces it on him. He is manifestly afraid of the money, and we see the reason when he allows her to drive home alone promising to follow. He immediately buys a bottle of whiskey and goes with it to a railroad trestle. There he tests himself—holds it to his nostrils—and finds the desire gone. He has conquered his enemy.

He returns to Gundrun, and while they are at supper Heine fires the barns. Martin and Gundrun are able to save part of the wheat, but both the woman and the child are overcome with the heat and he barely rescues them and then leaving them unconscious rushes for water to revive them. In the meantime Heine has rushed to the village with the news that Martin is drunk and has fired the barn. Determined to lynch the man they set forth and come to him just as he is getting the water.

The noose is about his neck when Gundrun, reviving, rushes to them and the truth comes out. Heine is forced to pay for the damage and then there is happiness as Martin takes Gundrun in his arms and the kid asks:

"Mama what are you doing to the bum?"

FOR the newspaper advertising we would advise playing up the more attractive scenes. As a matter of fact violence hasn't a very large share in the story though there are several instances of it. From several of the scene pictures you can get a full length picture of Miss MacLaren in overalls and this will be especially striking if used in considerable size with the display work to the left. There is another attractive picture of her with the child in her arms, and still another of her in her "party" dress.

Then here is a selling argument based right on the personality of the star:

"Miss MacLaren is always at her best as a poor girl. You remember the roles that she had in "Shoes," "Bread" and "The Amazing Wife." In some cases she has been seen as a poor girl who yields to fate, but in this picture we have her as a strong woman—in heart and body—but a woman with an amazing love.

"It is a story of the west and the wheatfields—but without a revolver in it. It is the story of real human beings, of strong men and weak, but most of all of the fight of a 'hired girl' against the world—a splendid fight that she wins without a stain on her, heart grips and smiles alternating—a genuine story of an unpainted woman."

THEN you may prefer ones that go more into the story although we do not believe that is necessary in this case where the title carries the idea so well, but leaves the curiosity strong:

"Those 'pious' people of the village threw up their hands when the scion of the leading family married a hired girl. What a terrible stain on the family name!

"But the only stain was on the girl who took the name. She was an unpainted woman, pure in heart and clean in mind, while he was a weakling and the rest of them hypocrites.

"Their false pride drove him to drink and to his death—and her to ultimate happiness, because a real man found in her—a wonder woman."

And this:

"In the kitchen or in the drawing room it isn't the paint that makes the woman. True nobility runs close to form, no matter where it may be found.

"So when the last of the 'old family' married a hired girl the 'fine people' of the town were astounded. They wouldn't associate with a servant girl—not they.

"But it was only the girl herself who suffered by the marriage, for he was of clay and she of pure gold. And they—they were blind—and would not see.

"They drove her husband to his end—and it was the one good turn they unwittingly did her. It was her own effort that brought her the greatest happiness a woman can find —the love of a real man."

THEN here are some of the shorter ones:

"She was 'only a hired girl,' and they ostracized her when she dared to marry the scion of an old family. But she was young in body and soul and grew strong as the oak—while he was old in family and rotten to the core and fell crumbling, while she blossomed into a wonderful life."

"Family doesn't count if the heart isn't there. They thought that they were disgraced when their son married a hired girl. But it was the only good thing that he had ever done in his selfish life. She would have made a man out of him, but their family pride wouldn't let her; but there was a real man to come into her life—a man who appreciated an unpainted woman."

"There's neither a ballroom or an underworld dive in this picture. It is a story of the hired girl in the kitchen and the unpainted woman in the field—it is a new sort of a character, but one you will delight in. You cannot afford to miss Mary MacLaren in one of her best characterizations."

Scene at near lynching, Gundry with her child and arrival of the "bum"

A Strong Appeal Made to Woman Who Works

CLASS appeal is always dangerous because you are apt to keep away from your theatre those who do not happen to belong to that particular class. This is especially true of women and care should be observed here, but at the same time there should be full advantage taken of the fact that Mary MacLaren in this picture plays the role of a woman who makes good against all obstacles.

You know that there is a strong objection among the fair sex to accepting positions as domestics; women would rather work for less money as shop girls or in factories, but still you have a strong opportunity to make this picture appeal to all of the variety who work. The "You" stuff should be kept entirely out of all your exploitation, but the human side of the woman who makes good on her own account should be played up.

If you can get a list of the women employes of the stores and factories of your city it would be a good idea to send them a special letter telling them that this is a story of a woman who made good against all sorts of handicaps and found perfect happiness. Make no reference to the fact that the women whom you are addressing are working women, but simply follow the general lines that we have given in the newspaper selling talks.

WE would not advise any ordinary stunt stuff here, but there is one idea that is worth while. Have your artist draw the outline of the face or the full figure of Mary MacLaren without eyes, ears or any other features and clothe her in overalls. On the shirt label this "The Unpainted Woman" and then add the question:

"What actress of all others would you select to portray the role of a 'hired girl' who won the greatest thing in life?"

This should be displayed for at least a week ahead of the date of the first showing and then the day before the showing add the answer to the question with the name of the star.

From the three sheet you can get a full length figure of the star in overalls that will attract attention. There should be a large variety of pictures of the star displayed and the scene photographs should be attractively displayed, preferably each one mounted on a separate piece of card board with the name of Miss MacLaren and the title brought out.

ABOUT THE CAST

It Is Worth While to List the Names of These

THERE is a worth while cast here and if you have the space in your advertising the names should be listed.

In case "The Greatest Thing in Life" played in your town, David Butler will be remembered as the man who played the garlic-loving Frenchman and who has appeared in many screen offerings.

Lydia Yeamans Titus is one of the best known of the old school of actresses, and you can feature little Mickey Moore as a "comer."

Fritzie Ridgeway and Carl Stockdale also have bits.

Here is a slightly new stunt that you can use in connection with the furnishing and department stores. Get them to take figures of women and attitre them in overalls and then use next to them a card reading: "Our overalls are attractive enough for women to wear—when they need them. See how lovely Mary MacLaren appears in them in 'The Unpainted Woman' at the Empire theatre this week."

THERE should be a comedy setting supplied in the rest of your program and we would afford full relief from the strong heart interest that the feature supplies by giving a slap stick comedy or some other of the very lightest variety.

You have probably read in these pages of the success that has been scored at the New York theatres in repeating the old time music and here is a chance to do that and make your patrons talk. While the picture has today as its time, one is reminded something of the old time days by the character of Miss MacLaren's role and the old favorites will go mighty well here.

We would suggest that you use "Gems from Stephen Foster" as your overture. These are among the best known of melodies and if you have the facilities it would be well to have the curtain come up showing a field of wheat and negro cabins in the distance with the moon slowly rising.

"Listen to the Mocking Bird" would make a delightful song prelude to the feature. Have the girl singer dressed in hoop skirts and a background of either a flower garden or a forest scene. "Comin' Thro the Rye" is another song that might be used.

Music for the feature should be largely descriptive. We would use a familiar love song for the theme, first introducing this where the tramp comes in and asks for the blanket, saying that he is going to spend the night in the barn.

Heine so much suggests the German that we would use a second theme with his appearance, "Keep Your Head Down Fritzi Boy." This should be used first when he throws the rock at the tramp, then when he is invited to fight and finally where he is told that he must pay for the damage. "Crafty Spy" or "Slimy Viper" or any mysterios can be used for the scene showing him setting fire to the barn.

THERE are quite a few sections of the country where there is a considerable Scandinavian population and certain advantage should be taken of the fact that this picture shows a Swedish girl who comes to this country, makes good against the old families and wins happiness.

We would issue a special letter to these people and say in this that here is a picture that has been made in recognition of their part in contributing to America's melting pot. What you should say in this letter is obvious and you are very likely to win a lot of new friends for the theatre.

New Managers Join Hodkinson

Enlargement of Corporation's National Sales Organization Marks Era of Expansion. Will Sell Own Pictures in Pathe Exchanges

THE first move of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in its large expansion and to meet the requirements of selling its productions singly on the basis of individual merit, has been to strengthen the manpower of the company, it is said, in every section of the United States.

Recently announcement was made by F. B .Warren, vice-president, of a series of managerial changes in the eastern or metropolitan division comprising Boston, Buffalo, Washington; the Southern division with changes in Atlanta, Charlotte and New Orleans.

Announcement of a further development of the sales organization comes with the entry of new men into the branches:

New York City Exchange: George F. Lenehan, for the past eighteen months manager of the Goldwyn Washington, D. C., office, became manager of the New York Hodkinson exchange May 19, succeeding E. A. Crane, who will be detailed to important reorganization work for his company elsewhere.

Cleveland Exchange: C. C. McKibbin, Pittsburg manager for Goldwyn from the day of that company's organization, has been appointed Hodkinson manager in Cleveland, succeeding D. W. Phillips, who has resigned for advancement with another company. Mr. McKibbin assumes charge of the Hodkinson interests in Cleveland, May 20th, at the Pathe Exchange.

Mme. Elvira Amazar, singer, in a production released through Hodkinson Corporation

Minneapolis Exchange: Phil Reisman leaves the Triangle Milwaukee office and has become the Hodkinson manager in Minneapolis, where he served two years in the local Goldwyn organization.

Los Angeles Exchange: Harry H. Hooks has taken charge as Hodkinson manager of Los Angeles, succeeding E. N. Silcocks, resigned. Mr. Hicks for the past year has been manager of Select Pictures Cincinnati office.

Coincident with the expansion of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, its own managers and salesmen in all thirty Pathe offices, through which Hodkinson attains his physical distribution, have taken over the exclusive selling of Hodkinson-distributed productions to exhibitors. Pathe salesmen do not solicit or sell Hodkinson contracts as they formerly did.

Mix Does More Death-Defying Stunts In Next

EXHIBITORS are promised material on which to base some powerful stunt and a daredevil advertising in the William Fox production, "The Romance of Cow Hollow," now being made in California by Tom Mix, according to the William Fox Exhibitors Service Bureau. Mix is so far outdoing his best previous efforts in this picture, as to make his earlier work seem tame by comparison.

"While Tom Mix," says the Exhibitors Service Bureau, "has roped many wild horses and cattle in his life, this picture is the first in which he ever roped a rushing train. He performs this feat while riding on horse back on a dead run, the train travelling twenty-five miles an hour. On roping the train he swings from his horse, is bumped along the ground, pulls himself up the side of a car to the roof, runs to the rear coach, drops onto the observation platform, and rushes into the train to find the girl of mystery whom he is seeking.

"Another thriller, and one believed to be entirely original," the statement continues, "is that in which Mix escapes from a howling mob by roping a great chandelier from the balcony of a room in which he is cornered, pulling the chandelier toward him and swinging and leaping sixty feet across the room to an opposite balcony. He then attempts to swing back so that he may get his horse, but falls from a height of twenty feet into the midst of the crowd.

"This fall is the signal for a terrific fight in which one sees only flashes of Mix in the hurly burly of battling men, until the star finally breaks away from his assailants, rushed up the stair case, mounts his horse, seizes the Princess and creates a panic among the mob by riding downstairs at breakneck speed, scattering his enemies in every direction."

"The Romance of Cow Hollow" is described as the story of a Western youth who suddenly comes into possession of enormous wealth, and goes forth in search of adventure like the Prince of the fairy books. His desire for romance is more than gratified, and involves the winning of a Princess, played by Junaita Hansen."

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

Photoplays Fifth Issue Has Interesting Subjects

The fifth and latest issue of the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement" contains as a headline feature a closeup of D. W. Griffith. The thrilling "Ride of the Clansman" from "The Birth of a Nation" is seen, and later while viewing the old "Intolerance" set, "The Feast of Belshazza" is visualized once more. Then comes Olive Thomas and Edna Purviance and a backyard interview with Mary Thurman, of the Mack Sennett bathing girls.

"Roughhouse at the Universal Zoo" has scenes of Charlie, the elephant, picking on Joe Martin, the Monk. Rupert Julian is then seen in the murder scene in "The Fireflingers."

Pictures of the Los Angeles home of Jesse Lasky, and an impromptu drama, with Richard Rowland, of Metro, versus May Allison and Viola Dana, complete the subject.

Los Angeles Reviewers Praise "Rowdy Ann"

Rowdy Ann, the second of the Christie Specials, was given a prerelease showing at the California theatre in Los Angeles the week of May 12. The following comments were made on the productions by the Los Angeles reviewers.

Guy Price, Los Angeles Herald: "A two-reel comedy, 'Rowdy Ann,' featuring Fay Tincher, keeps the audience in an uproar throughout its presentation."

Miss Gertrude Price, The Record: "Rowdy Ann, with the beloved Fay Tincher, is at the California. This week she dons chaps and runs the cow-boys ragged."

Mrs. Florence Lawrence, the Los Angeles Examiner: "The grotesqueries of Fay Tincher, this feminine cut-up, are beyond description, and the nonsense of the comedy is well directed and proves amusing to the audience."

Alice Brady's Next Film Nears Completion

The finishing touches are being added this week to Alice Brady's forthcoming Select Picture, "His Bridal Night," in which she is being directed by Kenneth Webb. The story is by Lawrence Irving Rising. Katherine Stuart did the scenario.

During the past week Miss Brady and her company have been at Allenhurst, N. J., working on exteriors on the grounds of Miss Brady's summer home. The studio interiors are practically completed, and it is believed that in a few days the last scene will have been made.

Hall Leases Studio

Frank G. Hall, vice-president and general manager of the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., announces that he has leased the Bacon-Backer studio, 130 West 38th Street, and that it will be the home of the production work for the Miller productions, the first of which is now nearing completion with Herbert Rawlinson, Florence Billings, Stuart Holmes and Regina Quinn in the leading roles.

EDDIE POLO

in The "Cyclone Smith Stories"

One Hundred Percent

in story—100 percent in direction—100 percent in dramatic values—100 percent in novelty of lighting effects and method of presentation, and 100 percent in Box Office Value is the combined verdict of 25 careful exhibitors who have seen all the finished "CYCLONE SMITH" stories, featuring Eddie Polo.

Several exhibitors expressed themselves as favoring the same amount of newspaper advertising on this series as the big features that head their daily programs.

Perhaps that will give you a clue as to how good this series is. The way to know is to see them YOURSELF at your nearest Universal Exchange. They are going over BIG wherever shown. Big and quick money for you if you handle them right. The pictures are there!

Pioneer Says "Boomerang" Creates Interest

The officials of the Pioneer Film Corporation are pleased, it is said, with the interest that "The Boomerang" has created among independent buyers of the country.

"Thanks to such advertising mediums as THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS," says an official of the company, "nearly every state right buyer has not only been reached, but inquiry from a large proportion of them have been received at the Pioneer office."

This has prompted M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer to start Jerry Abrams on a tour as soon as the exhibition prints on "The Boomerang" can be secured from the laboratory.

Surprising interest in "The Boomerang" is said to be shown in a totally different field. Several of the large vaudeville circuits being after "The Boomerang."

Current Gaumont Shows "Blimp" C-5

The current issue of the Gaumont Graphic shows the starting of the naval dirigible, C-5, better known as a "Blimp," from Montauk Point, L. I., on its wonderful non-stop trip to St. John's, Newfoundland. The record made on this journey makes certain that air ships of the "blimp" type will soon be making safe flights across the Atlantic, it is said. Splendid views of these balloon type of American flying craft are also shown. The issue contains many other interesting subjects.

Engages Meighan for "Peg" Feature

Thomas Meighan, one of the best known leading men of the screen, has been engaged to play the leading male role in "Peg O' My Heart," the Hartley Manners comedy being produced as a Paramount-Artcraft Special in Hollywood, with William C. DeMille as director.

Has Six Johnny Dooley Comedies

Three of the Half-Dozen Two-Reel Comedy Subjects Already Completed and the Balance Being Produced

AN advanced idea thoroughly in keeping with recent developments in the motion picture industry is claimed for the recently organized Johnny Dooley Film Company.

Their announcement carries the statement that six of the two-reel comedies would be completed before a single one was shown and that thereafter twelve subjects a year would be released.

President C. L. Bach emphasized the point that while it was customary for most companies to produce two subjects of this length each month, the Johnny Dooley Comedies would take enough time to make each comedy as perfect as possible and would not be handicapped by the insane idea of rushing matters.

The theme and idea for the Dooley Comedies are based upon Bide Dudley's "The Office Force," running in the New York Evening World.

Johnny Dooley is now playing with the Ziegfeld Follies and previous to this engagement was with "Listen Lester." A long list of successful theatrical attractions in which he performed is expected to enhance his drawing power. The third comedy has been completed at the Biograph studio and no marketing or distributing arrangements will be announced until fully six of the two-reelers are completed and shown to the trade.

"The Famous Dooley Beauty Brigade" is the title given to the twenty girls in support of Mr. Dooley. "Jack" D. Schulze is the director and Harry Keepers handles the camera. Some of those in support of the comedian are Martha Mansfield, Bobby Higgins, Lillian Hall, Billy Ruge, Tom Blake, Alice Mann, Tom Cameron and Sophie Tucker.

The Johnny Dooley Film Company has as president C. L. Bach; vice-president, Lawrence Wolf; secretary - treasurer, Harry Hochheimer.

"There is no slapstick variety in the Johnny Dooley comedies," declared President Bach. "Neither is there any frenzied producing to keep up with anybody's program schedule. We have a real director, an expert cameraman, a real star well supported by clever principals, and a beauty bevy that cannot be beat.

"We are consistently producing clean comedies without the least taint of vulgarity or pastry and still ridiculously funny enough to bring out hearty laughter from both the classes and the masses.

"We have already proved it to our satisfaction and when the next three subjects are completed we predict an agreeable surprise party when we show the first six Johnny Dooley two-reel comedies to the trade."

Another Record Claimed for Blanche Sweet

"THE HUSHED HOUR," starring Blanche Sweet, had its national premiere at the Broadway-Strand in Detroit beginning May 18, and the "takings" reported by the Harry Garson offices show that $1,819.70 was the first day's receipts with $1,683.20 the following day.

This is considered as but adding another laurel to the producer, and the star who only a few short weeks before had registered a $25,000 week in the national premiere of "The Unpardonable Sin" in the same theatre.

"The Hushed Hour" is in five reels, and the producer declares that there are so many productions labelled "all star" that he would request the journals to print the list of names contained in the cast, and that then the exhibitors and public could judge quickly whether "The Hushed Hour" had a really and truly "All-Star Cast" or not.

The cast for the production is as follows: Blanche Sweet, Milton Sills, Gloria Hope, Rosemary Theby, Wilfred Lucas, Harry Northrup, Mary Anderson, Lydia Knott, Wyndham Standing, Winter Hall, Bennie Alexander, Edward M. Kimball, Norman Selby (Kid McCoy).

Newspaper clippings displayed at the Garson offices showed enthusiastic praise for the production from the Detroit journals, and a card system used in the audience inviting criticism, met with an overwhelming response, but a perusal of a large bunch of the cards also showed enthusiastic praise of the production, and the producers declare that it has touched the popular chord right at the jump in the same remarkable style registered by "The Unpardonable Sin."

Marketing and distributing arrangements for "The Hushed Hour" have not yet been announced by Mr. Garson.

In a comprehensive report, Royal A. Baker, the Detroit official censor, eulogized the cast and the story, and in conclusion declares that: "I think that 'The Hushed Hour' will be a success in spite of its long step away from the conventional. It is a play for all classes and sex and will suit the masses."

Mrs. Sidney Drew to Make New Comedies

Amedee J. Van Veuren announces that Mrs. Sidney Drew will continue to make two-reel Paramount-Drew comedies for the V. B. K. Film Corporation. As in the past, Mrs. Drew will prepare her own working scenarios and will direct the comedies in person. She will play her famous character of "Polly" but henceforth will be the sister of a frivolous bachelor brother. Donald McBride, a popular comedian who has been associated with the Drews in many comedies, has been engaged to play the brother.

"Bunkered," a golf story, and "The Night of the Dub," a comedy of suburban life, are the first stories scheduled for production.

Metro Purchases Two Comedies

Emmy Wehlen and Bert Lytell to Be Starred in New Features by Luther Reed and John Blackwood

THE trend of the public demand, from the producers' viewpoint, seems to continue along the lighter dramatic lines, according to the Metro announcement of the purchase of two more stories for as many of their screen luminaries.

Both of the stories selected by Metro are in a serio-comic vein which are said to pulsate at a mirth-provoking pressure throughout the action of the plots, alternating with a plausible love theme interwoven by the authors.

The first of these vehicles to be utilized is called "A Favor to a Friend," and is for Emmy Wehlen. The author is Luther A. Reed, who also is given credit for creating the scenario.

It is a story of a demure little Westerner who comes East to lay claim to her deceased father's estate, and who, upon arriving in New York, discovers that she is destined to suffer many exciting adventures 'mid the turmoil of the city before she secures possession of her rightful properties. There are many complications, both humorous and melodramatic in the feature, it is said, which have been worked out by Mr. Reed from his original story, and which John Ince will direct.

The new story for Bert Lytell is by John H. Blackwood, a new contributor to the Metro All Star series, although a well-known writer of motion picture plays.

Emmy Wehlen, star in Metro pictures

Mr. Blackwood's story has been adapted to the screen by Finis Fox of the Metro staff. The name of Lytell's latest vehicle is "It's Easy to Make Money."

The plot is an account of frenzied finance viewed from a most unique angle by the principal character which is played by Lytell. It is a story of a young man, of good breeding and bad habits, who differs with his father about the female of the species. In order to become independent and make his own fortune, he takes the easiest way which is by going to jail. It turns out very effective, and in a year Jimmy (Bert Lytell) emerges with the nucleus of a fortune with which he starts life on his own. Edwin Carewe will direct. The casts for neither of these productions have as yet been announced.

Credits Robertson-Cole for Barriscale Success

IN announcing the change of the title of the next Bessie Barriscale feature for Exhibitors Mutual release, from "Broken Threads" to "Tangled Threads," Robertson-Cole issues a statement which says:

"It is not the purpose nor the intent of the Robertson-Cole Company to claim credit for the remarkable success which has attended the productions, made by its various allied producing organizations, and which are so ably handled on the sales and distribution by Exhibitors Mutual.

"But a large measure of the accountability for the sensational success of Bessie Barriscale's recent attractions is granted Robertson-Cole by no other than J. L. Frothingham, general manager of B. B. Features, Miss Barriscale's own producing company.

"In a letter received from Mr. Frothingham last week, he ascribed the reason for Miss Barriscale's veritable triumph by the fact that she had been issuing pictures which struck a popular chord and which met with instantaneous response.

"It would have been impossible for us to get the trend of public desires in the way of entertainment without the cooperation of the Robertson-Cole officials," Mr. Frothingham wrote.

"The Robertson-Cole Company has given us every assistance in selecting the type of picture which would prove the most profitable for exhibitors. The keen judgment of the officials of Robertson-Cole, their ability to sense what the public wants, has led to our selection of a series of plays that have gone over in smashing fashion."

"Tangled Threads" is a story which affords Miss Barriscale every opportunity to appear at her talented best." In the cast are Nigel Barrie, Ben Alexander, Henry Kolker, Thomas Holding, little Jane Irving and Rosemary Thebe.

Fox Pictures to Entertain President Wilson

President Wilson, on his return from the Peace Conference aboard the George Washington, will be entertained, it is stated, by a number of Fox productions. Two of these are "Salome" and "Cleopatra."

Other productions supplied for the ocean trip by the Fox Film Corporation include several William Farnum subjects, among them "A Tale of Two Cities" and "The Bondman"; George Walsh in "Never Say Quit," Tom Mix in "Treat Em Rough," and a number of Fox Sunshine Comedies—"The House of Terrible Scandals," "Tom and Jerry Mix," "The Divers Last Kiss," "Mongrels," "Son of a Hun," "Hearts and Saddles," "A Roman Cowboy," "His Love Fight," "Oh, What a Knight," "His Musical Sneeze," "Social Pirates," "Bath House Rangle," "His Bomb Policy," "Being Bang" and "Six-Cylinder Love."

Bull's Eye Secures Ten Selig Comedies

Milton L. Cohen, president of the Bull's-Eye Film Corporation, announces the purchase of ten single reel subjects from Colonel William N. Selig in which Napoleon and Sally, two unusually talented monkeys, are given the comedy roles that make the series possible.

These subjects are not reissues, Mr. Cohen explained, but constitute in themselves a little series of first-class comedies not thus far released by Colonel Selig on any of his scheduled releases.

President Cohen also reports the following territory just sold on the Billy West and Gale Henry comedies: Seattle territory to the Consolidated Film Corporation of San Francisco; Minneapolis territory to the Standard Film Corporation of Minneapolis; foreign rights to Apollo Trading Company of New York. This leaves only the New Orleans territory to be sold on the Billy West and Gale Henry comedies.

Credit to O'Brien

In an affidavit received this week by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Willis H. O'Brien, of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, Chicago, is given full credit for the creation and production of "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," recently shown as a short subject at the Strand theatre in New York. Attention is also called to the fact that Mr. O'Brien was given this credit in the Strand program when the picture was exhibited.

The affidavit is the result of the publication, in a trade paper, of an item which gave credit to Herbert M. Dawley.

Kid Stories for Ann May

Ann May has announced from the West Coast that she has signed with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to play leads in a series of "kid" stories. Miss May, it is understood, is very much in love with the West Coast.

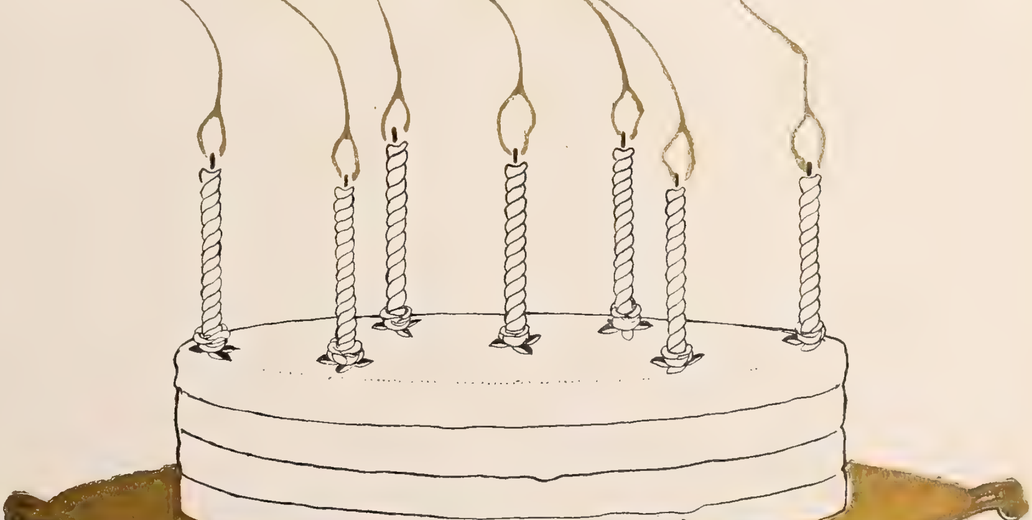
Will you come to our party?



Will you come to our party?

We are seven years old. That makes us the oldest producing and distributing child in the film business in the United States.

So we want you to celebrate with us.

If you are using any of the Universal product, you need no further invitation. But to those theatres which have not been using Universal pictures of late, we wish to say just this:—Join our celebration by running as many Universal pictures as you have room for during June, our Anniversary Month.

If you are all booked up, squeeze in at least one Universal picture, so we can say that every theatre in the land attended our party.

Celebrate the fact that the Universal has always been a never-failing source of supply; a source you could always come to when you found disappointment elsewhere.

Celebrate the fact that there is one company in the business which has never sky-rocketed, but has shown a sure and steady improvement in quality.

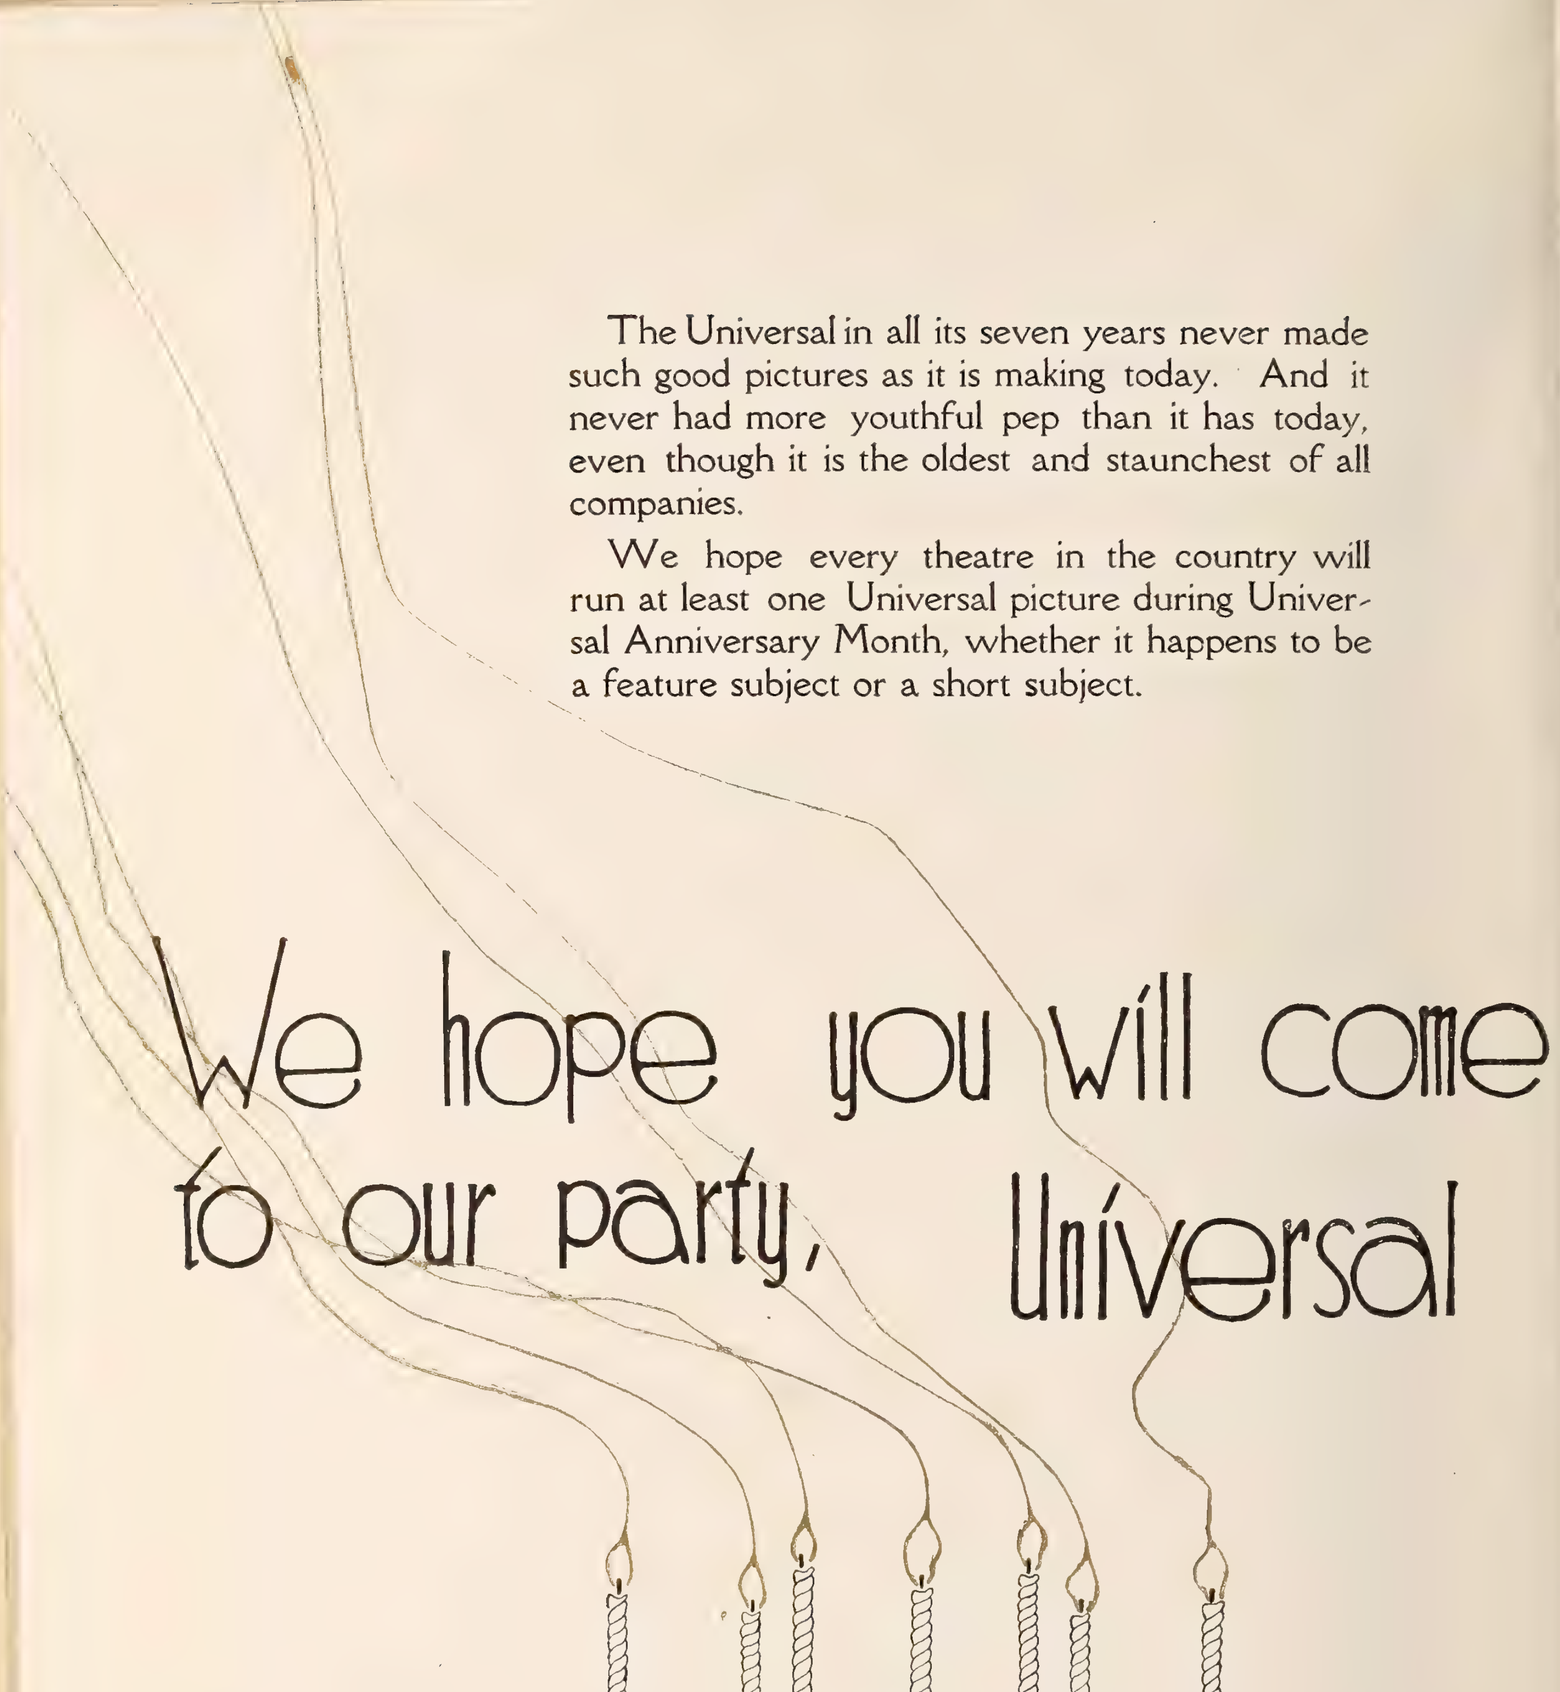
Celebrate the fact that the Universal has never participated in smooth schemes to "do" the other fellow, and is always doing its level best to check the rapid rise in picture costs.

Celebrate the fact that the Universal has never had time nor inclination for stock-jobbing, cut-throat business methods or other misbegotten ideas which have been a curse on the whole industry----but that we have spent all our time, money and energy on improving, improving, improving our pictures.

We believe our Jewels and our Universal Special Attractions are the finest pictures on the market. We believe there is no comparison between the news-reels we handle and any other news-reels. We believe our serials show the result of long years of experience and study. We believe our comedies are unsurpassable. We believe our whole product is the best that the best theatres can find and we believe our ideas of prices are reasonable and fair.

The Universal in all its seven years never made such good pictures as it is making today. And it never had more youthful pep than it has today, even though it is the oldest and staunchest of all companies.

We hope every theatre in the country will run at least one Universal picture during Universal Anniversary Month, whether it happens to be a feature subject or a short subject.



We hope you will come to our party,
Universal

Bacon Signs Le Guere as Lucy Cotten's Lead

George Le Guere, who has been seen in support of such popular stage stars as Blanche Bates, Robert Edeson, David Warfield, Irene Fenwick and Jane Cowl, and who has had a successful screen career, has been signed by Gerald Bacon as leading man for Mr. Bacon's new star, Lucy Cotten, who will be seen in the featured role of the first Bacon production released by Frank G. Hall through Independent Sales Corporation, "Sun Up," a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner." Mr. Le Guere is one of the screen's best known leading men and juveniles having been seen in "Youth," "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," "The Seven Deadly Sins," and with Norma Talmadge in one of her late successes. His latest work for the screen was opposite Jane Grey in "The Birth of a Race."

MacLean and May Will be Co-Stars in Series

Thomas H. Ince, famous photoplay producer, announces the presentation during the coming year through Paramount, of a series of productions featuring as co-stars Douglas MacLean and Doris May. These two players are well known to the thousands of screen lovers who have followed the Ince photoplays, for they have been acting under the direction of Mr. Ince for two years. Douglas MacLean has developed a large personal following through his support to Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Mary Pickford and others. Miss May, who has been appearing under the name Doris Lee, was leading lady for Charles Ray in six of his productions.

"Destiny" Big Success

Reports from the middle-west, it is said, show that the new Jewel picture, "Destiny," is being received by the exhibitors as a sequel to "The Heart of Humanity," as far as its success is concerned. Dorothy Phillips, star in "The Heart of Humanity" is cast in the leading role of "Destiny" and upholds her well-established reputation, it is declared, as one of the greatest actresses of the screen. Having scored such a singular success in the great picture and having won her way into the hearts of the motion picture audiences through her excellent portrayal of a great woman, Miss Phillips is looked upon by the exhibitor as a drawing card of great power, it is said.

Smith Directs Aubrey

Noel Smith, long associated with the Lehrman comedies, has joined Vitagraph's directorial forces, active on the West Coast studios at Hollywood, Cal., as director of the "Big V" comedies, starring Jimmie Aubrey. The first comedy directed by Mr. Smith under Vitagraph was entitled "Tootsies and Tamales." It was released May 19.

During its production it was the subject of considerable speculation, a high board fence, erected on the studio grounds, causing considerable guessing as to what was transpiring behind the stockade.

"Third Degree" Breaks Record

So Declares Vitagraph on Alice Joyce Feature, Which is Said to be Signed by all Big Circuits

Vitagraph declares that all booking records were smashed this week when "The Third Degree," a picturization of the famous Charles Klein play by that company, was booked solidly by all circuit houses and for extended engagements and indefinite runs by various leading independent houses.

"The Third Degree" is being released this week. Due to the extraordinarily comprehensive scope of the bookings to date, it will have simultaneous premieres in the majority of leading houses in the Eastern and New England states and in the Middle West.

The circuits which have closed for "The Third Degree" include Keith's & Proctor's, William Fox, the Poli chain and B. S. Moss.

In the Keith & Proctor houses, "The Third Degree" will be shown for forty-six consecutive days. Theatres under the control of William Fox will show the Klein picturization for thirty days. Poli has contracted for a twenty-five days' showing. The B. S. Moss circuit will show the photodrama for twenty days.

These bookings completely cover the circuit theatres of America, which include picture plays in their programs.

Notable among independent bookings are those of several theatres, it is said, within "the loop" in Chicago.

No theatre in "the loop" has a greater reputation for high-class photo productions than the Ziegfeld, it is said, which booked the feature for two weeks. E. C. Bostick, owner of the Merrill and Strand theatres, booked "The Third Degree" while on a visit to New York, an interesting feature of which was a day at the big Brooklyn producing plant of Vitagraph. He will run "The Third Degree" indefinitely at both of his Milwaukee theatres.

The Park theatre in Boston, the New theatre in Baltimore, and the Cameraphone theater in Pittsburgh, are leaders on the big-city list who have booked "The Third Degree," aside of its circuit bookings in the big towns.

As an aid to exhibitors in getting business with "The Third Degree," Vitagraph has had prepared special advertising matter.

Mr. and Mrs. DeHaven Star in "In a Pinch"

CAPITOL Comedies celebrate the beginning of their second year of releasing through Goldwyn with a honeymoon comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven. For many years they have been known to musical comedy audiences for their delicate sense of the comic and the delightful dancing interludes with which they punctuated many of the most successful Broadway productions. In choosing the Capitol banner under which to renew their screen acquaintance with their many followers, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have selected a fitting standard for the display of their individual gifts in the kind of plays which have earned an international reputation for them.

The career of Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven on the stage is a romance of the triumph of youth. At the age of nineteen, Mr. De Haven toured America and Australia at the head of his own company. Later, with Flora Parker, he played with Lew Fields in "Topsy-Turvey," and "Hanky Panky." Besides these engagements, they played with Raymond Hitchcock in several successes, and for several years were welcome headliners in vaudeville.

Their association with Capitol Comedies is not their first screen venture. Some of their former cinema plays are "A Gentleman of Nerve," "His Little Wife," and "The Losing Winner." During the coming year the DeHavens will make thirteen comedies, it is said, for the National Film Corporation of America, of which "Smiling Bill" Parsons is president.

Their first Capitol comedy, "In A Pinch," tells the story of a stage door Johnny's hilarious past which rises to trouble him when he returns from his honeymoon.

Announces Release of "Sahara" for June 1

J PARKER READ, JR.'s big production "Sahara" directed by Allan Dwan and starring Louise Glaum is announced as ready for pre-release June 1, in the larger first-run theatres of the nation. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation it is said has virtually established a record in the speed with which this big G. Gardner Sullivan story has been distributed to its branches, with all accessories and exploitation aids prepared, in readiness for an immediate release of "Sahara" to first-run houses.

"Just what the Read-Dwan, Glaum-Sullivan combination means when found in a single production has been proved by the immediate activity of the first-run accounts in the larger cities in seeking "Sahara," said Mr. Read.

"A circuit of theatres which has never before been known in exhibition history to be able to give a distributor one hundred days of bookings on a single production has stretched its playing time to that limit in an effort to capture this production for its cities and localities. This total of playing dates it has attained by doubling and even trebling its time usually allotted to a picture with the additional assurance of repeat playing dates at the more important points, in addition to the one hundred days called for in its initial offer.

"Another circuit in a metropolitan eastern city has offered to depart from its usual policy of a split week in its first-run theatre to provide a full week as the first-run with doubled time in its circuit of subsidiary theatres. Only bookings of longer duration than normal are in keeping with the importance and drawing power of "Sahara."

Picture Alone Brings the Increase

Exhibitor Morris Depends Upon Stewart Film to Tide Him Over Lenten Period—No Special Advertising

WHEN George Morris, manager of the M. E. Comerford Amusement Company at Scranton, Pa., booked "Virtuous Wives" for the Strand Theatre for one of the closing weeks of Lent, he was satisfied that the public really took the Lenten season as seriously as they professed, according to an announcement this week from First National. The statement continued: "He was convinced that it was a good thing for them, but a poor one for the picture theatre. Business had been bad. So out loud upon the arrival of the Stewart film, he said:

"No advertising! No special display! No anything!" It was his idea that nothing would change the situation but the arrival of Easter Sunday.

Asked what he expected would carry the picture through its run at the Strand, he declared that if anything did, it would have to be the picture's name and that of Miss Stewart. It so came to pass that the film brought about a twenty per cent increase in business at the Strand over the average of the preceding weeks of Lent, and they were weeks upon which no little money and thought had been spent in the effort to keep up attendance.

But closing up the books at the end of the run, Mr. Morris did not say: "I told you so." Rather, he declared: "I did it in this instance with the help of two names on an electric sign. I would not attempt it again."

A twenty per cent increase in business at the Strand is more or less of a stunt at that, even with a good bit of advertising. It is a theatre playing only the better pictures, and its clientele the best that the city has to offer. The capacity of the house is 1,400, and its box office operates a sliding scale of prices; fifteen cents in the afternoon and a quarter at night.

The Comerford Amusement Company, owner of the Strand, operates a chain of thirty theatres covering a forty-mile stretch of territory from Carbondale to Wilkes-Barre, the entire length of the anthracite coal belt of Northwestern Pennsylvania. The Savoy at Wilkes-Barre, the Roman at Pittston, and the Majestic at Carbondale, are theatres on a par with the Strand, big houses playing good pictures, operating orchestras and the like. They all have beautifully appointed interiors.

George Morris, manager, has contracted for five future Stewart pictures, the next to be exhibited being "A Midnight Romance." Three Pickford pictures, beginning with "Daddy Long Legs," have also been booked. All will make the entire Comerford circuit. Mr. Morris says he is paying double his usual rental, but is satisfied that they will pull the business.

Lubin Talks on Cooperative Advertising

"PRACTICALLY all reputable film producers today have endeavored to work out a scheme of co-operative advertising whereby mutual benefit to producer and exhibitor will result," said Herbert Lubin to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "but due to circumstances and conditions much money is spent yearly to this end without accomplishing the proper results. The purpose of advertising co-operation should be two-fold—to sell and to serve the public. In many cases this purpose remain unfulfilled, due to the producer failing to take into consideration local conditions as they pertain to the exhibitor.

"The key note of all exploitation and advertising in connection with 'Virtuous Men,' the initial S-L Picture, is intelligent co-operation between producer, the exchang and exhibitor, tieing these three factors closely together so that their combined efforts and expenditures will result beneficially for all concerned.

"'Virtuous Men' has given S-L Pictures an opportunity to prove a long-held theory relative to proper co-operation by putting it into practice. Incorporated in 'The Picture Plus—', an elaborate sixteen-page campaign book, is the principle of applying intensive and intelligent publicity to each locality as the situation may demand. From the day on which the exhibitor books 'Virtuous Men' until the last day of his showing, his advertising has been carefully planned for him. In the matter of cuts, stories, mats, billboard advertising, newspaper campaign, etc., each territory has been treated individually, discarding entirely the old-time blanket idea of presenting a campaign intended to fit all exhibitors' requirements. In order that exchange and exhibitor will work closely with the producer in carrying out this idea, a special Service Bureau has been installed at the S-L offices. It stands ready to help in placing this real co-operative scheme into effect, in order that the exhibitor may profit.

Stewart Feature Inspires Summer Novelty

A score of resorts from Algonac on Lake St. Clair to Mackinaw, South Haven and Macatawa Park, have already announced that the summer's novelty will consist of dances of one hour's duration, with exactly 20 minutes allowed for donning bathing suits and a race to the lake beach for a plunge on the very minute of midnight.

These unique affairs have been called "Midnight Romance Dansants," the idea being taken from "A Midnight Romance," the second First National Exhibitors' Circuit release, featuring Anita Stewart.

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

Laemmle Engages Kline as Production Manager

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, announces the engagement of Harry Kline, formerly general manager of the Globe theatre and general representative of Charles Dillingham, as production manager of Universal City, Cal.

Coming from the Euclid Avenue theatre in Cleveland, O., at the suggestion of Mr. Erlanger, of Klaw and Erlanger, it is said Mr. Kline became associated with the Shuberts and shortly afterward was made general manager for Frederic Thompson, who built the Hippodrome. He was in the employ of Mr. Thompson for three years and then became general manager and publicity representative for Charles Dillingham. During his ten years in New York Mr. Kline has been in charge of the business end of the exploitation and the publicity of such stars as Fred Stone, Elsie Janis, Raymond Hitchcock, Joseph Santley, Gaby Deslys, and Irving Berlin.

Big Houses See Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms"

For the first time in the history of the Majestic, at Oakland, Nebraska, it is said, H. A. Larson, owner and manager, decided that an all-night run was necessary to accommodate crowds clamoring to see Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," when a heavy rain came up and made the innovation unnecessary.

"I never saw such houses," said Mr. Larson, telling about it. "I had three packed houses during the evening and still there were crowds waiting to get in. I didn't know what to do. I knew I couldn't hold such an important film over, and I knew I couldn't stretch the walls of the Majestic. I consulted the operator and we decided to continue showing just as long as there seemed to be need of it. It looked like we would have to show all night. Just before midnight a rain came up and drove away the crowds still waiting in the street."

Kashin Plans Short Reels

It became known this week that Maurice Kashin, until recently manager of the Broadway Theatre in New York, under the control of Universal, is concerned in the production of single reel subjects which are declared to be along entirely new lines.

"Certain principles of showmanship," said Mr. Kashin, "when applied to a theatre will make it a success regardless of its past. This theory will be applied to the one-reel pictures."

Jack Cohn is producing the pictures in collaboration with Mr. Kashin, it is said.

Second Indian Educational

"The Passing of the Crow"—second of the All-Indian subjects to be released by the Educational Films Corporation of America—is ready for distribution and will be shipped to Educational exchanges this week.

Like "The Eagle and the Fawn," which was the first of these films, the picture is essentially a scenic subject, it is stated, with just enough story value to make it thoroughly interesting, and is enacted by a cast of full-blooded Crow Indians, on their reservation in Northern Wyoming.

Third Dooley Two-Reeler Nears Completion

The Johnny Dooley Film Comedies Inc., announce that the third of the series of two-reel comedies will be completed within a few days. In addition to the star, the cast of this latest comedy includes Martha Mansfield, Tom Blake, Tom Cameron, Billie Ruge, Edna Murphy, Tiny Douglas and the twenty beautiful girls who constitute the Johnny Dooley Brigade.

Wm. V. "Pop" Hart, business manager, says:

"Because of Johnny Dooley's wonderful acrobatic ability, I was prepared to see some real slapstick 'nut' comedy, but to my surprise I witnessed two of the highest class, clean cut comedies I've ever seen."

Pioneer Films Going Big, Says Aronowitz

Reports from S. Aronowitz, general manager of the Quality Attractions Company of Des Moines, states that "Virtuous Sinners" and "The Boomerang" are going strong with exhibitors in his territories. At a special press showing of "Virtuous Sinners" given recently in Des Moines, Dorothy Day of the Des Moines Evening Tribune, is said to have used a column on the feature. She described it as a deftly built story, it is said, replete with clever character portrayals and swift moving events, together with great human interest and suspense. "Virtuous Sinners" is booked for its premier in Des Moines early in June at the Casino.

Meyers Becomes Associated with Edward Small

Maurie Meyers, publicity representative, formerly with offices in the Knickerbocker Theatre Building, has become associated with Edward Small in the Putnam Building, and it is stated will hereafter handle all publicity and advertising for his office, besides continuing with his former clients.

Some of the notables he is representing in that respect include the American Cinema Corporation, featuring Mollie King and Louise Huff, Edward Jose now directing Norma Talmadge, John M. Stahl directing Mollie King, Bladden James, Henry Houry and others.

In the theatrical field he is doing Mae West of "Sometime," and Richard Dix of the "I Love You" show.

Famous Players Official Returns from Mexico

John L. Day, who has recently returned from Mexico, where he has been looking after the interests of Famous Players-Lasky productions in that territory and establishing an exchange in the interest of C. M. Clay, who is to distribute Famous Players-Lasky pictures throughout Mexico, brings back the report that American pictures occupy only a secondary place in Mexico.

"The reason for this," says Mr. Day, "is the negligence of the average American film company in checking back stock of film from its various exchanges.

Exploits Jess Willard Production

President of Continental Pictures Corporation Outlines National Campaign for Champion's First Production

A NATIONAL advertising campaign, which is to include large space in newspapers, thousands of 24-sheet stands and various other media, is announced by the Continental Pictures Corporation to introduce Jess Willard, champion heavyweight boxer of the world, to the motion picture fans of the country.

Fred L. Wilke, president of the corporation, who has been in New York for a week making arrangements for the distribution and exploitation of "The Challenge of Chance," which is Willard's first picture, said that the entire cost of this campaign would be borne by his company, the producers of the picture.

"When we promise to the exhibitors of the country a big advertising campaign to put over 'The Challenge of Chance' in a manner commensurate with the importance of the production and the champion," said Mr. Wilke, "we mean to do it. I know that there is hardly a big picture made that the producers of it do not promise the exhibitors of the country big things in the way of advertising co-operation. I also know, and so do the exhibitors, that these pledges seldom are redeemed.

"The Continental Pictures Corporation proposes to back up its pledge with real money. We will pay for the newspaper advertising, the posting and such other items as may be necessary to put our production over in a way that it will make a lot of money for the exhibitors who get the first-run privilege. We have already started work on our twenty-four sheets, newspaper ads and other accessories that are to be used in this campaign.

"I am not prepared to say just yet what methods will be pursued in the marketing of 'The Challenge of Chance,' but we have virtually decided on them, and all that remains to be done in connection with our distributing plans is to clear up a few minor details. However, until the plan is complete I shall delay announcement of what we propose to do.

"But the exhibitors may rest assured that when we do give to the public an outline of our sales methods they will be found to be sound, equitable, and founded on the best interests of the exhibitors."

Accuracy in Production Essential Says Brabin

CHARLES J. Brabin, the well-known director, gave expression in an interview this week on the necessity for the utmost conscientiousness in his line of work.

"The tendency to slur accuracy and care in production," said Mr. Brabin, "is one of the weaknesses often encountered in the motion picture industry. The enormous strain of piloting a production involving hundreds of scenes and innumerable details is bound to tell on those who lack the stamina to cling to an unvarying standard of perfection. But when one remembers that motion pictures are merely a combination of numberless small details, all of which must be perfectly combined and accurately expressed, one can readily see that it is well nigh fatal to the finished product to permit any deviation from possible accuracy. In 'La Belle Russe' the William Fox production on which I am now working, I was confronted with the problem of attaining a genuine British atmosphere, I have lived in and played in London, and therefore was enabled to strive with a certain fore-knowledge for certain effects required in this picture. For instance, I know that from a certain section of the city pigeons would naturally be observed wheeling through the air. On this account I imported thirty-five pigeons of a certain breed from Blackfriars, London, to be used in this production.

"I also have striven to represent with fidelity in this picture the Picadilly Johnny, English prototype of the American stage-door Johnny. For this purpose I obtained the services of real, dyed-in-the-wool picadillians who actually used to hang around the stage door of Covent Garden.

"The exterior of Deep Dean Castle, figuring in 'La Belle Russe,' which stars Miss Bara, is quite an accurate representation of an old English palace, although we obtained it on the banks of the Hudson by photographing a magnificent feudal-like mansion."

Universal is Busy in Comedy Productions

THE comedy companies of Universal City are putting forth their best efforts in the newest subjects assigned to them, and according to reports many laughs are contained in the several productions.

William S. Campbell has started work on the latest Animal comedy with the working title of "Wild Lions and Loose Bandits." These new animal comedies are a new departure in the comedy field, and Universal expects them to become the leading comedy pictures on the market. In the latest one, Joe the Monk, Charley the Elephant and Caesar the Lion have the leading jungle roles, while the actors supporting the animal casts are: Dora Rogers, Bob McKenzie, F. A. Ritter, Larry McGrath, Clarence Covrin, George Allen and W. E. Paquett.

Neal Burns and Josephine Hill are working in a one-reel comedy with the tentative title of "Whose Job's Hardest." The one-reel feature is being directed at Universal City by Al Santell.

Reggie Morris, formerly with the Sennett comedies, has just completed a one-reel comedy entitled "Double Trouble."

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are said to have a side-shaker in their newest comedy, subject "The Professional Elopers." They are working on the production with Mildred Moore, in their leading feminine support.

Praises Famous-Players Pictures

Alec Lorimore, Managing Director of Feature Films, Ltd., Australia, Says Paramount Has Premier Position in That Country

"THE theatre situation in Australia is very difficult to understand by anybody accustomed to great centres such as New York, Chicago and other film centers in the United States." The above is quoted from a letter sent to the Publicity Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New York by Alec Lorimore, Managing Director of Feature Films, Ltd., by which name the Australian branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is known.

"In Australia," continued Mr. Lorimore, "we have a very sparse population in a huge continent, the total of which is somewhere around five million people.

"There are two main centers of film distribution—Sydney and Melbourne. The combined population of these cities is somewhere between 750,000 and a million. Then there is a third city, Adelaide, and two other cities of less population, although no whit the less photoplay enthusiasts—Brisbane and Perth. These cities have a population ranging from 200,000 down to 35,000, and of course there are many other cities and towns of considerable population, and many ranging down to a thousand and under, a great many centers not being over 200 each.

"It can be authoritatively said of Famous Players-Lasky productions, as distributed by Feature Films, Ltd., that they are shown in the great majority of the theatres in the larger cities, and are distributed to theatres in practically every community of importance in Australia.

"Our methods of distribution are second to none in this territory, and not only does the Feature Films, Ltd., rank as the premier exchange for general efficiency, but it has branches in all the important centers throughout Australia.

"With the country as it has been for some three years," continued Mr. Lorimore's letter, "practically all of the best film men of experience were away at war, and recruits for the management of the theatres, as well as the distributing points, had to be selected from the big stores and other walks of life, where they had some training in advertising and salesmanship, and these men had to then be carefully trained in film matters. It naturally took time to make film experts from men of no experience or training, but this was accomplished despite difficulties, and the organization was enabled to continue throughout the war without hitch or interruptions. And you have no idea," continued Mr. Lorimore, "how the public appreciated these high-class productions at a time when clean, healthy theatrical amusement was at a premium, and the public greatly in need of diversion.

"Today Paramount controls, under mutually satisfactory contracts, the leading houses in every big center or city throughout Australasia, having the premier position with the foremost exhibitors. All the best and biggest theatres in Australia today show Paramount pictures for one week's uninterrupted run.

"The organization is almost daily complimented by visiting showmen from other States, because in Paramount houses everything appears to be different and truly Americanized. It has an air of efficiency, cleanliness and directness, and the visitors are unstinted in their compliments and appreciation."

First National Eulogizes Marshall Neilan

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit contract with Marshall Neilan, the young director of several recent successes, is considered by that organization an acknowledgment of his "arrival" among the biggest directors of the day.

Twenty-eight years ago Mr. Neilan was born on the Pacific Coast, where he obtained an education which ended with high school. After working his way from "extra man" in a San Francisco stock company to the place of leading juvenile, Mr. Neilan had a brief period of work in Los Angeles and San Francisco stock and a little road experience with Barney Bernard. He then joined the Biograph Company and was later with Kalem, Universal, American, and Famous Players.

Besides his very recent successes, Mr. Neilan has produced "Mice and Men," "The Country Boy," "The Silent Partner," Freckles," "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," "Hit-the-Trail-Holliday," "Hearts of the Wild," and others.

His three latest successes are "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet; "Daddy Long Legs," with Mary Pickford; and "The Kingdom of Dreams," in which Anita Stewart is shortly to be seen. This picture will be completed in time, it is said, to allow Mr. Neilan to go to work on his initial First National about June 1, according to the progress already made.

Mr. Neilan's success is due, it is said, to his ability to weave into any picture a maximum of human touches. With a nack for avoiding the strained, and including the "every day" bits which never fail to get laughs, or to bring a tear to the eye, he is making pictures which in their human element are declared to be unsurpassed. When he goes to work for First National he will start with a picture based on a best seller, it is stated. The name of this picture is not to be announced until after work on it has started.

Has "Chantecler" Scene

Not to be outdone by Charles Swickard's setting for the Midnight Revue scenes of May Allison's new starring feature, "Almost Married," in which the star will be seen as a prima donna surrounded by a chorus of terpsichorean beauties in a vivid reproduction of the New York Roof Garden, Henry Otto, who is directing Viola Dana in that star's newest comedy drama, entitled "Some Bride," is introducing in this piece a barnyard spectacle which is expected to invite comparison with the Maude Adams production of 'Chantecler."

New Photographic Effects in "The Fear Woman"

The "long shots" in Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn picture, "The Fear Woman," are said to be the result of a new discovery in motion photography. Edward Gheller of the Goldwyn studios at Culver City has discovered a way to eliminate the glare which settles immediately in front of the camera when the lens is focused for a distance shot. The new method is especially helpful in photography through a window, where a glass adds to the chances of a blue. To overcome this, Mr. Gheller has experimented by greatly increasing the light behind the camera, and so softening the effect directly in front of it. In consequence, "long shots" along roads, and through doors and windows, have been visibly clarified, it is stated.

Exhibitors Attend Showing of Warner Feature

Many of the foremost exhibitors of the United States, attended the first showing of the initial Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White," featuring H. B. Warner, which was held during the past week in all the Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges through which it will be released.

This production from the Jesse D. Hampton studios was greeted with enthusiasm by the critical bookers of first-run attractions, it is declared, and from reports at hand it is believed that "The Man Who Turned White" will "go across" in spectacular fashion.

Ships Thomas Prints to Various Exchanges

First-run showing of Selznick Pictures' first New Series production, "Upstairs and Down," starring Olive Thomas, will be announced shortly, it is said, as shipment of prints is now well under way. During the last few days prints of this subject have been shipped to Select branches at Boston, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and many other points. It is expected that before many days have passed every Select Branch manager will be in possession of at least one print of this production.

From present indications, it is stated, "Upstairs and Down" is bound to be an immense success.

Suspense Is a Necessary

"The question of suspense is one of the greatest in picture production," said Rex Beach, at the Goldwyn Studios when supervising the picturization of his latest masterpiece, "The Crimson Gardenia," released May 18.

"EVERYBODY'S BUSINESS"

Special Service Section on

H. B. Warner in "Man Who Turned White"

THERE should be careful study given "The Man Who Turned White" by exhibitors who are going to show this Henry B. Warner feature, because full advantage wants to be taken of all the elements. You do not want to leave the impression that this is purely a desert picture, which it is not, and you want to get in the dramatic appeal, the love element and the spice of the dance scenes.

If you will give this your earnest attention, unusual advertising and pay particular attention to the atmosphere and the music, you will get far more out of it than with mere ordinary treatment. We would advise you to plan the length of the run and the exploitation on the word-of-mouth advertising that the offering will create, and to make the run long enough to take advantage of the heavy newspaper display that will pay you.

Henry B. Warner has been away from the screen some time, but there is no doubt that he will be well remembered for his work with Triangle, where he made some very strong productions. Since then he has appeared in "Wrath," one of the "Seven Deadly Sins" series, and in "God's Man."

We would be mighty sure to make it clear that this is a happy picture, with strong dramatic qualities.

THE story: We are introduced to Warner as Ali Zaman, chief of a band of Bedouin robbers lying in wait to rob a merchant of Mzab crossing the desert with his goods. There are some splendid desert scenes, and these are given a blue tone that makes them all the more attractive.

In the train is Ethel Lambert, niece of the wife of the merchant of Mzab, who is going with her for a visit, and in command of the guard Capt. Beverly, of the French Legion, who is madly in love with Ethel. We see the captain pressing his suit, but she tells him that it may be only the spell of the desert moon and hesitates. Just at that moment Ali Zaman crawls up behind the sand dune, and, as he recognizes the soldier his face becomes the picture of hate. At first he draws his pistol to kill him, but then he concludes that it is better to make him suffer eternally by stealing the woman he loves. So he strikes the captain over the head with the revolver at the moment his followers raid the camp and then carries the girl away.

Scarcely have they arrived at the Bedouin camp than Joudar, another leader of the band, sees the girl and longs for her. He offers to pay Ali a heavy price, but the latter realizes the treatment of Joudar's women and refuses. Then we have the scene of the struggle in Ali's tent, when his tunic is partly torn from him, revealing that the man's body is WHITE. He admits it and tells her that he hates the race, and she turns and accuses him of being a renegade. Then a title tells us that he still bears the white man's burden—the ingrained heritage of chivalry. But something else, too, speaks to him, and he decides to restore the girl to her people, though he knows that he will incur the undying hatred of Joudar.

NEXT we see the girl in her aunt's home, happy and beautiful, with the French officer still paying his court. And then we are transferred to the Ali Baba cafe, where the voluptuous dancing girls amuse the patrons, and there the queen is Fanina. We see Ali, now dressed in the white of the desert country, now Captain Rand and beloved of Fanina. She rushes to his arms and welcomes him after his long absence, and then he confesses to her that he and Ali Zaman are the same. And she quickly guesses that some woman is the cause of his change.

The dancing girl asks whether he knows that his "old friend," Captain Beverly, is in the city, and tells him that he is a fool to shield the officer's guilt at his own expense. He replies that Beverly saved his life in battle, and he feels under obligation not to speak.

Seeing the sights of Mzab come the merchant and his wife's niece, and after watching the dancing girls they are importuned by the beggars for tips, and when the merchant refuses they are set upon. To their rescue comes Captain Rand, and the girl recognizes him as Ali Zaman. She does not betray the fact, but there is love in her eyes as she says: "I regret that we have not met before. If you will call we will try to make up for lost time."

And the dancer observes: "So that is the woman!"

BUT following Zaman and the girl for whom he lusts has come Joudar, and he notes the love of the dancer for Rand, and suggests to Fanina that she wants the white man and he the girl, but the dancer will not listen at the time. But Rand is now completely in love with Ethel, though Beverly presses his suit all the more ardently. And we have: "A maid uncertain in her

At left scene with Warner as Ali Zaman in his tent with Ethel and right and center two pictures of him, now "turned white," and the girl. The contrasting pictures are excellent for advertising

Oriental atmosphere should be brought into the exploitation. At the right is Capt. Rand and Fanina, the dancer, and at the left the dancer confronts Ethel in Rand's apartment after the latter has gone back to the desert. In the center is a scene where Zaman is sending the girl to safety, though he knows that this act means arousing a bitter enemy against him heart—a man who wooed with eloquent words—and one who felt that he could not speak because a cloud rested on his name."

After days his love became too great and he sweeps her into his arms. At that moment Beverly enters the room and confronts Rand, telling the girl that the man has been court-martialed and dismissed from the army because of an affair with his major's wife. In his rage Rand chokes Beverly into unconsciousness. The girl is sure that Beverly has lied, but there comes to Rand a vision of how Beverly saved his life, and he replies that the officer did not lie, but adds that he cannot explain. Then he leaves, telling the girl he will wait a week to hear whether she will forgive him.

By this time Fanina, angered by the failure of Rand to visit her, agrees to Joudar's plan to abduct the girl that she may have the white man for hers. And so, when on the fifth day, she sends a note to Rand telling him that she loves him, the servant, in Joudar's pay, takes the note to the latter. Rand rides away over the desert, and that evening the servant, pretending to be badly hurt, staggers home with a story of his being set upon and robbed.

THEN seeking Rand comes to his apartments the dancer, only to find him gone, and a moment later Ethel arrives and the two meet. Fanina tells him that Rand has ridden across the desert to the coast and "you drove him away," and then adds that Beverly is the one guilty of the charge of which Rand was convicted.

Fanina has heard Joudar say that he will watch Rand die by inches after he gets the girl, and then she sees Ethel ride away out into the desert in pursuit of her sweetheart. The dancer is confronted with the problem that in saving Rand she must save the girl too—and lose Rand. But she warns Beverly, who gathers together the troopers for the pursuit. Rand is captured, but escapes and in his flight meets the girl. From either side come enemies, and they stop to fight and in a moment are joined by Beverly. Rand presses a revolver to Beverly's head and makes him take the girl away, but she escapes and returns to Rand. Beverly is mortally wounded and then confesses his guilt. There is but one bullet left. Rand is about to send it into the girl's temple when the troopers arrive and wipe out the Bedouins.

WE advise large and striking advertising in this. There can be one mighty good one used by showing at one side Warner as Ali Zaman, and on the other in white man's attire, connected with the question: "Can this be the same man?" Or you can use the scene with Warner as the Bedouin with the girl in his grasp, and then as the white man in his arms. Or the two scenes of the officer. Warner and the girl together near the start of the picture and then right at the end. The main reason for this is that it removes any idea that this is an all-foreign picture when the scenes of Warner as the band leader are very brief.

"Seized by Bedouin robbers in the heart of the desert, beautiful Ethel Lambert, American girl, in her struggle tore the tunic from the leader—and his body was WHITE. She accused him as a renegade and he answered that he hated the race. Yet his chivalry was aroused, and though he knew that he was arousing the lasting hate of his band, he set her free.

"Next she saw him as a white man in the Oriental dance hall—and knew him for the same. Love came quickly, but he could not speak because of the disgrace that he bore—bore for another, who had saved his life in battle. But one day the girl swept him from his feet and he crushed her in his arms, and then the other man confronted them and told the story of his disgrace.

"That is just the start of the amazing story of the desert, of the charms of seductive dancing girls, of a man's wonderful chivalry and a woman's wonderful love. It grips and it throbs at the very heart—but it leaves one happy in the end."

HERE is aonther one that takes a slightly different turn:

"Convicted of the wrong of another and ousted from the Foreign Legion, this man turned to hate of the white race. As leader of a Bedouin robber band he could pillage the goods of the men, but when there came to him a captive, the beautiful American girl, something stirred in his breast and made him restore the girl at the risk of his own life.

"When she saw him again she knew that she loved him, but so did the beautiful dancing girl of Ali Baba's cafe, and the latter schemed with the Bedouin that wanted the white girl to steal her that she herself might have the white man. Then the dancer sees the man she loves ride out in the desert to his doom. She knows that by saving him she will save the girl, too—and lose the man. What does she do? The answer and the act of the officer who had stained the honor of Rand form one of the most dramatic stories of the screen—and supply an ending just to your liking.

"The star is the superb Henry B. Warner, back on the screen again, with Barbara Castleton and a superb cast in a wonderful story of the desert sands and the Eastern dance halls."

Shorter ones:

"Fanina, the dancing girl, loved Rand with all her life, and she saw him ride forth to his doom. She knew that in saving him she would save the American girl that he loved—and that by saving him she would lose him. And Fanina loved with all the ardor of the East. What did she do?"

"She was in the grasp of the Bedouin chief, his captive. She tore the tunic from him—and he was WHITE. He told her he loathed the race, but he became white again in fact—and in her own eyes in the most surprising, gripping story that you have ever seen."

"There is the charm of the Eastern dancing girls, the terrible passions of the Bedouins, the sacrifice of a man who was disgraced to save another, battles on the desert sands, intrigue, and wonderful love in this picture. There is not a moment that you do not grip your seat—and in the end perfect satisfaction."

Warner's Return to the Screen Should Be Featured

WE have already suggested a higher scale of exploitation on this picture than the average feature, and we would certainly advise the exhibitor to seek to make new friends for his theatre with "The Man Who Turned White." Everyone knows Henry B. Warner as one of the most eminent of English actors, though he has been long in this country, and you do not have to offer any excuses for him.

We would suggest sending a special letter, artistically gotten up and printed on good paper, to a full mailing list, including all the patrons of the legitimate stage in your section. Let it read something like this:

> We regard it as a privilege to be able to announce to you the return of Henry B. Warner to the screen. This eminent English actor, who has spent the greater portion of his career in this country, literally astounded the cinema world with his art during the brief time that he spent in motion pictures. His "Shell 43," "Ghost Breaker" and "Beggar of Cawnpore" will always remain distinct achievements.
> Then he returned to the speaking stage and efforts to lure him away were unavailing until this spring when he left "Sleeping Partners" in which he was starring with such great success in New York to make a series of pictures. The first of these we are going to show at the Empire theatre for a week beginning June 3. It is "The Man Who Turned White" and we feel sure that you will agree with us that it is one of the most remarkable screen offerings that you have ever seen.
> It is not a mere motion picture, but the work of a superb artist in a gripping, happy ending story of the deserts and the dance halls of the east—of a wonderful love. It has been made on a lavish scale and Mr. Warner is supported by Barbara Castleton and so many other notables that were not Mr. Warner himself the artist supreme we would be tempted to call this an all star cast.

STRONG CAST

THERE is an unusually strong cast in "The Man Who Turned White," and we would call attention to the fact in the advertising, but make the players subsidiary to the star and avoid the "all star" advertisement. Warner is the big player to be featured.

Barbara Castleton is unusually attractive as the leading woman. She is an Arkansas girl with a brilliant stage record and has been seen in many big pictures. The latest was with William Faversham in "The Silver King."

Carmen Phillips, another mighty well known player, is physically appealing as the dancing girl, and this element should always be brought out in the exploitation—not offensely, but through the sacrifice she makes for the man she loves.

Wedgewood Novell of New Hampshire, thus affording you an appeal to all sections, plays Captain Beverly. He was last seen with Alma Rubens in "Diane of the Green Van." "The Flower of Doom," "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle" and "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller."

Eugenie Forde has had a long career on the stage and screen and appears here as the aunt.

IN your lobby display there should be real art. We could suggest nothing finer than to have a reproduction of the tent interior which is shown in one of the scene pictures that we have reproduced. This should show the top, walls and back with the proper opening for the entrance. This should be made of brightly colored and striped awning material with the sides hung with rich Oriental rugs and Egyptian designs. The spirit can be further carried out by having incense burning in the lobby. The ticket seller should be garbed as an Arabian dancing girl and the door attendant as a Bedouin, or Arab. Then the ushers, if you employ girls, can be attractively attired in the familiar harem costume with silk pantalettes and bodices.

We would confine the remainder of the lobby display to scene pictures and there are some striking ones, particularly those showing the dancer. We would avoid anything of the freakish.

There is a striking cut-out that can be made from the 24-sheet. This shows Warner as the Bedouin chief on a snow white Arabian steed. It can also be used in connection with the electric sign or over the marquee to attract the attention of those passing up and down the street.

THERE is a splendid chance to carry the atmosphere out in a prologue or either song or dance. "A Son of the Desert Am I" offers a splendid opportunity for a baritone or bass voice. This could be put on with a desert scene. At the Strand, New York, in a similar case a setting was used showing the pyramids in the background and then toward the end there was an attractive arrangement as tiny figures of camels passed in the background just as the moon came over the pyramids.

In the case of a dance we would have a girl, or possibly two, doing an Oriental dance, but one not too broad, in a harem-like setting with rich draperies, soft colored lights and masses of flowers about.

If this is impracticable have a high class love song such as "Because I Love You Dear," or "When You Are Truly Mine," and in such a case let this song run through the feature as the theme. This theme should be introduced when Warner puts the girl on the horse, then again as the girl meets him in the dance hall, then for the love scene, as she writes the note to him and finally at the end. There can be a secondary theme of Oriental music used for the dancing girl.

Much of this class of music suggests itself. We would advise using "Sherazade," "Queen of Sheba" or "Lakme" for the overture and these can be played with the lights gold, suggesting joy, or can be well combined with some scenic setting such as we have suggested.

"In the Sudan," "Marche Turque," "Whirling Dervishes," "Dance of the Hindus," "Marche Arabe" and "Orientales" are some that suggest themselves for the desert and dance hall scenes. We would advise against trying to make this an all-Oriental score, but include a good portion of the dreamy sort of love music in the score.

There is a point right at the end where the soldiers of the Foreign Legion are seen coming and through the announcement that they take no prisoners and here an added thrill can be had with the use of "La Pere de la Victorie."

The Universal Celebrates in June

Seventh Year to Be Made Banner Occasion by Every Department in the Company, It Is Stated

WITH the celebration month of June near at hand, practically every department of the Universal company is spurred with activity, it is stated, towards making the celebration month a banner one. Universal celebrates its seventh year in the industry during the coming month. Universal is proud of its records and achievements during the past seven years, and is planning upon celebrating in a manner befitting the occasion.

Practically every producing group at the big studios in Universal City on the West coast is working hard on subjects, Joe Brandt recently left New York for the West to start new serials, and the other departments are joining in the spirit for the anniversary month.

More than extraordinary plans are being made, it is stated, by Universal's sales department. Every effort will be made by this department to make this anniversary month the biggest in Universal history. As an added inducement for every member of the sales force to put forth his best effort, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, has offered a total in prizes of $1,750. The prizes will be distributed as follows: to the exchange showing the largest percentage of increase in its gross volume of business actually played in the month of June, over the month of May, Mr. Laemmle will pay a $1,000 prize. To the office making the next best showing a prize of $500 will be given, and to the exchange office making the third best showing, $250 will be given. These prizes when awarded will be distributed among the salesmen and other employes of the exchange.

Every effort is to be made to have every theatre in America run at least one Universal picture during the month of June.

In addition to the sales department, Universal's advertising is planning some novel effects and a large amount of additional advertising will be issued during the campaign.

Universal promises the exhibitor some of the best pictures ever produced for release, it is announced, in the month of June, and it is said these pictures will do as much as any other one thing to add to the success of the celebration month and the beginning of Universal's eighth successful year.

Traverse In Drama of Canadian Northwest

A DRAMA of the Canadian Northwest wherein a woman's soul is pitted against the greed for gold is now being filmed with Madlaine Traverse as the star, "Untile Eternity" is the temporary title, and both story and scenario were written by Denison Clift. The picture is being directed for William Fox by Harry Millards, who has made several pictures with this star, including "When Fate Decides," "The Love That Dares" and "Gambling in Souls."

In this drama of the northern snows Miss Traverse enacts the role of Rose Le Belle, mother of Angela, a beautiful girl, and wife of a timber prospector, Pierre. A report that her husband, long absent, has met death in an avalanche causes Lieutenant-Colonel Bruce Knight, head of the Northwest Mounted Police and a former lover of Rose, to renew his suit. He promises Rose that he will be back for her in the spring.

When Knight returns he is accompanied by Major Hilton—who is secretly striving to undermine him and obtain his position. In place of the hand of Rose, Knight is confronted by Pierre, who, instead of being dead, has returned with the news that he is the discoverer of a rich gold mine. This mine, it appears, is on the property of one, Raoul Beaudry. Unable to acquire the property otherwise, Pierre promises Raoul that he will give his daughter, Angela, in exchange for the title, Rose, accidentally discovering this denounces the infamous compact. In her absence, however, Pierre turns Angela over to Raoul, Rose learns of Angela's plight and, confronting Pierre, wounds him. Then she rushes to the rescue of Angela, and kills Raoul in a terrific struggle with knives.

Major Hilton is implacable in his demand for the arrest of Rose as a murderess, but Knight is determined to save the woman he loves. He blocks Hilton's efforts until Jules, a guide, who is a faithful friend to Rose, slays the unspeakable Pierre—receiving his own death wound in the fight—and with his last breath takes upon himself responsibility for the killing of Raoul.

In the cast supporting Miss Traverse are Frank Leigh as Pierre Lebelle; Those Santshi as Knight, Beatrice Laplante as Angela, Minna Prevost in the role of Nattosh, an Indian servant, and Jack Nelson as Jules, the guide.

Erects Electric Sign for Elaine Hammerstein

Myron Selznick announces that, in accordance with its policy of exploiting Selznick stars by way of electric signs, as well as by many other mediums, the Selznick Pictures Corporation has erected a huge electric sign at 42d St. and Broadway to blaze forth the name of Elaine Hammerstein to New York's millions.

This sign is said to be one of the most attractive on the great white way, and, being situated on what is perhaps one of the most conspicuous spots in the city, is compelling wide attention.

Baird Completes Newest Thomas Feature

George Irving, director of Four Star Pictures, announces the completion of the newest Augustus Thomas picture, starring Leah Baird, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, the title of which will shortly be announced. Miss Baird it is said has a role that demands test after test of her acclaimed histrionic powers.

Universal Announces New Series for Walcamp

Universal announces a new series of two-reel Western dramas starring Marie Walcamp. This series to be known as the Tempest Cody series will be made while a new serial is being selected for Miss Walcamp and the stories are being written by George Hively of the Universal authorial staff and Jacques Jaccard, who will direct the two-reel features.

Miss Walcamp in these Western dramas will no doubt it is said prove a success and a drawing card to motion picture patrons because of her exceptional ability in roles of this type. She has been the heroine in many serials, amongst which are: "The Red Ace," "The Lion's Claws," and the new Universal serial "The Red Glove" which is now said to be sweeping the country with success.

Guy Smith Returns from World Trip

Guy Croswell Smith returned last week from a twenty months' trip around the world in the interests of the Government official film service. Leaving New York in July, 1917, he went first to Japan, thence through Korea, Manchuria and Siberia to Russia.

From Russia Mr. Smith went to Scandinavia, where he directed the distribution of American Government films throughout Sweden, Norway and Denmark. For the past several months Mr. Smith has been located at Berne, Switzerland.

News of Mr. Smith's future activities is expected very soon in connection with the further development of the distribution of American films throughout the foreign territory.

Lenehan Becomes Hodkinson Exchange Manager

George F. Lenehan, who for the past eighteen months has made a most successful record as manager of Goldwyn's Washington, D. C. office, has joined the W. W. Hodkinson organization in New York to become manager of that organization's metropolitan district exchange, taking charge during the current week.

On leaving Washington a proof of his local popularity was found, it is said, in a striking tribute from his fellow exchange managers of other companies. The Washington Exchange managers presented him with a heavy silver cigarette case, engraved with a message of the collective esteem of the men with whom he has been associated.

Dean Is Popular

Universal announces that Priscilla Dean is the "star of stars" and that she is gaining in popularity every day. And judging from the reports from exhibitors, it is said, Universal is not making too strong a statement. This young actress, who has won her success within a short time, has not yet reached the acme of her success, so it is stated. In fact, she is to be given much better and bigger stories according to a Universal statement.

Special Service Section on Charles Ray in "The Busher"

THERE should be three things taken into consideration by the exhibitor who has booked Charles Ray in "The Busher" —the rural atmosphere which has helped along some of this star's greatest successes, the love story and especially the appeal to the younger girls, and the baseball interest.

Except for the incident of the youth who tries to fix it so that the home team will lose this may be said to be a picture without a villain in it, though there is one little situation of the mysterious visitor where your audience will think that he is going to turn out a bank robber or something of the sort gives a very agreeable surprise. It is also a picture without a fight or a problem.

Happiness and manliness are the dominant notes running through the story and these should be featured in the advertising, which will, of course, play the name of the star and the title to the limit. We would advertise the baseball side on the sporting page, if you have a daily newspaper, because you can go stronger on that angle there and get the appeal to the fans, and then for the general advertising the heart interest and local pride should be stressed to draw attention of the public in general, and especially the few that know little about baseball.

HERE is the sort of a story: Ben Harding is the hired man for Deacon Nasby down in the village of Brownsville and the best baseball pitcher in the whole section, encouraged in the sport by the Deacon's love of the game and the admiration of Mazie Palmer, the prettiest girl in town. We meet Ben on Sunday in uniform with the Deacon reading the Bible and regretting that his principles will not let him attend the game. And early in the story we see that Ben has a rival in Jim Blair, son of the banker.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

But just as Ben is starting out the Limited which is carrying the Blue Sox home from their training trip is halted at the village by a washout, and when the members of the club see Ben in uniform they decide to have some fun at his expense. Ben and Manager Steve Brady "chose up" sides, and Ben, picking the ones whose abilities he knows selects local boys with the result that the Blue Sox team is lined up against him. At first Manager Brady thinks his players are "stalling," because of their failure to hit, and when they assure him that he's got more curves than a stovepipe, and when he strikes out Slattery, who has hit .425, the manager is stirred to new interest.

It is at the "Shadow Social" that the good news comes, and where there is lots of comedy and a chance to do things with your musical score. There is a sheet stretched acress the stage of the town hall, and each girl stands between the sheet and a light, and then their sweethearts bid for them, the winner getting also the girl's lunch, which they divide. Mazie has tipped Ben off as to the manner in which she will arrange her hair ribbon, but the village milliner and old maid beats her to it, and both Ben and the banker's son are deceived, and heavy bidding follows until Ben is broke when the Deacon comes to his rescue. But Jim has in the meantime peeked behind the scene, and knows the truth and abandons the field to Ben, much to the latter's discomfiture.

Then comes in the station agent with a telegram. In the village no one ever gets a telegram unless some one is dead, and Ben is deathly afraid to open it, but he is forced to do so and finds that Brady is ordering him to report. Immediately he is hailed as the town hero.

On his arrival in the big city there is more comedy, as he's afraid to pass the be-uniformed porter at the hotel entrance, and with the mock examination that the players put him through.

But success gives Ben a terrible case of the big-head. He's forgotten all about the folks back home, and especially Mazie since he has fallen under the lure of Pearl, a typical city product.

STILL Brownsville is intensely loyal to him, and when the Blue Sox come to play their first game in the nearest big league city the people of Brownsville, Mazie included, decide to go and do honor to Ben, but when he sees them in the grandstand and the other players begin to

At left Ben, the farmhand and pitcher sees the banker's son courting his girl, center the prodigal steals back home and left he finds his old glove saved for him

At the right Ben "chooses up" with the big league manager with out knowing his identity and at the left there is seen the result of too much self esteem for the "great" pitcher is being yanked from the box and sent "back to the bushes." But in the center he has become his old self and is greeted as the hero after he has won the great game—for the sake of the girl he loves guy him he repudiates them as a "bunch of hicks that think they know me." He ignores them all, including Mazie, and instead goes to a box to talk to Pearl.

But here Ben's chestiness costs him the job, for he has nothing but conceit and has ignored training with the result that he is quickly yanked from the box and then sent "back to the bushes." Then he finds that Pearl has lost interest in him, and that his townspeople have departed.

In rags we find him stealing back to his old place, asking the Deacon to take him back, and the Deacon not only does so but gives him his old glove which he has saved. But Ben is now too ashamed to face the girl, and the other people of the town shun him because he denied them in the big city. Then Ben vows never to play ball again.

Then comes the championship game. The Brownsville pitcher has been bribed by the banker's son to leave town, as the latter is betting against the home town. Mazie's brother, Billy, has mortgaged the home to bet on Brownsville, and when he sees the game going against him he rushes to Ben at work in the field, even shunning the game. His own pleas avail nothing, but when he tells the boy that the roof over Mazie's head is at stake he quickly yields. A thrilling finish and victory follow, and then the girl.

There is an added touch. The mysterious stranger whom your patrons will probably suspect of being a city crook turns up and announces that he has been sent by Manager Brady to watch for the time when Ben loses his conceit and then send him back to the team.

But this time Mazie goes with him.

UNDOUBTEDLY you will use a picture of Ray either in the uniform of the Brownsville team, or as a member of the Blue Sox in your newspaper advertising, but if you have sufficient space we would also suggest that another scene picture be introduced at the bottom to suggest the heart appeal. There is one that we have reproduced which shows him at the gate telling his sweetheart good-by that is particularly appropriate.

Then, except for the separate display that we have suggested for the sporting page, there should be this girl element brought into the selling talks. If you use one of the full-length pictures of Ray in uniform you will have ample space at the side for the selling talk, which need not be in large type if sufficiently indented. This one just about does that "There was just one thing that Ben Harding loved better than baseball—and that was Mazie Palmer. He was the best pitcher in that whole section of the country and he had been saving up for months to buy a new glove, but at the village 'Shadow Party' he went broke bidding for the 'company' of his sweetheart.

"Then came the call to the big league team and Ben went pledging his love to Mazie and his loyalty to the home town. He soon forgot them, his head swelled and he worshipped at the feet of an adventuress. And when the village folk came to pay him homage he didn't know 'the hicks'—avoided the little country girl and went to the city woman.

"Just at that moment things crashed about him. The manager took him from the box and sent him 'back to the bushes,' shamed and spurned at home. How the big moment came and how for the sake of that one little girl in the grandstand he made a new man of himself and won new fame and fortune is something that you should see for yourself."

HERE are a couple of others:

"Winning athletes have to have a 'heart' —courage to win. Down in Brownsville he was only a busher, but Ben was unbeatable with that little Mazie cheering him on.

"But then the big city and the big league team and the wiles of an adventuress and conceit drove the thought of the country maid away—he lost his heart and he lost his job. 'Back to the bushes' he was sent and what he found there gave him a real hold on fame—and will delight you through and through.

"It's the thrill of a great ball game with the beautiful love story of a country town thrown in.

"Down home the folks were watching the scores every day and reading about Ben's success in the big league. One little girl thrilled with every victory—for to her he had pledged his love.

"But the lure of the big city was too much for him. When the home folks came to see him play he 'didn't know the hicks' —not even little Mazie.

"And just then he blew up—it was 'back to the bushes' for him. Then he found that he needed something more than a strong right arm to win ball games—and he found that something back in Brownsville and never lost it again."

Then some shorter lines:

"He was the greatest pitcher on earth when little Mazie was looking on, but when she wasn't there to cheer him he got a ticket back to the bushes. Next time he decided to bring the little girl with him—and he was the king of the league again."

"With his brain clear and the love of a little girl in his heart he was unbeatable. But with self-esteem bulging his forehead and a vampire for his eyes, he blew up—and it was back to the bushes again to learn the virtue of simplicity and love."

"The thrill of a great ball game—the comedy of a country village—the lure of the city and the price of egotism—the loyal love of a pretty girl—and the big crisis that holds you close in your seat—those are some of the things you will see in 'The Busher.'"

"With the worn old pitcher's glove and the little girl in his heart he was unbeatable, but when he forgot the girl he was a lemon for any to pick. But he got them back—at the end of the most thrilling ballgame you ever saw."

"Down in the village every one was proud of Ben, and he was the greatest pitcher on earth there. But the white lights dazzled him and he lost control of himself and the baseball, so it was back to the bushes until he realized that there was something else in the world but egotism. And he learned it."

At left Ben is unlucky in his selection at the "Shadow Dance" and at the right he knows "someone is dead" when a telegram comes. In center scene at parting with Mazie

Sport Organizations Should Work For You Here

APPEAL through all local baseball organizations is so apparent as to need more than passing mention here. We have already suggested separate advertising on the sporting page and we believe that you will have no trouble in getting the sporting writer to give you a special story. Charles Ray is a ball player himself and that will give you something on which to base the story.

If your city is a member of a regular league you should distribute folders among the crowds for several days preceding the opening of the engagement. You should find the manager ready to cooperate because this picture will stimulate interest in the game and will help him as much as you. You can add to the effect by having the boys doing the distributing dressed in "Brownsville" uniforms.

You can get the names of the managers of the amateur teams from the newspaper and these should be circularized. The local Y. M. C. A. and any other sporting organizations will be found ready to cooperate, especially when you tell them that this is an absolutely clean picture and works for manliness.

Sporting goods dealers should be willing to cooperate by displaying scene pictures and possibly a cut-put of the star in uniform in their windows. Department stores that handle sporting goods will probably devote one of their windows to special displays.

FOR MATINEES

Here is a Picture to Make Appeal to the Young

FOR exhibitors who are finding their matinee business falling off, here is a chance for a little special exploitation that is apt to get all of the children to the theatre. It would probably be a good thing for exhibitors to try a special Saturday morning matinee here.

You ought to be able to get the support of the school teachers for this because it is the sort of a picture that encourages boys and girls to live a clean life, to be loyal and true. An outline of the story, or better still, an advance showing of the film, to the teachers will get this result.

Getting the children to the theatre will also increase your adult patronage, because the youngsters are pretty sure to talk this up at home.

While we would try to get the attendance of all the baseball fans, we would not advise offering prizes or reduced admission for teams in uniforms. You are likely to have a mighty noisy audience.

But you can excite interest by inviting your league team members to be present at the first night's showing and then probably get an additional story in the newspapers on what they think of Ray as a big leaguer.

LOBBY display can take on as much of the baseball atmosphere as you wish, but we would keep it as simple as possible. One of the three sheets will furnish you an excellent cut out of Ray in the Blue Sox uniform and at least a couple of these should be placed where they can be seen from the street. Another cut out can be made from the six sheet.

You can get a freak effect in the lobby by using small balloons about the size of a baseball, painted with the name of the picture in a glass enclosed flame with an electric fan that will keep them in constant circulation. Enclose the whole thing in chicken wire to carry out the screen effect.

A baseball score board in front of the theatre will attract attention. This could show the score of the game that winds up the picture, but as unfinished.

Better still if you can arrange with the local newspapers maintaining scoreboards to operate one in your lobby, or give you the data, for a week before and during the engagement, but the board should be sure to carry the announcement of the picture, too.

THIS picture is particularly well suited for music effects. If you want to carry out the baseball idea you can have a pretty girl singing "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" as the prelude. This was a mighty popular some a few years ago and tuneful.

There is another good song for a woman's voice in "In an Old Fashioned Town," and "Then You'll Remember Me," is particularly in keeping with the picture.

Incidental music offers many opportunities. The theme should be introduced where Ray and the girl are first seen together and will be repeated each time they are together. "Magic of Your Eyes" might be used as the first song and as theme.

Then for the station scene where the agent says "His name ain't Cobb" you might use "He's a Devil in His Own Home Town" or "Reuben Fox Trot." There's a chance for a hearty laugh where the Deacon hears the cheering and a chance for a bar on cornet or bassoon of "I Hear You Calling Me." "Shadowland" should be played through the scenes at the town hall until the moment that Ray sees how he has drawn the wrong girl and here you can get in a few bars of "She May Have Seen Better Days," an old favorite. The theme should immediately come back as the scenes show that neither Ray nor the girl can eat. Just a scene later on with Ray frightened at the telegram there can be used "March to the Gallows" or "I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark."

With the scenes in the big city there can be played "Sidewalks of New York" and "The Old Town Pump" and then when he sees the other girl in the hotel lobby "Pretty Baby" or "You Beautiful Doll." Then with the scene flashing back to the village play "Home Sweet Home" or "Old Folks at Home." Soft and tender should be the music for the scenes with Ray's return.

Then with the title for the mysterious stranger we would use "Slimy Viper" or one of those airs that are generally played for the villain, because this will accentuate the surprise when the audience find out who he really is.

Nearly the entire staff of the home office of Famous Players-Lasky crowded into this happy party, a result of the Paramount-Artcraft convention held in New York

Lasky Official Discusses Coming Releases

PRIOR to his leaving for New York to confer with officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on matters of importance relative to screen material, etc., Frank E. Woods, supervising director at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, discussed briefly some of the forthcoming Paramount and Artcraft pictures under way at the coast studios.

Regarding "A Very Good Young Man," a new Bryant Washburn Paramount picture, Mr. Woods said:

"Walter Woods, one of the latest acquisitions to our scenario staff, took this play, and placed it in continuity form with so much skill that the result is certain to be highly effective.

"In the case of 'You're Fired,' which Mr. Reid has recently finished under James Cruze's direction, adapted from the O. Henry story, 'The Halberdier' by Clara G. Kennedy, I cannot do better than say it is comparable, in the matter of the character portrayal entrusted to Wallace Reid, to his former delightful comedy-drama vehicles.

"'Love Insurance,' a book by Earl Derr Biggers, now being produced with Donald Crisp as director, with Bryant Washburn in the stellar role offers a most unusual plot.

"I need scarcely say that 'Told in the Hills,' in which Major Robert Warwick will star for Paramount-Artcraft special release, is destined to be a remarkable picture. George Melford is directing and Will M. Ritchey wrote the scenario from the famous novel by Marah Ellis Ryan.

"The activities of the Lasky studio are reaching full capacity, and I can truthfully state that the coming month's releases will include some of the most notable pictures we have ever produced. I have just learned that when Miss Ethel Clayton returns to start her new series of star pictures for Paramount, she will probably begin with "Young Mrs. Winthrop," Bronson Howard's successful play, which should prove ideal for Miss Clayton."

Organized Labor Approves Select's Production

SELECT Pictures big special attraction, "Bolshevism On Trial," has received the official approval of the Censor Committee of Organized Labor of Oakland, Calif. This adds another city to the list of first-run centers where Organized Labor has approved of the big production.

"Bolshevism On Trial" was booked at the T & D Theatre in Oakland, and the management of the T & D invited the Censor Committee of the I. B. O. B. M. I. S. B. and H. O. A. to view the picture which was then running in San Francisco. Mr. H. J. Glover, chairman of the committee, accepted the invitation and appointed two officials of the Committee to review the picture. The Committee made a favorable report, and Chairman Glover sent the following letter to Manager Perry of the T & D:

"Dear Sir—Upon your request I selected a committee of Union Labor men to accompany me to San Francisco for the purpose of reviewing the motion picture called 'Bolshevism on Trial.' The men I selected were W. A. Spooner and E. C. Carroll. These gentlemen are official of organized labor. After consultion we are agreed, that while some of the scenes are somewhat overdrawn for dramatic effect, yet we could see nothing whatever that would be a reflection upon organized labor or in any way obnoxious. The picture is certainly a 'thriller,' and as such is well worth seeing.

"Very truly yours,
"H. J. GLOVER,
"Chairman Censor Committee,
"I. B. O. B. M. I. S. B. and H. O. A."

The letter was further approved by W. E. Castro, organizer of American Federation of Labor, and George C. Davis of the Labor Temple Building Association.

The report of this Committee further reflects the determination of Organized Labor to put every ounce of its strength into the fight against Bolshevism and its evils in America. Samuel E. Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, has come out very strongly against Bolshevism. It is characteristic of this attitude that the Censor Committee in Oakland should place its stamp of approval on Select's big anti-Bolshevistic production.

Two of the principal supporting roles in J. Stuart Blackton's next feature film in which his "Missing" team, Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon will be reunited, have been assigned to Julia Swayne Gordon and Van Dyke Brooks, respectively.

"The Other Half" Is Next Brentwood Feature

The title announced for the third Brentwood production on which King W. Vidor has just started work, is "The Other Half." The title of the second Vidor picture shortly to be released, is "Better Times." "Since we are advised," said a Brentwood official to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "that the third production will deal with those intensely human, heart-warming and well-understood situations and characters of ordinary, every-day life which were undoubtedly responsible for the striking success of the first Vidor picture, 'The Turn In the Road,' we may assume that this third Brentwood picture will 'show the effect produced upon the other half' by the 'better times' which followed 'the turn in the road.'"

Ray and Fair Begin Work on New Feature

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair have begun work on a new picture at the William Fox coast studios. The working title is "Be a Little Sport," and the production is said to afford ample scope for the bright and breezy comedy work with which these two youthful stars have become identified under the Fox banner. Scott Dunlap is directing this picture, which contains a very pretty love story, according to report. In the cast with Ray and Miss Fair are Lule Warrenton, George Hernandez, Leota Lorraine and Eugene Pallette.

Book Helps Exploit Films

By way of co-operation with the current showing of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's big Salvation Army picture, "Fires of Faith," at the Harris Theatre, Gimbel Brothers have given over one of their large show windows on the Thirty-second Street side of their New York store entirely to a display of Charles Kenmore Ulrich's novel, "Fires of Faith," which is based upon the photoplay and has just been published by Grosset and Dunlay.

About two hundred and fifty volumes of the work are used in the display, attractively arranged in pyramids and smaller groups.

Special Service Section on

Dorothy Gish in "I'll Get Him Yet"

ONLY ONE GIRL

Little Point That Will Attract Attention

THERE is only one girl in the cast of "I'll Get Him Yet" and that point will attract attention. There are glimpses of some others in the party scene and in the railroad hearing, but they are only sidelights. You can use this in your advertising, letters and program:

"There's only one girl in the cast of 'I'll Get Him Yet,' but that one's Dorothy Gish and she has enough speed in her fun making to make up for all the rest."

Richard Barthelmess has quite a following and his name should be mentioned as well as that of George Fawcett, as the father.

THERE is going to be a whole lot of the punch in the exploitation of this picture lost if the exhibitors who have it booked fail to get into the spirit of it right at the start. There is nothing amazing, astounding or record-breaking about it, but there is a direct chance to put over entertainment with a laugh. Get in a good humor about it before you start and keep a smile in your advertising.

Dorothy Gish has come forward so much in her recent productions that she is now attracting a lot of attention and you ought to capitalize that newborn popularity of hers for all you are worth. We'd feature the fact that this isn't any famous story or the screen interpretation of any noted play, but a picture that has been written just to fit the tantalizing and laughter provoking talents of the star.

In the title you have a big asset either for straight advertising of the picture or in teaser stunts. It should be played up strong and since the picture is a farce it offers all sorts of trick chances which are discussed on another page.

THIS is the idea of it: Bradford Warrington Jones, worried by big income taxes, transfers his $25,000,000 interurban line to his daughter, Susy Faraday Jones, who takes it seriously and insists on being the real owner. But her railroading is interfered with because Harold Packard, a rich youth and Craig, her superintendent, who insist on making love to her. They only make Susy—yawn.

Right at the start we have Susy issuing an order that the trolleys shall not stop at Rivera, an incident that is to later play a big part. Next we see her at a party at her home. She yawns as the others seek to make love to her but when Scoop McCreedy, a reporter, arrives on the scene she loses that yawn. She determined to make him propose to her and does, but he choses a bad moment to ask father for the consent. Jones, Sr., has just received his income tax statement and he thinks that he has been sent a bill for the whole war. So he calls Scoop a fortune hunter and throws him out.

The 'phone for Susy, but the youth tells her that he'll never marry a rich girl. "I'll get him yet," she cries and defying her father she leaves the house and goes on the trail. Then there follow many comedy situations, including one in which she follows him into a lunch wagon, orders beans as he does—and then even follows him to "chili." She buys an engagement ring and then cornering him in a romantic spot she declares that her father has thrown her out and promises never to accept a cent of her father's money—without mentioning the millions of her own.

HARDLY has she agreed to live on his salary and they are married than Packard, the real owner of the paper on which Scoop is working, has him fired. And of all places, the young couple has gone to Rivera to live. There the citizens are in the midst of a campaign to force the railroad to stop the cars and they decide to start a newspaper. Scoop is hired to do the editing, and taking the hint of the initials "S. F." he names the owner of the railroad "Skinflint."

So Susy is put in the position of fighting her own railroad, but rather than reveal that she is rich in her own right she keeps her secret. Jealousy of Scoops has already been aroused by the attention of Packard, Craig and Hamilton, her lawyer, who she declares to be friends of her father and when Craig comes to her Rivera home with some railroad orders for her to sign she rushes him from the house and promises to meet him at the grocery store. She tells her husband that she has to go after eggs, but hardly has she left than he discovers a basket of eggs in the house and so he goes on the trail.

Then when he sees her talking to Craig he rushes home and gets his pistol and when she arrives he tells her that there are two bullets—one for her and one for himself. There is another big comedy scene in which she is able to stave off trouble once more with "a friend of father's."

Here are three striking comedy scenes and any of these will get striking attention to your advertising. At the left she has followed him to "chili" in the lunch wagon, center he refuses to talk to a "rich girl" and at the left she is "getting" him

RIVERA citizens determine to call on the railway officials and force them to stop the cars there and Susy is made spokesman. She is then in the position of demanding from her own railroad that it rescind her own order. She manages to keep Craig still with her signals, but when Packard enters she forces him back into his office and comes out with the news that it is all fixed. Once more the husband is insanely jealous, and again she is able to explain.

But the final scene comes when Craig, Packard and Hamilton, all three on independent business visits arrive at the cottage one by one. She hides one in a closet, another in the cupboard, and a third under the couch, all unknown to each other, and then hubby arrives. He is suspicious and pretends to leave, but merely slams the gate shut—from the inside—and returns to the house just when the three have come from their hiding places. Again the pistol and farcically dramatic events. Arrival of the father, confession of Susy that she is "Skinflint Jones," and explanations all the way around result in peace, and at the end we see Scoop as her manager—and Susy yawning again.

BY all means use a striking cut of Miss Gish in your advertising, whether it be a scene picture or a straight stock cut of her. There is a particularly striking scene which shows her with a grip on Scoop's arm, and dragging him along that will do finely, especially when used in immediate connection with the title.

We have illustrated a number of scenes from the picture on these pages, and for those who design their own advertising we are very strong in suggesting that these which indicate action should be used. Then get right into the selling argument:

"Susy Jones had a will all of her own. Her father found that out when he gave her an interurban road to cut down his excess income tax. Susy insisted on running the road herself—and she did. Also she wouldn't listen to love. Men only made her yawn.

"Then along came Scoop McCreedy, newspaper reporter, but he refused to marry any rich man's daughter. 'I'll get him yet,' she exclaimed, and then she started. It was like a million Leap Years rolled into one. Finally she pretended that her father had thrown her out and then she won him.

"The next minute she was living in a cottage down in the town where she had forbidden her cars to stop, her husband wsa running a newspaper that described the owner as 'Skinflint' Jones and she was actually heading a delegation to protest to the railroad. And complications—you never saw anything so busy. Jealous husband and revolvers—and all of them laughs for you. It's pure farce—PLUS the personality of Dorothy Gish and a superb cast."

POSSIBLY that sounds a little serious, so here these get further away from that angle:

"Only effect that men had on Susy Faraday Jones, owner of a $25,000,000 railroad and a chip off the old block, was to make her yawn—until she saw Scoop McCreedy, newspaper reporter. But he wouldn't have her because she was a rich man's daughter.

"That didn't worry Susy a bit. 'I'll get him yet,' she declared, and then she forgot about everything else but the man she wanted. She laid in wait for him at the newspaper office and even followed him into a 'chile and beans' wagon. 'You've spolied my lunch,' he declared, but she simply muttered again, 'I'll get him yet.'

"Then when she framed up a story about her father throwing her out of the house and agreed to never take a cent of her dad's money—not mentioning the $25,000,000 of her own—she landed him.

"She thought that her troubles were over, but they had just started. Her lawyer and the railroad officials insisted on calling on her on matters of business, and every time her hubby grew madly jealous. She even abused her own railroad and protested against her own order to hold his love.

"In every one of those troubles there's a hearty laugh for you, it would be a shame to make you lose a single chuckle. It's the fastest moving farce you've seen in years. Dorothy Gish steps on the speed and you'll be able to hear the people roar a block away."

And another one:

"'I'll get him yet' became Susy Faraday Jones' motto when the man she loved refused to marry her because she was a millionaire's daughter. So she took up the job of following him, waylaid him at the newspaper office, followed him into the chile and beans lunch wagon and then landed him with the story that her father had thrown her out.

"That just started her troubles, for you see she was the owner of a $25,000,000 railroad and lawyers and officials insisted on calling at her cottage. And every time her hubby's suspicions were aroused—and he has a great big revolver. Finally he caught three of them hiding in her house. O-o-h. But you see nothing really happened—the revolver wasn't loaded, for one thing. And then the truth came out and the youth was convinced that millions weren't so much in the way after all.

"Susy and her hubby have a lot of serious moments, but the graver they are for them the bigger the laugh for you. It's pure farce—so don't come unless you can check your dignity at the door."

Shorter lines:

"She had to pretend to lose her millions to win the man she loved. But then they kept bobbing up again just at the wrong time. Hubby thought those lawyers and officials were all trying to make love to wifey, and you'll laugh your eyes red at the way she tried to govern both the millions and hubby."

"Hubby insanely jealous—and three men hidden in her house. Enter hubby with a big pistol and the callers discovered. The gun wasn't loaded for one thing—and then it's a roaring farce, with Dorothy Gish the laughmaker in chief."

"Wifey meeting a strange man around the corner when she pretended to be going to the grocery. Well—it's all over now—two bullets in the pistol—one for her and one for himself. Sounds tragic, doesn't it? But if you don't weep tears of laughter we're no judge of pictures."

Three of the striking scenes with jealous hubby and his gun. One the left is an excellent illustration for advertising

Farce Readily Lends Itself to All Sorts of Stunts

TITLE of this picture immediately suggests teaser and stunt stuff, and there is no end of the matter that can be employed, if you have found that occasional use of these plans bring business to your theatre.

One plan can be worked through the newspapers or by the mailing plan. In the former case use a space single column about an inch deep, with simply the title of the picture quoted. These should be run in advance of any announcement that the picture is coming to your theatre. Be sure to quote the title, especially if you use the mailing plan, because there might be some timid people in your section who might think that this is some form of a threat.

Then if you use the mailing plan follow this up the day before the showing by sending another card to your patrons, reading:

"I've got him. It was some job, bullieve me.

"Dorothy Gish."

You'll scream with laughter at her troubles. Come and see how she landed the man of her choice in "I'll Get Him Yet," at the Strand theatre, Monday and Tuesday.

If the newspaper plan is followed the same style should be followed in a display of considerable size, with the sentence, "I've Got Him," featured in large type, and then a striking scene from the play or a picture of Miss Gish, and then further selling arguments on the picture.

IF stunts pay you, there is one that you can pull on the street by having one youth in ordinary civilian attire, and a second dressed as a girl. Then the pursuits can be pulled off in the street, with the girl pausing for breath every few minutes and shouting, "I'll get him yet."

Should you use this plan be sure that it is made clear that the girl is really a boy, and tip the authorities off in advance, so that there will be no complications. The wind-up of the chase should be made at your theatre where the crowd will see the announcement of the picture.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

Still another plan could be worked by having a youth dressed as a woman going along the streets with a lantern, and apparently peering in the face of every man. On the back of her dress there should be a sign, reading: "I'll Get Him Yet." The youth employed should be careful not to offend any one.

There is another teaser stunt that can be carried out in your lobby in advance of the showing, and all you need is a little motor and two drums. Arrange the figure of a youth as if running, and then several feet behind him a girl in pursuit. These figures should be a couple of feet in height, heavy paper and cloth being used. These should be immediately above the entrance of the theatre, so arranged that the figures will constantly be passing, which can be done by using several sets, so arranged that only one set will be in sight at any time. Directly in the center and right behind the girl have a cut out in the roll, so that when the cut out passes a particular point it will reveal the slogan, "I'll Get Him Yet." This portion should be illuminated to bring it out.

Even better would be to have two trolley cars with the head of a man showing in the first one, and that of a girl in the other.

This should be used as an advance stunt, and can be retained during the showing.

FURTHER elaboration of the lobby effect could be made by reproducing the back end of a car and letting the people enter from the sides, but be careful in this case of the fire laws and leave exits open.

The six sheet makes an excellent cut out for lobby display, and we would advise the use of the scene pictures prominently displayed because they carry a strong promise of the comedy element.

ELSEWHERE in this issue will be found an account of the way this picture was presented at the Rivoli where "Liebesleid" was used as the theme. This is introduced where the girl and the boy goes outdoors. Much of the music at the Rivoli was carried on the organ, and so does not indicate when the theme was brought back during the scenes where the couple make up.

You can get a clever effect by using as the prelude to the picture, "I Want What I Want When I Want It." This should be sung by a basso or at least baritone, and needs no particular setting, though, if one is used, a cafe scene should be shown, or at least a table. "To a Wild Rose," "Because I Love You, Dear," or any standard love song for a female voice should be used.

Victor Herbert's "Sweethearts," "Merry Widow" selection, or any of the bright and happy numbers should be used as the overture.

There is one occasion during the scenes in the home where there should be organ music only, for we have a flash of the console to indicate that.

There are several clever little touches that can be added, for instance, where the father gets the income tax bill, "Keep the Home Fires Burning." There can be a laugh accentuated with a bar of "Hot Time," where the girl eats the chili. Another can be brought in with the strain of "Oh, Promise Me!" for the scene between the girl and the boy in the park, and then toward the end where she says, "These men have ruined my home," use a strain of "The Curse of an Aching Heart."

Use "Chicken Reel" for the scene with the rooster and a bar of "Funeral March," where the chicken is buried.

You'll get a big laugh by burlesquing the scene where the youth has the gun, and playing "Keep Your Head Down, Fritzi Boy."

Coming Program Offerings

Pathe Selects Films for Wilson's Return

To Samuel B. Rose, who has the management of the motion picture entertainment aboard the Presidential transport George Washington, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has delivered the following films to be exhibited before the President and his party on the return trip to the United States:

"The Cry of the Weak," Fannie Ward's latest emotional achievement; "The Master Man," the first of Frank Keenan's independent productions; "All Wrong," starring Bryant Washburn, and four Harold Lloyd Comedies.

First Keenan Independent

"The Master Man," first of the independently made photoplays from the Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., Los Angeles studios, was released by Pathe on May 25th. It marks the beginning of eight special productions in which Mr. Keenan is star, director and producer.

"The Master Man" shows a combination of intrigue and tragedy, and love interest of an unusual twist runs through the play. The original story is by F. X. James, and the photo-dramatization was done by Jack Cunningham, a past master at the art of adapting stories for the screen, it is declared.

Pictures Boy Scouts

President Wilson, in a proclamation just made public, has recommended that the period of June 8 to Flag Day, June 14, be observed throughout the country as "Boy Scout Week." In connection with this observance of this important event, all World Film Corporation Branches are fully equipped to co-operate to the highest possible degree with the movement by the use of the famous World Picture, "The Adventures of a Boy Scout." This film is officially endorsed by the Boy Scouts of America, it is said.

Mary Pickford's first production to be distributed by First National is "Daddy Long Legs"

Fay Tincher, Rather Rowdy, in the Christie Special Released May 25

Vitagraph Wins Attention on Stage Films

Vitagraph is declared to be winning widespread attention among those conversant with the literature of the screen and the stage for its frequent presentations of film versions of stage plays. The latest of stage antecedents to reach the screen is "A Stitch in Time."

Fully realizing the value, in an advertising sense, of its previous presentation on the stage, the promotion department of Vitagraph began early to publicize the production. The result has been, so Vitagraph reports, practically complete booking by first-run houses throughout the continent with the arrival of the release date.

Evelyn Gosnell Is Featured

James Montgomery Flagg's newest Paramount-Flagg comedy is "Welcome, Little Stranger," which was released May 18.

The action hinges upon the attempt made by Peter, a suburbanite, to get a servant girl to replace one who deserted his home at a critical juncture.

Evelyn Gosnell, Earl Metcalfe and Lucy Fox are featured. Miss Gosnell, who makes her first appearance in Paramount-Flagg pictures, is today said to be one of the most popular actresses before the New York public, being featured in the Al Woods production, "Up in Mabel's Room."

"Full of Pep" for May 26

On May 26th, Metro is releasing a romantic tale called "Full of Pep," with Hale Hamilton as its star.

"Full of Pep" is descriptive of the story by Robert F. Hill, in which the author has painted a colorful picture of a hero who fights his way through indominatable odds by the sheer force of either his personality or his wits.

Ray's Latest Feature Has Well-Known Players

The personnel of the cast which supports Charles Ray in his new Paramount picture, "The Busher,' which was released May 18, is said to be such as to command attention and favorable comment wherever this Thomas H. Ince production is shown.

Mr. Ray's leading woman is Colleen Moore, whose role is that of the village belle, Mazie. Among her best known pictures are "An Old Fashioned Young Man," in which she supported Robert Harron, and "Hands Up," with Wilfred Lucas. Jack Gilbert plays the role of the wealthy young snob of the village. He is well known through his work in "Happiness," with Enid Bennett, "The Millionaire Vagrant," with Charles Ray, and other Ince pictures. The character part of Deacon Nasby is taken by Otto Hoffman. He has appeared in the productions of many companies. Billy, the heroine's brother, is taken by Jay Morley, another player of wide experience, and all of the minor parts are said to be well taken by competent players.

"When Doctors Disagree" Released May 25

Goldwyn declares that the new art of photography in which the selection of artistic locale plays an all-important part, has never been so well developed as by Director Victor Schertzinger in Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn play, "When Doctors Disagree," released May 25.

"No photoplay can hope to attain the standard demanded by contemporary theatregoers without scenic values," Mr Schertzinger remarked. "It is the paramount duty of a director to project a series of beautiful black-and-white paintings onto the silver sheet to balance his pictures and to compose them in accordance with the traditions of painting."

New Century Comedy Film

"Howling Lions and Circus Queens" is the title of the most recent Century comedy circus picture in which the Century Lion is featured. This picture is being directed by Vin Moore, and the plot concerns the trials and tribulations of a pair of rube lovers, Dot Farley and Bill Bevan.

A circus comes to the town, and Dot falls for the lion tamer. She decides to follow it, but so does Bill, and eventually the two get in a jam within the lion's cage. Then starts the chase that is said to be the most hair-raising and laughable of all pursuits depicted on the screen.

"Too Many Crooks" to Be Leslie's Next

Another book play is to serve as Gladys Leslie's release for June. The title of the play is to be "Too Many Crooks," and is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by E. J. Rath.

"Too Many Crooks" delighted thousands of readers, it is claimed, of All-Story Weekly, in which it recently ran serially.

Ralph Ince will direct the new picture play.

Dorothy Phillips, Universal Screen Star, in "Destiny"

Dustin Farnum Praises His Latest Picture

After seeing his picture screened for the first time in the projection room at the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, Dustin Farnum thus expressed himself: "It is one of the best dramas I have ever starred in," an opinion which the United star confirmed in a letter to J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres, Inc., expressing a satisfaction with all the details of his latest play. "A Man's Fight" presents Mr. Farnum as the son of an aristocratic family, who, through circumstance, pays the penalty for a deed of which he is innocent. These earlier scenes are laid in and around New York, then come scenes of Sing Sing, and the later part of the play has its location in the West, with Dustin Farnum in the role of a successful mine manager. Here adverse fate again takes a hand and love also enters into the plot.

Jack Brown with Selznick

Selznick Pictures Corp. has engaged Jack W. Brown to serve in the capacities of location man and casting director. Mr. Brown has had a wide experience in these lines having served with several prominent film companies. He gained much of his early motion picture education while acting as location man for the famous Reliance-Mutual company with whom he was connected for two years. Mr. Brown has also assisted Edgar Lewis, Tom Terriss and other well known directors.

Salisbury's Latest

"Devils Have Their Friends" is the working title of the latest story purchased as the next Monroe Salisbury subject. The story was written especially for Salisbury by Elliott J. Clawson, and the cast that has been selected includes William Stowell, Colleen Moore, Ethel Ritchie, Virginia Foltz, Sydney Franklin, Harry DuRoy, and Arthie Jassman.

Program Glances

"The Master Man," the first offering of the Frank Keenan Productions, which will be released in the Pathe Star Series on May 25, is said to be a splendid achievement and in it is answered Mr. Keenan's recently propounded question, "What is the seventh human motive?"

Larry Semon is seen as a house detective in "Passing the Buck," his newest comedy to come to the screen. "Passing the Buck" was set for release May 12.

Goldwyn's new Tom Moore picture, "The City of Comrades," which will be released in June, is said to be one of the swiftest-moving of photoplays.

A farm, New York City, the Stock Exchange and a palatial residence are included in the scenes in "Destiny." the new Jewel production in which Dorothy Phillips is starred and which will be released this month through the Universal Exchanges.

In the presentation of "The Gentleman from Indiana," which was the Success Series release scheduled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for May 18, considerable sentimental interest attaches because of a close personal friendship between Dustin Farnum, the star, and Booth Tarkington, the author.

Pathe Review No. 10, released on May 25th offers an interesting and diversified selection of subjects.. The Novograph slow motion pictures give a fascinating analysis of juggling.

The Metropolitan Opera House Ballet was used in New York in the making of Theda Bara's latest super-production, "La Belle Russe," the Belasco play adapted and directed by Charles J. Brabin. This story called for the ballet in certain theatrical scenes.

Capital acting opportunities are offered not only Pauline Frederick, but every one associated with her in "The Fear Woman," newest of her Goldwyn pictures, which will be released June 8.

Vitagraph's last release in the current month of May will be "Thin Ice," a play by Corporal Shannon Fife, which stars Corinne Griffith. "Thin Ice" is the story of the flotation of spurious mining stock and its far-reaching effect on the lives of one of the families whose head invested their all in these gilded but worthless securities.

Enid Bennett, whose new Paramount picture, "The Haunted Bedroom," is scheduled for release May 25, has the Flatbush section of Brooklyn as the chief locale of her next picture, which she is about to start at the Thomas H. Ince studio. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Ethel Richie, formerly a leading woman with Balboa films, and who has been absent from the screen for more than a year, has been engaged by the Universal to play an important feminine role in support of Mary MacLaren in "The Weaker Vessel," which is being produced at Universal City under the direction of Paul Powell.

Ernest Truex has been engaged by Amedee J. VanBuren for pictures

Roy Stewart and Mildred Manning are in "The Westerners," Released by W. W. Hodkinson

"Playthings of Passion" Set for June 8

With Sunday, June the 8th, set as the release date for "Playthings of Passion," widespread interest is being evinced, it is said, in this latest Kitty Gordon United offering, which report says by its story plot, dramatic situations, and novelty of treatment, sets a new high standard of production for Miss Gordon, while from the angle of magnificent apparel a special stress is laid upon the fact that in this feature Miss Gordon is reported to have eclipsed her every previous effort.

In this modern age of women's activities the latest United offering is said to be timely, dealing, as the thread of its story does, with the adventures of a woman social worker in the slums and tenements, and the startling outcome of the experiment in its effect upon the three principal characters portrayed.

Prominent in Miss Gordon's support are Mahlon Hamilton and W. Lawson Butt.

Says Davies' Feature Scores Big Hit

"Getting Mary Married," Marion Davies' latest picture released to date, has scored a big hit throughout the country, according to C. F. Zittel, executive head of of the opinion that comedy-drama and clever sub-titles are a much-wanted commodity in the film business at the present time. The success of "Getting Mary Married" seems to indicate the rightness of his theory.

Announces Completion of "The Open Road"

Universal announces the completion of another Special Attraction, in which Monroe Salisbury is starred, the title being "The Open Road." No Universal picture made recently has received such praise from those who have seen the first print as has this latest Salisbury picture, it is declared.

The Independent Field

Competition Waxes Keen Abroad

So Says Robertson-Cole, But Because of Exceptional List of Productions, Is Maintaining Its Position

COMPETITION in the foreign field, where the Robertson-Cole Company long ago obtained a firm footing, is very keen right now, it is stated, but because of the exceptional list of productions which it has to offer foreign buyers Robertson-Cole is maintaining its position.

Besides offering the stars series, featuring Sessue Hayakawa, H. B. Warner, H. B. Walthall, William Desmond, Bessie Barriscale, Billie Rhodes and Alma Rubens, the Robertson-Cole foreign department has a large array of specials on its list produced by some of the foremost directors in the country. Tom Ince, Ralph Ince, Julius Steger and Sydney Olcott, are among the producers of the Robertson-Cole foreign specials, in which there appeared such prominent stars as Lucy Cotton, Mary Boland, Ann Murdock, Bessie Barriscale, Charlotte Walker, Mitchell Lewis, Elaine Hammerstein, Lucille Lee Stewart, Valentine Grant, Walker Whiteside and Beatriz Michelena.

In addition to these, there are the three Robertson-Cole specials which have triumphed in this country: "Cannibals of the South Seas," which at a recent trade showing in London, is declared to have set the British exhibitors agog with enthusiasm; "The Turn in the Road," which has proved a success, and "What Every Woman Wants," a production which is said to have received wider exploitation than a majority of the big features issued this year.

The star series pictures, which have thus far been completed, are: H. B. Warner, in "The Man Who Turned White"; Sessue Hayakawa, in "His Birthright," "The Temple of Dusk," "Bonds of Honor," "A Heart in Pawn," "The Courageous Coward," and "His Debt"; Billie Rhodes, in "The Girl of My Dreams," "Hoop-la," "The Lamb and the Lion," "The Love Call," and "In Search of Arcady"; Bessie Barriscale, in "All of a Sudden, Norma," "A Trick of Fate," "Hearts Asleep," "Josselyn's Wife," and "Broken Threads"; William Desmond, in "Life's a Funny Proposition," "The Prodigal Liar," "Whitewashed Walls," and "The Mints of Hell"; Henry B. Waltham, in "And a Still, Small Voice," "The Long Lane's Turning," and "Modern Husbands"; Alma Rubens, in "Diane of the Green Van" and "A Man's Country."

Supervise Plans for the First Capital Films

S. L. BARNHARD and C. Eddy Eckels are in Los Angeles supervising plans for the first productions of the Capital Company, Inc. Two-reel Western stories and single-reel comedies will be featured on their program.

Before leaving Mr. Barnhard said, "On our arrival in Los Angeles we shall immediately engage actors for five companies, all of them to be started at once. Our stars have already been engaged, but I would prefer not to mention their names just now." I will say, however, that the exhibitors can look forward to our giving them the very best that money can buy in short features. We are going to give them something different than the usual run of Western dramas that have flooded the market for so many years. There never has been anything done so well, but what it can be improved upon, is my belief, and it is with this thought in mind that we are entering the production field.

"Up to the present the exhibitor has taken kindly to the program we have released, and because of their splendid cooperation we came to the conclusion that the best would be none too good, and now we will give them the best possible.

"We started out at a pretty good pace by giving the trade a good class of short features which we improved continually. Then we came to the place where it was impossible to get better material unless we made our own productions. Even that condition did not appear as an obstacle, and we immediately started to make arrangements whereby we

"Already these arrangements have been completed, and in a very short time our own brand new productions will be ready for release. And all this was done in a few weeks' time. In fact, the entire life of the Capital Film Company dates back only four months—so you will admit we have progressed rapidly."

Hazel Dawn Heads Her Own Company

The Amalgamated Film Corporation announce that Hazel Dawn will return to the screen, heading her own company. This is Miss Dawn's second venture in the picture field and it is rumored that her first production will be "Up in Mable's Room," her stage success, and that the company which is backing the enterprise is a unit of Wall Street Financers. They are said to have already secured the rights for the picture from the Wood office, owners of the play. The company will produce in California and also intend making a few specials in France and Belgium, it is stated.

When Miss Dawn was asked by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS if she intended leaving the stage for good, she said that at present she has no intention of doing so, but that she has won her success in both fields, by devoting her time to one thing and not trying to accomplish more than she can handle. It is expected, however, that Miss Dawn's first release will occur some time in January.

Correction

In the article sent out concerning the sale of territories on the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns it was stated through error that H. M. Savini of Atlanta, Ga., purchased the rights to these productions for Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, Alabama and Tennessee. These productions were secured by the Special Features Company, W. E. Drummond, President, Knoxville, Tenn.

Purchase Foreign Rights

Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc., exporters, announce that they have just purchased the foreign rights to three Doris Kenyon pictures which were purchased from The Parex Film Corporation. The pictures are "Inn of the Blue Moon," "Street of Seven Stars," and "Twilight," which has recently been shown at the New York Theatre.

" Service " Is Keynote of Big Feature Corp.

" Service " is a keynote of the Big Feature Rights Corporation in its dealings with the exhibitors of Kentucky and Tennessee to whom it furnishes the First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions.

" Do everything that can be done to please the exhibitor and make the picture business easier for him. Try to relieve him of any vexations or worry that could be caused by carelessness or indifference. Be as zealous for his interests as for the Big Feature Rights' interests, for as a matter of fact, his interests and the Big Feature Rights' interests are one."

This is a brief summary of Big Feature Rights policy, and it is declared that the Kentucky and Tennessee exhibitors are delighted with it, and are as well satisfied a set of motion picture people as can be found in the United States.

Every now and then the Big Feature Rights receives a word of appreciation from an exhibitor, it is said, that repays it fully for any trouble it has been to in endeavoring to give perfect service.

Completes Continuity for Next Brentwood

Tom Gibson, author of "High Speed," "The Midnight Man," "The Bulls Eye," "The Wolves in Wall Street," and many other screen productions, has completed the continuity of King Vidor's next Brentwood Production. The title has not been decided upon, but the theme of the story is "Capital" and "Labor" and is treated from a new angle. The story is a drama of " the Reconstruction Period" and in it Florence Vidor, wife of the young director, will return to the screen. David Butler and Zasu Pitts will be prominent in the supporting players.

Cissy Fitz-Gerald Films Near Completion

The arrival of a delayed spring is rushing work on the first three of the series of " Cissy " and " Bertie " comedies which are soon to be completed and released by the Cissy Fitz-Gerald Pictures, Inc. Much of the indoor work has been completed.

" Cissy's Funnymoon," which will be the first of the releases, has been projected for Miss Fitz-Gerald and her directors, and is near final arrangement and completion. The company expects to furnish the film world with something new and refreshing in comedies by the release of the first three films some time in June.

Books " Stolen Orders "

William A. Brady has just been advised by Robert Lynch, manager of the Metro Film Exchange of Philadelphia, who bought "Stolen Orders" for Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware that the Stanley Booking Company of Philadelphia has booked the Brady picture for seventy days, beginning in the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia. Mr. Lynch, in a letter to Mr. Brady, gives it as his opinion that " Stolen Orders " will be one of the biggest successes he has handled.

Goldburg Sells Territory on Swain Comedies

TELEGRAPHIC advices from the Frohman Amusement Corporation to Harry Leonhardt, president of the Poppy Comedies, producing the Mack Swain Comedies, advising him of the various territories sold, has brought forth a telegraphic response from Mr. Leonhardt. He wired Jesse J. Goldburg, general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, as follows:

" Congratulations on your success. Poppy Comedies Company will more than back you and the exhibitors on your and their confidence in me. I can assure you that our productions are one hundred per cent and from my experience other exhibitors will like them. Regards."

Mr. Goldburg is further advised that the first release was run at the California Theatre, and that this initial release was greeted with uproarious laughter.

Although Mack Swain Comedies have been announced for offering to state right buyers but one week ago for the first time, yet a record has been established, it is declared, in the disposition of franchises or contracts, and the following territories within five days have been closed.

Secures Stage Artists to Support Cassinelli

IN assembling the cast to support Dolores Cassinelli in "The Gutter," Director Albert Capellani has invaded the ranks of the legitimate stage with the resultant engagement of a number of well-known footlight favorites. The most prominent of the players recruited by Mr. Capellani from the spoken drama are Vincent Serrano, one of the most distinguished actors on the American stage and at present one of the stars of "Our Pleasant Sins," a current Broadway stage success; Marie Chambers, who has, for the past year been touring the country as Lou Tellegen's leading lady in "Blind Youth"; and Helen Lowell, who has been appearing with conspicuous success in "Cappy Ricks" which recently concluded a successful Broadway run.

Among the other players drafted from the stage to support Miss Cassinelli in "The Gutter" are May Hopkins, a popular musical-comedy satellite; De Sacia Saville, who has been a featured member of Oliver Morosco's Los Angeles stock company; and Albert Roccardi whose most notable stage achievement was his impersonation of the Jap in "Officer 666." Miss Cassinelli's supporting company which also includes Franklyn Farnum whose engagement was previously announced, is one of exceptional strength and balance and gives further emphasis to Mr. Capellani's policy of surrounding his stars with players of proved ability. All the recent additions to the cast are now at work on the new production which will mark the initial appearance of Miss Cassinelli, as a star under the banner of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc.

Revier Receives Welcome at Brunton Studios

When Harry Revier, who is directing Jess Willard, world's heavyweight champion, in a seven-reel picture, "The Challenge of Chance," arrived at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles recently, he got a real welcome home, it is said. Mr. Revier, who formerly was with Lasky and also with Mme. Petrova, knows every department head at the Brunton studios and was intimately associated with Mr. Brunton in the early days of picture making out West. They met again for the first time in over five years. After a reunion with Mr. Brunton, Mr. Revier hunted up Jack Okey, head of the Brunton studio technical department, Tom Little, head of the property department, and many others who had worked with him in the past. One of his pleasant surprises was to find in charge of the Sanborn Laboratory offices at the studio Miss Miller, a girl whom he had first introduced into the motion picture business.

Henley to Start Soon on New Production

Hobart Henley, Hobart Henley Productions, Inc., announces that he has engaged Warren Fromme, newspaper man as assistant to him in connection with his executive work of production. Leon D. Britton will be Mr. Henley's assistant director.

Mr. Henley expects to announce within the next week, the title of one of four stories by prominent screen writers, now under consideration. Following the selection of the story, Mr. Henley will start casting and expects to start actual production work within the next two weeks.

Landlord Chases Willard Off His Ranch

Jess Williard, the world's heavyweight boxing champion, was chased off a ranch near here the other day by a peevish landlord, it is stated. Willard and his company went out to the Russell Brothers ranch at Triumfo, to make some big cattle ranch scenes for his picture. "The Challenge of Chance." Through an error, the large company of actors and cowboys went to work on a ranch adjoining the Russel property. However, they went up to the owner's mansion and obtained his consent to work. The owner, who was somewhat flushed with wine, came whirling along in a big car a little later, and demanded to get into the picture. It was explained that it couldn't be done. He then told Willard and his company that just for that they'd have to get off his ranch. They got.

Adolf Philipp Company Opens Offices

The Adolf Philipp Film Corporation which was organized a few weeks ago with the author, producer and composer at the head of the concern, have opened offices and studios at 11 East Fourteenth Street, New York City, formerly occupied by the Prizma.

The studios are being entirely renovated and modernized and are being equipped with an entirely new electric light plant it is stated. The company will also use a newly invented studio lamp, said beyond comparison the best lamp now in existence. Adolf Philipp, is personally interested in this invention and declares that the light effects and clearness of the pictures will be non-surpassable.

Archainbaud Completes "Unknown Dancer"

Actual filming of "The Unknown Dancer," the second of the series of Creighton Hale-June Caprice features to be made by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., has been completed by Director George Archainbaud working under the supervision of Albert Capellani. Cutting and titling of the picture is now in progress and with the completion of this work, the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will have two Hale-Caprice subjects available for distribution, and final laboratory work on "Oh Boy," the first of the series having been finished last week.

In the cast of "The Unknown Dancer" are Alfred Hickman, Charles Coleman, Edwards Davis and Katherine Johnson.

Sheldon Lewis to Star

Lewis Meyer has placed Sheldon Lewis under contract as a star, and is to exploit him shortly in a series of feature films said to be of an unusual nature. Mr. Lewis has just finished supporting Virginia Pearson in "The Bishop's Emerald," and the excellence of his work in this production and in some of his former character roles is said to have prompted the offer made to star him on his own account.

"The Monster and the Man," the first Sheldon Lewis picture, has just been finished, and distribution arrangements are in the course of completion.

Vanderbilt in Pictures

Gertrude Vanderbilt, now playing in "Listen, Lester," is said to be launching a movie corporation of her own, the details being arranged by M. S. Bentham. Miss Vanderbilt has long been a popular musical comedy and vaudeville feature, and, on test pictures taken recently, is an ideal screen type, according to the Gertrude Vanderbilt Film Corporation. Miss Vanderbilt is said to have already selected her first subject. Screen production will not interfere with her stage work.

Johnny Dooley, as he appears in one of his two-reel comedies

Says Tom Mix Features are Popular

Exclusive Features Inc., have had many inquiries, it is said, regarding their series of fourteen single reel Tom Mix re-issues which they are now ready to release.

These inquiries have been coming in, it is stated, on the announcements made in the trade papers, but as soon as their advertising campaign begins it is expected that every territory will be disposed of.

Jacob Weinberg, secretary and treasurer of the company says: "The wise exchange man will not lose any time in securing these features, as the phenomenal success of the previous Tom Mix re-issues is assured in these single reel western pictures, they being selected from a collection of fifty-four single-reel negatives." A beautiful assortment of advertising matter accompanies these features, it is said, being composed of one sheets, three sheets and 11 by 14 photos and slides.

"As these pictures are very popular with the exhibitors," says Mr. Weinberg, "they will surely prove a profitable investment for the state right buyer."

Eddie Foy to Make Two-Reel Comedies

The National Film Company of Denver will soon begin the production of pictures, it is said, under a new board of directors and new management. Plans for the immediate resumption of activities were laid at a meeting, it is stated, by the directors recently. W. H. Ender will be manager of the company, and Albert W. Hale will direct. Mr. Hale is said to have made a tentative agreement with Eddie Foy and family to produce this summer a series of two-reel comedies to be known as the Foy Fun Films. Mr. Foy will be in Denver, it is said, shortly to confer with Mr. Hale on his summer engagement. Alterations on the studios will begin at once.

The company, it is said, will invite California companies to come to Denver to finish pictures requiring outdoor western scenes in the studios of the Denver company.

Frank Hall Leases Park Theatre

Will Give Rothapfel Program Indefinite Run, to be Followed by Showing of His Special Releases

FRANK G. HALL, vice-president of Rothapfel Picture Corporation and president of Independent Sales Corporation, which organization is handling the distribution of the Rothapfel Unit Programme, released June 2 through the Film Clearing House exchanges, announce that he has leased for the summer season the Park theatre, one of the Broadway legitimate houses, located at Columbus Circle, and opens it as a picture house the night of May 28 with the Rothapfel Unit Programme as the first attraction, for an indefinite run. Immediately following the signing of the lease, Mr. Hall engaged a corps of decorators and workmen to renovate the theatre and make it ready for the reception of the Unit Programme.

Samuel L. Rothapfel, producer of the Unit Programme and former managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, will personally supervise the presentation of his Unit Programme during its run at the Park. For the occasion Mr. Rothapfel has engaged a full symphony orchestra, a corps of ushers, and every detail looking toward a Broadway presentation of a picture programme is being arranged. After the opening, Monday night, May 28, there will be a continuous performance from 1 to 11 p. m A special lobby display has been arranged, and the programme will be given city-wide publicity—in the newspapers, etc.

Following the run of the Rothapfel Unit Programme, which will extend indefinitely into the summer, it is said Mr. Hall plans to give his other special releases on Independent Sales Corporation's program, extended runs at the Park. The first of these will be J. Stuart Blackton's production, "A House Divided." Mr. Hall is releasing this production in the United States and Canada. "The Other Man's Wife" will probably follow "A House Divided." Mr. Hall is about to close for the domestic rights to two other big productions, it is said, and these, too, will probably be given a run at the Park.

Mr. Rothapfel expects to start production work on the second Rothapfel Unit Programme within the next three weeks. He is now considering several stories for the feature production on the second program, and is making arrangements for the other numbers.

Schedules First Capellani Picture June 22

ALBERT CAPELLANI will inaugurate his advent into the ranks of independent producers on June 22, the date that has been scheduled for the release of "Oh, Boy!" the first subject to be made by the recently organized Albert Capellani Productions, Inc. "Oh, Boy!" will also be the first of a series of special features in which Creighton Hale and June Caprice will be co-starred under the banner of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., and will be released through Pathe Exchange, Inc. Final laboratory work on "Oh, Boy!" which is the first "Filmusical-Comedy" to be shown on the screen, has been completed, and it is expected that prints will be available for showings at the various Pathe branches within a week.

"Oh, Boy!" is adapted from the famous musical comedy hit of the same name, which was originally presented at the Princess theatre, New York, where it played, it is said, for over sixteen months. It was produced under the personal direction of Albert Capellani, who it is declared by those who have already seen the film, has completely vindicated the practicability of his undertaking in using, for the first time, a musical comedy as the basis of a motion picture.

"Oh, Boy!" can legitimately lay claim, it is said, to being that rare thing in motion pictures—a production of a purely farcial nature entirely devoid of incidents bearing even a remote resemblance to melodrama.

The cast is headed by Creighton Hale and June Caprice. The supporting company includes Flora Finch, famous for her work with the late John Bunny; Zena Keefe, who is well known to the picture-going public in a number of special productions, including "Enlighten Thy Daughter"; W. H. Thompson, a veteran character actor of the legitimate stage; Joseph Conyers who created the character of the rube constable; Grace Heals, Maurice Bennet Flynn, better known as "Lefty" Flynn, famous Yale football star, and many others.

Marcus Loew Books Rothapfel Programme

Marcus Loew has booked the Rothapfel Unit Programme over his New York circuit and in Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, according to an announcement made by P. E. Meyer, manager of the New York branch of the Film Clearing House, through which the Unit Programme is released by Frank G. Hall, vice-president, Rothapfel Picture Corporation. The Programme received many countless endorsements, it is said, by leading exhibitors throughout the country, who came to New York personally to view the premiere showing of the Unit at the Rialto Theatre, recently. With a contract from one of the leading exhibitors of Greater New York, Marcus Loew, and requests coming into the New York office of Film Clearing House, it is stated, from the biggest exhibitors throughout the country, Mr. Hall and Mr. Rothapfel feel that the Rothapfel Unit Programme is not only living up to but surpassing every expectation.

Mr. Meyer places a great deal of the credit for the numbers of bookings coming into his office, to the carefully planned advertising and exploitation campaign arranged by Harry P. Diggs and Hopp Hadley. The advertising and departments put forth every effort to place this Programme before the exhibitors and public, and the results obtained have more than rewarded them for their efforts, according to Mr. Meyer's statement.

Bernstein Arranges Details for Reed Feature

ISIDOR BERNSTEIN, general manager of the National Film Corporation, spent five days in New York last week, making arrangements for the forthcoming production of Hal Reid's "Confession."

This picture will be offered as a super-special by the Pioneer, and is said to be the most ambitious production that The National has ever attempted.

"This statement has great significance," said Mr. Bernstein, "inasmuch as the National produced the Tarzan pictures.

"While the story is ultra-modern in every respect, one of the most spectacular scenes of the picture will be a reproduction of the ancient Coliseum of Rome. In this scene will be shown the martyrdom suffered by the early Christians. A den of twenty lions will be used, and two thousand extras, costumed as citizens of Rome, will act as spectators. Emperor Nero will be one of the chief characters in this scene.

"A large plot of ground on the outskirts of Los Angeles has been leased for this scene, and the services of Guilo Novelli, the prominent Italian archæologist and architect, has been retained to superintend the construction of the Roman amphitheatre."

The story deals with the sacredness of the Roman Catholic confessional. Henry B. Walthall has the role of a priest, whose brother is accused of murder and sentenced to death. Through the confessional the priest learns the true identity of the murderer, yet is powerless to save the life of his innocent brother. Through an exciting series of complex dramatic situations the innocent man is saved from his doom.

It is highly dramatic, with a deep psychological undertone that will place "Confession" among the front rank of the big spectacular pictures of the day. A large and noteworthy cast is now being selected to support Mr. Walthall.

Big Runs for Blackton's "A House Divided"

P. E. MEYER, manager of the Film Clearing House, New York branch, announces that Frank G. Hall's special release for the week of June 1 "A House Divided," a J. Stuart Blackton production, starring Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Rawlinson, has been booked for maximum runs over the Fox circuit of theatres, the U. B. O. and the Picker, Harstn and Meyer & Schneider houses in Greater New York, representing a bigger booking, it is claimed, than has been registered on any other feature of recent release. Comment by exhibitors who have seen private showing of this feature sum up to an indorsement that indicates that this picture will supply every demand by both exhibitor and public.

Reports from Mr. Meyer are to the effect that the New York office of the Film Clearing House is working overtime on the executive work incident to the large number of requests coming from exhibitors for showings and bookings on this feature. June 1 will mark the first run of "A House Divided," and, in view of this fact, Mr. Meyer states that the business that has been done to date exceeds the number of bookings on any other feature handled through the New York office, prior to release.

Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager for the Hall interests, announces that he has prepared an elaborate press book on "A House Divided," containing eighteen pages and giving in detail help to the exhibitor in advertising the run.

Hall to Release Another Special Feature

"The Other Man's Wife," the most recent addition to Frank G. Hall's list of special releases on the Independent Sales Corporation's program, will be placed in the Film Clearing House exchanges this week and offered to exhibitors as one of the strongest dramatic offerings of Mr. Hall's current releases. It was produced by Warner Bros. under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, and presents in the principal roles, Ellen Cassidy, Stuart Holmes, Ned Hay, Olive Trevor, Halbert Brown, Mrs. Garrison, Lesley Casey, Danny Sullivan, Regina Quinn, Laura Newman, Georgie Jessel and Evelyn Brent.

To Exploit Feature

Arrangements have been entered into with the Standard Film Service Company, with offices in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit, to exploit "Open Your Eyes" in Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee.

Bookings are being made for the above territories by the Standard Film Service Company.

New Chester Exchanges

Two new distributors were added last week to the Exchanges handling Outing-Chester Pictures—Jule and J. J. Allen of Toronto, for Eastern Canada, and the Electric Films Corporation of Washington, D. C., for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Solomon Adler, president of Zion Films, Inc.

Ethel Teare, the Leading Woman in Support of Ham and Bud in the Comedies Now Re-Issued by Jans Productions, Inc.

All-Indian Subject Ready for Release

"The Passing of the Crow"—second of the All-Indian subjects to be released by the Educational Films Corporation of America—is ready for distribution and will be shipped to Educational exchanges this week.

Vice-President E. W. Hammons makes an announcement concerning it that will be of interest to all exhibitors who seek novelty in short subjects. Like "The Eagle and the Fawn," which was the first of these films, the picture is essentially a scenic subject, with just enough story value to make it thoroughly interesting, and is enacted by a cast of full-blooded Crow Indians, on their reservation in Northern Wyoming.

"The Passing of the Crow" differs from the earlier release in the respect that it contains more action and consequently greater interest. There are no central figures in particular that predominate throughout the reel, but instead a group of very interesting happenings caught here and there on the reservation that will be most fascinating to the average theatre-goer.

The picture opens with Indian children in a juvenile war-dance, and then follows descriptive scenes showing the squaws at work while the braves sit around and smoke. The preparation of "Beef a la Hole in the Ground" gives the energetic warriors a chance to display a semi-annual ambitious streak, and later on comes All-Indian Vaudeville, the most amusing and interesting scenes of Indian life that have ever been filmed.

Sells Feature Rights

The Southern Feature Film Corporation announces that they have sold the rights to "Beyond the Law" for Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee to First National.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Fox Studio Doings

"Evangeline" is being filmed, and Miriam Cooper is the star. This became known this week at the Fox studio where the subject has been under production for the past few days. No continuity has been written for the screen version of this famous classic poem, and Director R. A. Walsh is making the subject from the book. While present scenes require work at the studio, it is planned that the company shall make a trip to Lake Huntington, to mountain locations and a portion of the scenes will be filmed on the Pacific Ocean's shores.

Peggy Hyland is now under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, Fox director, who recently arrived from the East, and she is now working in "The Bid She Made." It will be Lawrence's first West Coast made subject, and a particularly strong cast has been organized for this play. Harry Hillard is leading man, and the supporting cast is composed of E. B. Tilton, Edwin Jobson, Mollie McConnell, Billy Elmer, Mrs. Jack Mulhall, and others. The story is an original one by Charles Mortimer Peck, prepared for the screen by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Eva Novak, a sister of Jane Novak, will made her debut as a leading woman in a semi-Western play, titled "Speed," written by H. H. Van Loan, and now being produced by Edward J. LeSaint, with Tom Mix as star. Others named for appearance in this production are L. C. Shumway, Helen Wright, Hayward Mack, Jack Curtis, George Hackathorn, and Little George Stone.

Frank Beal is home from Yuma, Ariz., with the Gladys Brockwell Company, where exteriors for "Sadie" were taken, and Arthus Rosson is making the final scenes for "Be a Little Sport," co-starring Eleanor Fair and Albert Ray.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of Fox Sunshine Comedies, added a third organization this week when he engaged Chester Conklin, for three years a featured player in Sennett Comedies, and Billy Armstrong, who has been with the Sennett organization. Chester Conklin is now playing under the direction of Victor Heerman, and the other directors at work at this studio are J. G. Blystone and Frank Griffin.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Bryant Washburn now being starred with Lois Wilson as his leading woman, has returned from location in the vicinity of San Diego, where they were working on exteriors for "Love Insurance," and is now working at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood. This was written by Earl Derr Biggers, and is being directed by Donald Crisp.

HE'S A BEAR!

Representative of Motion Picture News Get Cheers

CARL JESSEN, representative of Motion Picture News at Los Angeles, has again been voted a regular fellow.

The following letter speaks for itself:

The Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

In the "Victory Loan" campaign just finished, the motion picture industry made the most vital impression of favor upon the City of Los Angeles that it has ever known.

Among the capable men who led this very commendable fight in our city was Mr. Carl Jessen.

As a citizen of Los Angeles and as a member of the industry, it affords me a very great pleasure to express my admiration of Mr. Jessen's most effective services and genial personality.

Truly,
Edward A. Biby,
Charlie Chaplin Film Company.

Houdini has begun work on his mystery Artcraft spectacle, under the direction of Irving Willat, after spending two weeks with the continuity writers in the preparation of the script. All of the cast for the Houdini picture has not been selected as the first scenes to be made require only extra people.

Major Robert Warwick and company, with Director George Melford, are still at Lewiston, Idaho, working on exteriors for "Told in the Hills," and it is expected they will not return for a week.

The adaption from the O. Henry story, "You're Fired," starring Wallie Reid, with Wanda Hawley, has been finished by Didector James Cruze and Miss Hawley, has been cast to play the name role in "Peg o' My Heart," with Tom Meighan appearing opposite, under the direction of William C. De Mille. This it is understood will be an Artcraft special production.

Director Walter Edwards has made the last scenes for the Marguerite Clark play, "Girls," adapted from the Clyde Fitch play, and Harrison Ford, who has been Miss Clark's leading man, will play under the direction of Robert Vignola in support of Vivian Martin in "The Third Kiss."

Jeanie McPherson will have the Cecil B. De Mille's story ready within a few days. The new one is founded upon the stage play, "Admirable Crichton," by James M. Barry. This, as all recent De Mille productions, will have an all star cast as yet only partially named.

Universal Newsettes

Universal City appears busier now than for many monthes past, due to the fact that practically all directors are working at the big plant this week. The total number of directors now employed by Universal are fourteen.

The Fannie Hurst story, which appeared in a recent National magazine, titled "A Petal and the Current," has been selected as the next vehicle for Mary MacLaren, and is now being produced by Todd Browning. Robert Anderson will be the leading man, and some of the principals of the cast now named are: Gertrude Claire, Fritzie Ridgeway, Beatrice Bernham, David Butler and Victor Potel.

A new series of two-reel Western plays written and to be directed by Jacques Jaccard have been started with Marie Walcamp as the star. The scenes for the first of these pictures was made this week at Sonora, Calif., where one of the biggest round-ups of the country was conducted.

"The Broken Idol" is announced as the title for the next serial feature; Eddie Polo and company has been in Arizona for the past week securing exterior scenes for the initial releases. Allen Holubar plans to complete the filming of "The Right to Happiness," starring Dorothy Phillips within the next ten days. During the present week he used almost 1,000 extras every day for some of the big scenes for this play.

About Metro Players

In the absence of Supervising Director Maxwell Karger, who is in the East on a story purchasing trip, production continues at the maximum at the Metro studio, four new subjects being put in production this week. Bert Lytell is next to work in a comedy written by John Blackwood, titled "It's Easy to Make Money," under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

Hale Hamilton steps forth as an author, having written the story for his next Metro production, and A. S. LeVino is now preparing the screen version. Lieut.-Adj. Luther A. Reed has written the next story for Emmy Wehlen, which has a working title of, "A Favor for a Friend," and will be directed by John Ince.

Miss Allison's play is the only one for which a cast has been selected, the principal players being Howard Gaye, Kathleen Kerrigan, Tell Trenton, and others. Gaye is a former leading man who appeared in a number of Fine Art productions, and has just returned from serving two years in the English army.

Vitagraph News Bits

Albert A. Smith, president of Vitagraph Company, left, early this week for New York, after spending a month at the Hollywood studio. He was accompanied by John M. Quinn, of the Vitagraph sales organization, who arrived in Los Angeles a few days previous on a tour of the country visiting exchanges. During his stay at the studio Mr. Smith renewed two important contracts, one with William Duncan, who will continue as star and director in Vitagraph serials. Antonio Moreno has also placed his signature to a two-year contract to remain with Vitagraph.

"The Hornet's Nest," starring Earle Williams, with Vola Vale as his leading woman, has been completed by Director James Young for Vitagraph, and is reported this producing unit will next make "The Fortune Hunter."

In making the early scenes for the next Vitagraph serial, William Duncan, director star, met with an accident the scene being taken was that showing scrimmage in a football game, and practically all the men of the two teams alighted on Duncan, with the result that three ribs were fractured. He continued work throughout the day, and the accident has not caused any delay in production, but Duncan has since been compelled to wear many tight bandages of adhesive plaster.

Here and There

Upon the completion of editing "Better Times," the production of which has been holding the attention of the Brentwood Film Corporation for the past several weeks, Director King Vidor will take up the making of an original story and continuity prepared for him by Tom Gibson. Gibson, formerly a member of the Los Angeles photoplay colony, for the past two years has been in Denver, where he wrote comedies and several dramas for independent companies.

Florence Vidor, formerly leading woman for Lasky productions, will play the feminine lead with Charles Meredith, leading man recruited from the speaking stage, taking the opposite lead. David Butler and Zasu Pitts are others named in the cast, by Director Vidor for this screen play.

The Feature Photoplay Company has completed its first subject, "The Fighter," made under the direction of Lloyd Carleton, and gave a showing for members of the company and invited friends at Tally's theatre on the evening of May 10 following the regular performances. Clyde Westover, general manager of the company, will shortly go East with copies of the picture and supervise the sale.

Hank Mann comedies are shortly to be put on the market. A company was recently organized, and production has been in process for the past several weeks at the Horsley studio, where three one-reel subjects have been filmed. Hank Mann will be remembered as a feature comedian of L-Ko, Keystone, Fox and Sennett Comedies,

Charles Christie got off the train from New York and was surprised to see a band and many girls with flowers. He thought his brother Al was making another comedy scene for his benefit and then he learned the band and girls and flowers were for another party riding on the same train. However, Charlie avers that his eastern trip was successful as Christie comedies now go to every part of the world except the central powers where there are too many Bolsheviks to appreciate clean parlor comedy.

Jerry Farrar has come to town, Lou-Tellegen is also here and Sniffles, Jerry's pekinese pup. If we are to believe all the press copy—and we have no reason to doubt it—she is going to have a gorgeous suite of dressing rooms all cluttered up with American beauties and heliotrope, the popular putty shade and shades of brilliant contrast of violet, black and gold. Yes, and er forgot to mention the putty taffeta covers for the wall which hangs in pleats, the velvet rugs to match and the chaise lounge, baby grand, embroidered net curtains 'n' everything. Anyway welcome to our city, Jerry.

Fay Tincher is shortly to step into litigation. No she has not had any sad love affairs or a break of contract with the Al Christie but some jane has used her picture wrongfully. Fay has been so wrought up about it she has suffered with acute indigestion or something. A Providence, R. I., girl sent one of Fay's pictures to "Cupid's Column," a matrimonial paper of Minneapolis and had it inserted with an advertisement for a husband. The Rhode Island girl claims she has $2500.00 in the bank and many other things, but Fay being different from many artists of the screen and stage is particular where her picture is used.

Speaking of the fish school of photoplay instruction, we learn that Francis Ford has engaged a deep sea diver named A. Troutt—his first name is Arthur. He claims he was not with the original Finnie Boys Company. Francis has arranged there shall be large fish and seals, so he will feel perfectly at home after a tour over the Pantages Circuit.

WARNING

This here newspaper, the greatest of the kind in the World, wants to make a confession. You and every one of its readers have been bunked. For three years this periodical has made you believe that the word meaning bunk, hot air, or the ravings of a rover in film land, should be spelled hookum. It all happened because Noah Webster in his latest unabridged edition only inserted one word with a spelling that sounded like this word. This one word Noah had was hookum, meaning an official paper. The official typist of the publication's office thought this must be the word and so we lived it down.

Mistakes happen in the best of families, but now we call your attention to the title line, where you will find that word spelled correctly. It is H-O-K-U-M.

Equipment Service

NOW IS THE TIME

There are more Motion Picture Theatres being erected to-day than at any other time in the history of the industry.

There is hardly a city of any size where a house costing up to half a million dollars is not going up or being planned.

This does not include the innumerable smaller houses seating from 500 to 900.

These houses are worth advertising to.

They are buying thousands of dollars worth of equipment, organs, chairs, screens, vacuum cleaners, curtains, heaters, interior telephones, etc., every day.

Advertised goods are the ones which should be bought. They have a reputation to be upheld.

Film Production Situation

IN the last two issues of the News we have discussed three conditions under which the greatest danger is experienced in the use of inflammable motion picture film.

First—The theatre—Here we find inflammable stock used exclusively with ample protection, which is forced by law. There is no need, therefore, of forcing the use of inflammable film in this field.

Second—The Exchange—Here, likewise, with a few changes the protection will be ample. These are being rapidly brought about now.

Third—Projectors used without a booth—Here we showed where any projector used in the open without a booth and using inflammable film is a distinct menace to the public safety. Any machine using inflammable film should be forced by law to use an absolutely fireproof booth, not only because of the danger while the film is in the machine itself, but more particularly while it is being handled outside the mechanism. We, therefore, stated that we were in favor of a "safety standard" on inflammable stock for use in semi-public gatherings such as the home, church, etc., so as not to interfere with the purely entertainment field, which is covered by the already protected motion picture theatre.

We now wish to go into the actual condition of film production and costs. The facts were given out publicly at the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held in Philadelphia by two of the leading raw stock manufacturers. They absolutely corroborated each other in every detail.

Before going into this we wish to clear up one statement which is always made in connection with motion picture films but which has been most emphatically denied by those who actually know. When anyone speaks of non-inflammable stock for general use, the remark is usually made that France has forced the adoption of slow burning film for all uses. Such a law is on the statute books, but it has never been enforced and has now become a dead letter and there is little likelihood that it will ever be enforced. At the present time non-inflammable film could not be produced to supply the demand.

The statement was emphatically made that it would be absolutely impossible at the present time to manufacture enough non-inflammable film in this country to supply all film requirements. A change-over in the entire industry from inflammable to non-inflammable film would be an absolute impossibility.

Due to the war experiments and developments which were being actively carried on, both in this country and abroad, were from necessity entirely dropped. It is planned to take these up where they were left off and continue experimenting on film stock as fast as practical.

Non-inflammable stock has been developed to the point where it has about 80% of the wearing qualities and general durability of inflammable stock. The photographic values of non-inflammable stock are approximately the same as those of inflammable. The cost of non-inflammable film over inflammable is approximately one cent per foot. Figuring this on the average of fifteen pictures per week, the cost of using this non-inflammable stock for prints alone would amount to a million and a half dollars in a year in excess of the cost of the same footage in inflammable stock. This is an item which is of interest to the amusement interests when the discussion of changing from inflammable to non-inflammable stock is brought up. Is it worth while considering theatre protection now covered by law?

The actual cost of the manufacturing processes involved is considerably higher, though on large production this might be considerably reduced. Care in the handling of non-inflammable film is essential, although if the instructions given are carefully followed, age will not cause any material deterioration. The chemical ingredients used in the manufacture of non-inflammable film are not affected by age, so that the film does not become more inflammable the older it gets as is commonly thought to be the case.

Materials entering into the production of non-inflammable film are far more expensive than those entering into inflammable stock. In addition to this they are very scarce and hard to obtain at the present time, for in the main they are imported and during the war could not be had, except in the meagrest of quantities. Even in time of peace the materials used were hard to secure; and because of this it was hoped that other materials might be discovered which would meet the requirements and yet be reasonable in price.

The processes of manufacture are also more intricate than those employed in the making of inflammable stock, which would mean very costly and extensive changes in the plants now supplying raw stock to the market.

Non-inflammable film today is being manufactured to a sufficient extent to meet the present demands, which are in the main in sizes other than the "Professional Standard," and it is hoped that the various companies making film will be abe to keep abreast of this demand. It is conceivable, however, that with the present production facilities this might grow so rapidly that the supply would become inadequate.

With these facts in mind the argument against the forcing of non-inflammable upon the entertainment and theatre interests becomes more and more impractical. Should, at any time, the cost prices become reduced and non-inflammable film be brought out at the same price as inflammable stock, this particular objection would be wiped out. This will not be done, however, for a considerable time, during which the supply of inflammable stock in the film exchanges throughout the country will become vastly augmented. The feasibility, therefore, of a change-over from inflammable stock to non-inflammable will become less and less because of this investment.

It will be necessary before this is possible to use up all prints at the present time made on inflammable film, or which shall be made on this stock, unless, of course, inconceivable legislation be enacted which would automatically and without warning cause the destruction of millions of feet of prints on inflammable stock from which a legitimate revenue had not been derived.

In conclusion, therefore, we wish to make our position perfectly clear, namely, that we do not believe that from a purely manufacturing standpoint this change-over from inflammable to non-inflammable film is a subject to be considered seriously at the present time, though by continued experimental work it may be possible to reduce the cost of manufacture to a point where inflammable film will become a commercial reality.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

A Regular Letter With Several Change-Over Schemes Suggested

WE meet many projectionists who say when asked to write up their experience for the Projection Department; "I'd like to write something but what shall I write about." It is generally a question of a man's knowing his subject so well that he doesn't know just where to begin to talk about it.

To all such projectionists we suggest using the following communication from Marvin H. Thoreau of the Royal Victoria Theatre, Victoria, British Columbia, as a model. We think you will agree with us that the letter and drawings made up the most interesting article you have read in many days.

Mr. Thoreau has taken exceptions to some of our statements and the Editors have done likewise to some of his. If other readers have still different ideas let them come in. Through a general discussion, all of us will learn much.

Projection Department,
Motion Picture News.
Gentlemen:

In your issue of April 12 in answer to a correspondent from Le Mars, Iowa, you stated that you wouldn't advise the use of an Extra-lite shutter under some conditions. Would you be kind enough to explain what you mean? In my opinion, if the picture happened to be too brilliant with the Extra-lite shutter in use, the amperage could be reduced with the result of lower current bills and the consumption of less carbon, not to mention the reduction in heat. I understand that the Extra-lite shutter reduces flicker as well. Under these conditions it seems to me that the Extra-lite is to be preferred in all cases.

(This answer was given to Le Mars from an impression which we had gained from reading what others had said about it. At that time we had not witnessed a conclusive test of the Extra-lite, but since then, the Precision Machine Company has demonstrated the shutter to the complete satisfaction of the Projection Department. You are quite right in saying that the Extra-lite shutter will give a better lighted picture or will reduce the current used, according to local conditions. We do not believe that the shutter is warranted to reduce flicker, but if the cause of the flicker was a poorly designed shutter we are sure that the Extra-lite will help out the projectionist in that direction.

We might also add here that Le Mars' reference to a seven-day free trial is not a fact. The Precision Machine Company is so certain of the value of the Extra-lite that they have not considered it necessary to resort to "trial offers.")

As to Le Mars' shutter trouble, don't you think that new gears are unnecessary? He says that for one reel after retiming the shutter it works O. K., but gets bad again after that. Sounds to me like his shutter hub screw was slipping or that the pin in the worm gear or elsewhere between the shutter and the movement is broken. If Le Mars will hold his shutter with one hand and try to turn the flywheel with the other I believe he will soon locate the offending part. Possibly it is so tight that it only slips a little when the machine starts, thus taking about two "starts" to show much travel ghost.

(Le Mars, himself, is the only one who can answer your questions definitely. My surmise as to his trouble was only one possible one. The ones you mention are others. He should have told us in more detail how it worked. For instance, if the streaking gets steadily worse after the first reel or did the ghost get so bad and remain that way? The pins in any of the gears numbered 633 and 630 in the Powers' catalog might have been sheared off, allowing movement of the gear on its shaft. The blades of the shutter where they are clamped to the hub might become loosened and move slightly. As you say, he can probably locate the trouble by holding his shutter and turning the flywheel. Let us hope Le Mars writes in and tells us who is right.)

The same correspondent asks about burning two lamps for the change-over. Now won't you agree with me that the "average" generator will stand an overload of 40 per cent. for a few seconds without burning out?

(Yes, easily, providing those few seconds are not stretched into minutes while the projectionist is all nerved up watching for cues.)

If his machine is a 40 amp. machine it should withstand 55 amps. for the change-over, furnishing the going machine with 35 amps. and the starting machine 20 amps. If his machine happened to be one of 45 amp. capacity it should withstand 60 amps., supplying 25 amps. or both with 30 amps. While it is a 50 amp. machine it should be able to take a load of 65 amps. for a few seconds, which would allow 35 amps. for the going projector and 30 for the one starting. A 55 amp. machine or larger should carry both arcs at 35 amps. or more.

From his arc combination of ⅝ inch cored and ½ inch solid I judge that he is using about 30 or 40 amperes, as not many projectionists use much more on such a combination. Not that they couldn't or ought not to, but rather that I believe 75 per cent. of them don't. For this reason I split the difference and guessed his amperage to be 35. Should it be more or less the result could be easily figured out, so I will use 35 for the following computations:

Sketches 1, 2 and 3 show some connections which I have used under similar circumstances. The small rheostat (RN) in 1 and 3 can be any old coil or home made rheostat, since it only passes from 10 to 15 amperes. When I say to adjust a rheostat to 20 amperes I mean to set the regulator on the notch giving 20 amperes at the usual arc voltage. If the rheostat has no adjustor then the grids or coils must be tested out with a wire until the desired current is obtained, then a connection made to that point. The number of coils shown in the drawings has nothing to do with the number in actual practise.

Sketch 1 can be used where the present conditions do not require more than half the present rheostat. The only other things required are the small rheostat (RN) and the single pole, single throw switch to be connected between AC or BD. This switch should be located handy to the projectors so that it may be opened for the burning of 2 arcs.

(RM) is the large rheostat and (RN) is the small one. X is the point in the center of the series of grids or coils of (RM). A is the point where (RM) will give arc No. 1, 25 amps. B is the point where (RM) will give arc No. 2, 25 amps. Now connect up (RN) as per sketch, strike one of the arcs (either one) and adjust (RN) until the arc gets 35 amps. Then open the single pole switch and both arcs can be burned at 25 amps. Cut either one out and close the single pole switch and the remaining arc will receive 35 amperes.

Sketch 2 shows two rheostats in use, (RM) for arc No. 1 and (RO) for arc No. 2. Connect up in the usual way (leaving out connections to A and B at first) and adjust each rheostat to feed 20 amps. to its arc. XAB is a single pole double throw switch with X as the center pole and A and B as the two throws.

Throw switch to A, start No. 1 arc and connect wire from A to RM when the arc gets 35 amps. Throw switch to B, start arc No. 2 and connect wire from B to the point on RO, which gives arc No. 2 its required 35 amps. You can now finish the final reel with its full amperage and warm up and center the starting reel with 20 amps. As soon as the change-over is made, throw the switch and you will have 35 amps. at the arc of the running machine. (This prevents you from overloading the generator by forgetting to cut the incoming lamp down as might be the case when a switch was used for each rheostat.)

Sketch 3 uses two regular rheostate, RM and RO and one small one, RN. XX are the places where the feed wire connects to RM and RO. A is the place where RM gives arc No. 1 its 27 amps. and B is the place where RO gives arc No. 2 its 27 amps. Connect wire from A to C and one from B to D through a single pole single throw switch as per sketch, and adjust RN until either arc when burning alone gets 35 amps. Thus with switch closed one arc can get 35 amps and with switch open each arc can get 27 amps.

In sketches 1 and 3 after the operator is used to handling his arcs he can strike both arcs without opening the switch, but I wouldn't advise doing that until he has become thoroughly familiar with their operation. I have used such a connection as sketch 3 without a switch for many months without any trouble.

In the same issue, a correspondent from Morehouse, Mo., asked if he could burn two lamps to one transformer. I agree with you when you say he cannot but may I submit the following scheme. I have never used an Edison transformer but if it is of the auto-transformer type the sketch below shows a much better way than stealing for the change-over.

Diagram #4

(1) is an auto transformer. (2) is a rheostat set to furnish the same amperage as the transformer. This could even be a water rheostat if the authorities did not prohibit its use; as it is only used for a few seconds. (3) is a double pole double throw switch arranged for quick throwing by adding an extra blade set at an angle to each of the regular ones. See sketch (B)

How They Pick 'Em Up North

THE matrimonial game seems to have become quite a pastime amongst the majority of the members of Edmonton Local 360. Perhaps it is on account of the war being over, but at any rate Bro. Packebush has just fallen for the charms of one of Edmonton's most beautiful girls and now there are rumors galore of a couple more weddings to take place in the very near future.

Yep—there are a lot of pretty girls in Edmonton. You fellows in the South would do well to come up here if you are looking for beauty.

To Prevent the Lazy Feeling

NO doubt many projectionists get into lazy habits during the sultry summer months. To prevent much of this lazy feeling a good thorough work-out of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium for a half hour or so, followed by a shower bath and plunge in the pool is just the thing. A plunge into the pool is a mighty refreshing tonic and goes far in taking that carbon dust out of your skin.

A large number of the boys of Local 360 have acquired this habit and are making extensive use of the "Y." You're right when you say there are no dead ones in 360. We are all trying to dish out the best screen results with what material we have to work with.

Some of the Worries of a Delegate Enroute to the I. A. Convention

Location: On board train.

Scene: Delegate in smoker. Big cigar pointing heavenward. Feet on window-sill.

WELL, here I am at last on the road to Ottawa. I wonder what kind of a burg Ottawa is. I guess it must be up in the woods and it can't be far from the North Pole. It's a pity they didn't decide to have the convention in some civilized town, especially when I am going as a delegate. That's always my luck.

Gee! but I have to laugh when I think of Bro. Blank. The poor man got it into his head that he should attend the Convention. He's far too greedy. Why, he has already attended two Conventions for the Local and now he didn't want to give anyone else a chance to get a free trip. I know it was a pretty hard squeeze for me to get enough votes but I deserved the election because I spent ten dollars and forty cents in hard earned cash buying "two per cent" for Blank's favorite clique in an endeavor to swing some of their votes my way. No doubt it wouldn't have been so much trouble if I could have got some real stuff. But come to think of it I guess I did pretty well because I had forgotten that the boys don't care for the stuff with a kick in it. I certainly must congratulate myself on that little speech I made before the boys while trying to explain to them why they should send me to the Convention.

I do feel lazy, but I must study up on the "Rules of Order" so that I will be right at home with the big boys.

Let's see. Who's president? Oh, yes, of course, Charlie Shay. I'll bet Charlie will be right there with the big Mitt when he spies me. I think I shall give him several ideas of my own on how the I. A. should be run. I know he will appreciate them.

What! This train has stopped again! That's all it has done this morning. I suppose it must be after water. No doubt it gets quite thirsty going through these prohibition states. I wouldn't mind a little nip of Johnnie Walker myself just now.

I wonder how Gertie is. I hope she doesn't get lonely while I am away. I wish I had married her before I left instead of postponing it until after I return, but I guess she will keep. I must send her a wire from the next station so she won't forget me. I hope there is a letter waiting for me at the hotel in Ottawa when I get there.

I sure have got a lot of business to shove across for the boys. I wonder which is the best way to get them across. I hope they put my name in the proceedings of the Convention a goodly number of times so the boys at home will think I was on the job. I hope they don't ask me to make a speech. That would certainly be my finish. Never in my young life have I made a speech except before the Local.

For the Love O'Mike! What did I do with that resolution that I was to submit to the Convention. It's not in any of my pockets.

Maybe it's in my club bag. No, it's not there. Ah, I remember now. I lieft it on the table in Gertie's parlor. I knew I would leave something if she turned the lights down when I said goodbye. Well, maybe I can remember what the resolution was about and rewrite it. Oh, yes. It was about changing the name of the Alliance or something like that. I'll say so anyway. I've got to make some kind of a resolution.

Oh, boy. I sure am hungry. Wonder what's the trouble with that dining car porter today. It's pretty near time he sounded the first call to lunch.

Oh, Joy and Cabbages! Here's the dining car porter at last and he says luncheon is being served. Guess I won't have any trouble hiding away my dinner today, alright, alright.

One last look in the mirror. Gosh, what a sight! I forgot my razor and I haven't shaved for three days. But I'm letting someone else worry about my looks. My present job is to eat—and eat is what I am going to do—NOW.

FIREPROOF PICTURES—WITHOUT FIREPROOF BOOTHS

WHICH ARE YOU—A CLOG OR A COG IN THE MACHINERY OF HUMAN ADVANCEMENT?

Do you belong to that group of broad visioned human beings, working for the betterment of Society's needs; or are you one of the pigmies throwing out your own little obstructions in the path of progress, blinded to everything but your own individual greed?

Does your sense of responsibility to the race lead you to protect the safety of your fellow beings; or does your desire for self aggrandisement lead you to protect only your own profits?

Are you a Law Evader, or a Law Enforcer?

Do you conscientiously observe the legal rulings of the country—realizing their intent to protect and assist the majority; or do you slyly evade these rulings—realizing therefrom an individual gain?

When you answer these questions you signalize your position in regards to the Safety Film Standard, approved and adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Rochester, New York, April 8-9, 1918.

There is a law forbidding the use of motion picture projectors, employing Standard Theatre film, unless the projector is enclosed in a fire-proof booth.

The sane justice of this law is at once apparent to anyone acquainted with the hazards connected with the use of inflammable film. This film is of the nature of gunpowder, and is composed of nitro-collulose, a highly explosive material.

The disaster caused by having a single reel of inflammable film ignited in a crowded room is terribly apparent.

The modern motion picture theatre is made absolutely safe by the inspection of the Fire Marshal, requiring the projecting apparatus to be enclosed in a fire-proof booth, with an iron chimney, making it impossible for the flames to reach into the theatre, in case of film fire.

The use of inflammable film without such a fire-proof booth is illegal and criminally hazardous.

Owing to the existance of a certain class of law-evaders, legislators found it necessary to forbid the use of standard projectors, employing standard film without booth, even though such film is made of non-inflammable stock. The unscrupulous exhibitor can too easily substitute the unsafe for the safe.

The Safety Film Standard, adopted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at their meeting August 8-9, 1918, is intended to meet existing legal requirements,—and further the advancement of the industry by opening SAFE channels for the broader use of motion picture projectors.

It makes the portable projector a useful citizen, where it has heretofore been a dangerous outlaw. With the new Standard Safety Film, motion pictures may be shown anywhere, without booth, and without risk.

The new Standard is UNPATENTED AND OPEN TO ALL MANUFACTURERS. Its aim is not monopoly, but advancement.

Raw stock of the new Standard—perforated or unperforated—is now available to all users.

One pioneer concern in the field of safer and more useful movies has ready for immediate use and projection thousands of film subjects, and offers help and co-operation to anyone wishing to enter the field.

Other manufacturers are strenuously at work getting out film and projectors. New and extensive libraries, able to take care of every need, will soon be available.

And all these projectors and all these reels of film may be used SAFELY and LEGALLY anywhere and at any time—WITHOUT FIRE-PROOF BOOTHS. For the school—the church—the home—the motion picture enters its broader field with a clean bill of citizenship.

AS A PURCHASER OF A PROJECTOR FOR YOUR HOME, SCHOOL OR FACTORY—WHERE DO YOU STAND? Are you backing the law and accepting your ethical responsibility of protecting your audiences by buying a machine employing Safety Film?

AS A MANUFACTURER—ARE YOU A CLOG OR A COG IN THE WHEELS OF ADVANCEMENT?

Will you continue to manufacture and sell a criminally hazardous article, in order that your individual profits may accrue more rapidly, or will you work sturdily in the path of progress, in order that the industry may advance? Do you stand ready to help make the portable projector as safe in its field of the home, school and church as the professional machine is in the theatre?

Personally, I stand for advancement and development, secure in my belief that while profits may be delayed by the growth of something new—they will also grow with the industry.

Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Asks About Projection Equipment

THOS. L. HOGAN, Utica, N. Y., writes:

We are about to open a house for which we have purchased two Simplex machines. The available electric current is 500 volts D. C. Will you kindly advise what amperage should be delivered to each machine in order to show the best results on a 14 x 16 foot screen at a 125 ft. throw.

What generator would you recommend to give the best results under the above conditions.

Your equipment should contain a 2 arc 500 volt 50 amp., D. C. to D. C. motor generator set or compensarc. This amperage should be sufficient for your purposes. The exact current demand will depend on the efficiency of your optical system, on the atmosphere of your theatre, on the thickness of your film and lastly and perhaps as important as any other one thing, on your screen. But with a two arc, 50 amp. machine, you should get all the light you need on the screen, while showing one picture or while running two machines preparatory to the change over. We can't recommend any particular motor generator set, but you can depend on any apparatus advertised in the NEWS.

Letter from Cherokee, Iowa

G. A. GOLDIE, of Cherokee, Ia., springs a new one:

"I have been vacationing here, looking over theatres and studios. Have learned a lot, spent ten days in the employ of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. at the Morosco studio in the laboratory and will give you an article soon on why film costs money. I worked in the drum room, and perforating room, and also took in the work from start to finish, and now I am a lot wiser about the film and can assure you that anyone having this experience will treat a copy with respect when projecting it on a projector.

I saw excellent, good and poor projection in Los Angeles and can readily see why a stronger union would be a benefit to Los Angeles, as it is not strong now by any means. Even a scrub can work.

Reply: Now, who will take a few weeks off and get a job in an Exchange to find out why Exchanges do as they do and don't do as we would like to have them do. The Projectionist who will take that kind of a position and will write up what he sees there will be given the "first page position" in the Projection Department and as much space as he needs and deserves.

We'll be waiting for that story, Goldie, but don't make us wait too long. As for conditions in Los Angeles—what do you men in Local 150 have to say about it?

Camera Laboratory

Picture Making

Studio Technique

The New Akeley Camera

SEVERAL years ago while photographing wild game in Africa, Mr. Carl Akeley found that the usual type of motion picture camera was inadequate and unreliable for field work where the requirements are much more severe than in studio work. When he returned to this country he had formed very definite ideas as to what a camra should be and do and the Akeley Camera which has but recently come into the market is the result of his experience and efforts.

Although this camera is new to most camera men, it has passed through its baptism in a most satisfactory manner. When the war broke out quantity production of the Akeley Camera was just becoming a reality. The Signal Corps was after a camera best suited to its purpose and, after examining into the merits of the Akeley Camera, an order was given and the factory began turning out these instruments to the limit of facilities. In every way they fitted exactly into the needs of this important branch of the service.

Speed is the essential element in any camera for outdoor work, such as animal photography, sports and news, and this thought has been the leading one in laying out the design of the Akeley Camera.

In its general design and make-up the Akeley Camera is essentially different from all other makes. Fig. 1 gives an idea of its appearance assembled and ready for action. The tripod is a super-rigid design, very light and quickly adjustable with a position lock. By pressing on the toggle lock the cross bar (A) is released and the leg may be lengthened or shortened in trombone fashion, at will. When the desired height is reached a slight pressure on the lower side of this bar locks the leg and makes it steady and free from wabble.

Fig. 2 is a rear three quarter view showing many of the speed features. The ball-and-socket joint (B) permits of quick leveling and equally quick locking in any position without the use of screws. This is all accomplished through a simple spring lever (C), which works an eccentric actuating a segment clamping the ball. By simply releasing the catch holding the lever, the ball supporting the camera is then free to turn in any direction, thereby leveling or giving the camera any pitch. The spring lever is then returned to its catch and the ball and camera is immediately held rigid.

The long handle (D) of the Akeley Camera takes the place of the "pan" and tilt handles as ordinarily used. By pressure on this handle the camera may be moved in a panorama or tilt, the former through 360 degrees and the latter from straight upwards to nearly directly downwards, a range total of 140 degrees, without changing the tripod. By silghtly adjusting the ball and tripod the camera may be pointed directly to the ground.

Through the design of the panoramic controls it is possible by a pressure on the handle (D) to work these simultaneously and obtain a direct and smooth oblique movement of any degree. The value of this feature is seen in the case of the cameraman desiring to get, for instance, an aeroplane as its taxis along the ground and then rises swiftly into the air.

The motion of the Akeley Camera from one position to another is prevented from being intermittent and jerky by the application of flywheels. When the camera is moved by the long handle a small pinion gear drives a flywheel which acts as a sort of balancer or control. All gears in these controls are split and held together by springs so that by pinching their engaging pinion, back lash or play that might otherwise cause jumps in the picture will always be an impossibility. In these mechanisms, the last transmission of power to the flywheel is through friction surfaces. This under abnormal pressure slips and prevents a damaging wrench.

If it is wished to point the camera quickly in any direction, two push buttons on a convenient place of the arm or support will release the flywheel and permit of a quick change. Where such quick action is to be extensive these release buttons (E and F) may be screwed down, which permanently releases the flywheel and allows instantaneous movements from one direction to any other. All bearings in the flywheel casing are ball-bearings thus eliminating the greater source of wear even during years of constant use.

Fig. 3 illustrates the arrangement of the matched twin lenses. By the application of these twin lenses Mr. Akeley has provided the operator of his cameras with wonderful advantages over former instruments. These lenses make it possible for the cameraman to see the picture on a groundglass just as he is taking it. It also makes it possible for him to watch his scene and change his focus even while cranking, by merely looking through the finder. The focusing screw (G) operates both lenses through a right and left thread so that it may be assured that the two lenses will move parallel to each other. The various "stops" are marked on the gauge-rod seen across the top of the two lenses. Changing the "stop" of the viewing lens also changes the stop of the taking lens, so that the light as seen on the ground glass for any stop is exactly the same as is being impressed on the film. It is possible, however, by means of an auxiliary lever to open the viewing lens independently of the taking lens. This feature is of great importance when the operator wishes to make sure of a fine focus in locations where the "stop" of the taking lens has to be closed down.

These lenses are mounted on a plate which slides into tracks. By releasing a simple catch this entire unit can be quickly removed and another plate carrying lenses of any desired focal length may be easily inserted in its place.

The optical system of the finder is a story of accomplishment in itself. It will be noticed from the various illustrations that whatever the position of the camera the eyepiece of the finder may be placed at any angle to suit the height of the cameraman and to make view-finding easy.

In tilting, the rear half of the finder containing the eyepiece "floats," and always remains in a horizontal position, while the camera points at any angle, even to the zenith. This action does not distort the image on the ground glass, nor does it interfere with the advantage of accurately focusing. To do this means having a break in the usual straight line of the optical system. When this feature was under consideration, the inventor of the camera was told that such an innovation was a practical impossibility, but after much work and experimentation he succeeded in perfecting an arrangement of prisms which seemingly accomplishes the impossible.

The finder on the Akeley Camera shows the image on the ground glass, right side up, and magnifies the image picked up by the lens three times, which permits of a finer focusing.

One objection to twin lenses has been that in "close-ups," even though the lenses were but 2 inches from center to center, this distance was great enough to displace the object from the desired position on the film. This objection has been overcome in the Akeley Camera by a special adjustment. The button (H) operates an intersecting prism, which brings the image on the film in through the finder, and permits the operator to "check up" the frame.

Equipment

Playing the Organ for Motion Pictures

BESIDES the technique of the fingers on the keys, and the special skill required for pedal-playing, the management of the stops, or what is called "registration," is an all-important part of the organist's equipment.

The selection and combination of stops is a matter of considerable difficulty, partly because stops of the same name do not produce the same effect. Undoubtedly much larger use should be made of single stops. The most important stop of all—the open Diapason—is very seldom heard alone, being nearly always muffled out distinctive tone very pleasant to listen to. Reeds, too, when good, are much brighter when unclouded by Diapason tone, and this is especially the case with a Clarinet or Cremona, though both are coupled almost always with a stopped Diapason. Organ-builders seem to have a craze on this point. The writer has often noticed that they ask for the two to be drawn together. The employment of single stops has this further advantage in an instrument which can sustain sound, and which it is almost impossible to keep quite in tune, that the unison beats are then not heard. Families of stops should be oftener heard alone. These are chiefly (1) stops with open pipes, such as the open Diapason, Principal, Fifteenth; (2) stops with closed pipes, such as the stopped Diapason, Flute, and Piccolo; (3) Harmonic stops; (4) Reeds. Stops of the Gamba type nearly always spoil Diapason tone. Sixteen-foot stops on the manuals should be used sparingly, and never when giving out the subject of a fugue, unless the bass begins.

Couplers are kept drawn much more than they ought to be, with the effect of half depriving the player of the contrast between the different manuals. The writer knew a cathedral organist who commenced his service by coupling Swell to Great, and Swell to Choir, often leaving them to the end in this condition. Another evil result of much coupling is that the pipes of different manuals are scarcely ever affected equally by variations of temperature, and the Swell of course being enclosed in a box is often scarcely moved, so that at the end of an evening the heat of gas and of a crowd will cause a difference of almost a quarter of a tone between the pitch of the Great and Swell Organs. On this account every important instrument ought to have a balanced Great Organ which does not need supplementing by the Swell Reeds for full effect.

The Pedal Organ is now used far too frequently. The boom of a pedal Open, or the indistinct murmur of the Bourdon becomes very irritating when heard for long. There is no finer effect than the entrance of a weighty pedal at important points in an organ-piece, but there are players who scarcely take their feet from the pedal-board, and so discount the impression. Care should be taken to keep the pedal part fairly near the hands. The upper part of the pedal-board is still too much neglected, and it is common to hear a player extemporizing with a humming Bourdon some two octaves away from the hand parts.

The old habit of pumping the Swell Pedal with the right foot, and hopping on the pedals with the left, has now probably retired to remote country churches, but the Swell Pedal is still treated too convulsively, and it should be remembered in putting it down that the first inch makes more difference than all the rest put together.

In changing stops it is important to choose the moment between the phrases, or when few keys are down.

The employment of the organ with the orchestra is not without its dangers, but the main principles are clear. Never use imitation stops or mixtures and hardly ever 4 ft. or 2 ft. work. The Diapasons and the pedal stops are the only effects which can be used without clash and harshness. A pedal alone has often a wonderfully fine effect.

It is hardly necessary to emphasize the fact that the man at the organ is of far greater importance than the organ itself. It is entirely up to him to use intelligent discretion in employing the great wealth of musical opportunities which are at his disposal.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"L'Esprit de Nil. The Oriental coloring in this fine composition by Vargas is true to nature, the enchanting melody portraying the mood of the mystic Nile. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

2—"Mood Pensive." A tone poem of wonderful interpretative possibilities—a genuine classic that ranks with the best compositions of that style. (Sam Fox.)

3—"My Cairo Love," by J. S. Zamecnik. The fox trot craze of the year. Oriental fox trots are all the rage and the most sensational hit of the present season is "My Cairo Love." New York City is simply going wild over its seductive strains, and if you haven't secured your copy yet, then do so at once. (Sam Fox.)

4—"What'll We do on a Saturday Night when the Town Goes Dry?" Another Prohibition song at the psychological moment. The thought uppermost in almost everyone's mind is vividly expressed in this popular one step. (Waterson, Berlin & Synder, Strand Theatre Building, N. Y.)

5—"I Was So Young."" The popular one step of the New York Broadway production, "Good Morning, Judge," now playing at the Shubert theatre. (T. B. Harms, 62 W. 45th street, N. Y.)

7—"Minnie Shimmie for Me." One of the most popular fox trots of the season. Always played for that dance of the hour, the latest innovation, the Shimmie. (Broadway Music Corp., 145 E. 45th street, N. Y.)

8—"In the Twilight," by Karganoff. "Mazurka," by Michael Glinka and "Prelude," by Anatole Liadow. A trio of short Russian numbers each one of which represents the particular successful style of its composer. The numbers are well contrasted and their expressive, melodious character makes them equally serviceable for moving pictures, dramatic or concert purposes. The name of their arranger, Chas. J. Roberts, vouches for practical usefulness for either small or large combinations. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., N. Y.)

9—"Reverie Interrompue," modern favorite by Tschaikowsky. The genius of this great Russian master is evident in every measure of this number. Melancholy and moody in its first part, set in an appropriate minor key, it suddenly gives way to an indescribably expressive second theme, in the corresponding major key. Excellent arrangement, thoroughly cued, makes this number equally effective for large or small instrumental combinations. (Carl Fischer.)

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.
2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.
3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

Protecting the Ticket Booth

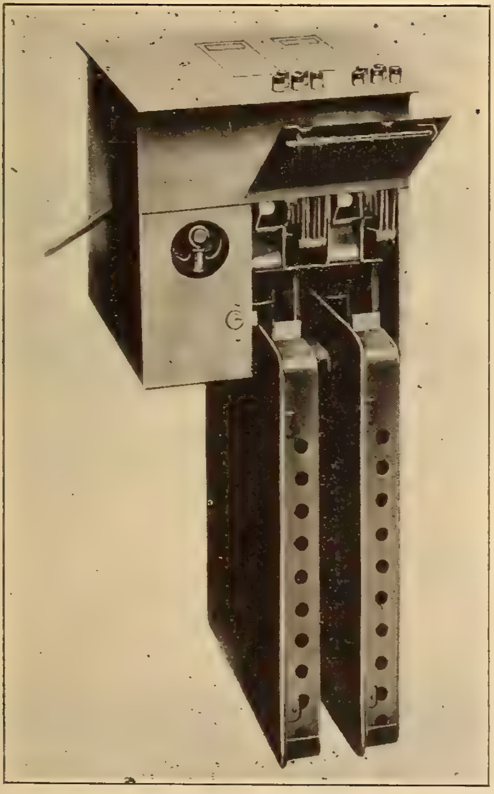
THE business of the motion picture house is a cash business. Though the individual sales are small their total during a day's ordinary run, mounts up to a considerable figure.

During the early days of the industry the manager paid but little attention to system in the business end. Although admission fees in general were lower, so were the costs of film rentals and the labor of employees. The motion picture was a new accomplishment and patronage was ample to bring in a pretty profit to the exhibitor after all expenses were paid.

But today with its competition presents an altogether different problem. The manager gives equal attention to the picture and the box office, for one without the other cannot long exist. He pays better prices for labor and feature films, puts more money into his house and its equipment and accordingly works on a smaller margin of profit. This is where system in the box office appears. As in any other business venture the petty leaks must be stopped or profits disappear.

On the market at the present time there are several devices whose purpose is to simplify and systematize the work of the box office. One of them is the automatic ticket selling machine known as the Automaticket. That the machine has given satisfaction is indicated by its installation in the principal theatres of New York City. Improved models have lately been made ready for sale and they are the ones described here.

The Automaticket Register is a small compact mechanism made to be set with its top working surface flush with the counter of the ticket booth. Its size and capacity varies with the size and capacity of the theatre.



The two unit machine (illustrated) dispenses two different price and color tickets; the three unit, three price and color tickets and so on up to the five unit which has been found suitable for the largest house.

Since there is no fundamental difference of construction in the sizes except in the number of units, this article will describe but an individual unit.

The machine consists of a motor-driven drum over which a continuous ticket strip is led, holes in the tickets fitting into pins on the circumference of the drum. On the working face of the unit are five buttons numbered from 1 to 5 and a trap door. When a patron asks for tickets, for instance two, the cashier presses the button marked 2. This starts the motor which turns the drum a sufficient distance to eject two tickets through the trap door. At the same time, a cutter-bar working directly under the door, clips the two tickets from the rest of the strip. The motor automatically stops as soon as its function has been performed. Inside the device is a counter which registers each ticket as issued, and as the tickets themselves are numbered, one acts as a check on the other.

The tickets are issued in what is known as the "accordion fold" that is, instead of being wound into a roll, a certain number are folded back and forth in layers. This form of preparation makes it unnecessary to wait while additional tickets are installed. When the tickets in an Automaticket Register are seen to be low, a new bundle of 2,000 is placed under those remaining and the two ends connected with a paster which goes with each bundle. The feeding is thus made continuous.

One key locks the entire machine. After tickets have been inserted for the day's business and their numbers taken, also the readings of the two or more counters, the manager can lock the entire machine with the knowledge that no access can be had to any of the registers without his consent.

If it happens that during a matinee performance tickets of a certain color or price are not to be used, such units may be easily locked to prevent unintentional operation. By unlocking and lifting the hinged cover a small lever is seen. This lever should be raised about 1-8 inch and the buttons for that unit on the working plate pushed down, after which no tickets can be issued. This method of locking should also be followed when the day's business is over as it prevents tampering with the machine and contents.

" Tears of Love " Reaches High Mark

"TEARS OF LOVE," the Jos. W. Stern & Company's song dedicated in honor of Norma Talmadge, Select Pictures' star, will have reached, by the end of the month, more than one million circulation, it is declared. This means that the song, which carries Miss Talmadge's portrait on the cover, will be seen by more than three million persons, as it is estimated that each copy in circulaton reaches an average of three readers.

" Tears of Love " is on sale in the leading music stores in every city in the country and it is also handled by the five and ten cent stores, a number of which have run special window displays in connection with the exploitation of the number. It is also reported by Jos. W. Stern & Company that more than two hundred exhibitors in different parts of the country have applied directly to the publishers for copies of the song to use in connection with Norma Talmadge's Select Pictures, the latest of which is " The New Moon."

Educational Releases

(Photoplay Supplement and Cartoon)

THE fifth number of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement sets the observer down at the Metro studio first and introduces him to Richard Rowland, the company's president, and Viola Dana and May Allison. Next he sees Olive Thomas and Edna Purviance and after that he is whisked out to Universal City, where Rupert Julian is staging a scene from "The Fire Flingers" and where Joe Martin, the famous ape, is leading the keepers of the zoo a chase. Then to Jesse L. Lasky's home where Mr. and Mrs. Lasky entertain and where young Lasky speeds on the hours by playing with Wilfred Buckland's youngster. Mary Thurman is then introduced in her home and D. W. Griffith then takes the onlooker over some of his famous old sets and visualizes the action that was once staged in them. Altogether a most interesting reel.

Happy Hooligan in "Der Wash on Der Line," an animated cartoon, is a well drawn bit of "foolishment" in which Happy tells how he defeated a large number of Germans. The film gets pretty near vulgarity in a few places, but on the whole calls for laughs unaccompanied by blushes.—Peter Milne.

"Pretty Smooth"

(Universal—Six Reels)

"PRETTY SMOOTH" stars Priscilla Dean in another crook picture. Miss Dean is becoming synonymous with this type of photoplay and she is always able to make the most of the heroines entrusted to her characterization. Her bright personality and her always alert attitude fit her particularly well for the girl crook whose mission it is to attract the sympathetic attention of the audience. Her Gertie Jones in "Pretty Smooth" is another personal triumph for her even as the melodrama itself is something of a triumph in the art of picture construction with suspense the dominant element.

"Pretty Smooth" was written by Bayard Veiller, author of that famous crook stage play, "Within the Law," and of that famous mystery stage play, "The Thirteenth Chair." He has combined both the suspensive action of the former with the mystery action of the latter in "Pretty Smooth" with the result that it keeps the observer ever in a state of acute interest. The climax in which the detective refuses to recognize the reformed crooks because he believes they saved his life, is well handled and furnishes both a surprise and a laugh.

Miss Dean is the recipient of excellent support from Francis MacDonald as another reformed crook and from Milton Ross as the detective. When viewed the production included sub-titles apparently the original ones that the adaptor wrote into his script. They are not so pretty smooth, but when the editor has finished with them the picture will present a fine piece of entertainment. It is presented cleverly enough to immediately fascinate the average picture-goer, a fellow always willing to see the minions of the law go down to defeat through the cleverness of outlaws.—Peter Milne.

"Perils of Thunder Mountain"

(Vitagraph Serial—Two Episodes)

THIS newest of Vitagraph serials is laid in the deep snows of the high Sierras and, for this reason if for no other, should prove a welcome addition to any program. The first two episodes reveal the immense drifts, the white-capped mountains and coated trees in striking brilliance, while the action that is laid against these backgrounds is vigorous, bold and thrilling.

The plot of the "Perils of Thunder Mountain" deals with the struggles of two men, Davis and Morgan. A mine has been willed them, and Morgan wishes to control it all himself. Davis fights for his share, as well as for that portion of it which goes to charity, and sees to it that Ethel, their ward, is kept from Morgan's clutches. The action is elemental and does not possess the plot interest that was to be noted at the outset of the previous Vitagraph serial, but the thrills and the backgrounds make quite certain that no one will become restless while watching the various episodes unwind.

Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are the stars of the production, and both play with an enthusiasm and high spirit that will put them in immediate favor with audiences. The villain's role is in the capable hands of Jack Waltemeyer, while Kate Price, long a Vitagrapher, provides the comedy relief. The production was directed by Ronald Bradbury and William T. Baumann, and their work on the first two episodes is in fine serial form.—Peter Milne.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"The Lion's Den"—with Bert Lytell

IT makes no difference what kind of patrons you cater to, this picture ought to prove a first class entertainment. Principally it is a drama, the sort that appeals to the tender feelings of compassion and sympathy, this spirit being vividly conveyed by the hero, but it is also interlaced with situations so comical as to make one laugh from the bottom of his heart.

The star is presentd as a minister of the gospl, whose fearlessness draws him the ill will of the church board. He wants to start a boys' club, so as to keep the youngsters away from the evil influence of the poolrooms, but finds no support. He determines to get the club started by any means, so he buys half interest in a grocery store. At first, he does good business, but soon he loses all his trade as his competitor, one of the most influential members of the church board, whose daughter he loves, cuts down prices. On top of that, he is made to resign. He is somewhat discouraged but resolves to stick it out and have his club. Advised by the girl he loves, he confides his plans about the club to the boys. Each one of the boys now becomes a salesman, so he soon draws back all the trade.

His competitor, having lost all the trade, and being short in his accounts, attributes it to the dishonesty of his clerk. His clerk, angered by the insinuations, strikes him on the head with the telephone, sets fire to the store and starts to leave. The alarm is soon given, and the minister with the boys rush to the rescue. The minister enters the burning store and saves his life, extinguishing also the fire. Realizing now he is in the wrong, his competitor gives his consent for his daughter's marriage to him, and promises to help him start his boys' club.

Although the story may appear as somewhat old, it is handled so ably that it entertains the spectator as if it was a brand new one. Released by Metro May 19. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"The Woman Next Door"—with Ethel Clayton

"THE Woman Next Door" does not come up to the standard of Miss Clayton's former contributions. It is hardly any better than the average picture. Although its entertaining values are not so poor as to make you feel nervous while playing it, yet they are not high enough to entitle you to make any rash promises about.

The predominating feature in the picture is the heroine's renting the adjoining house and connecting it by a secret passage. She is thus enabled to entertain in disguise friends in a Bohemian way and derive from life the innocent pleasures her husband, an ugly man and old enough to be her father, has denied her.

In the course of the story the fame of this mysterious woman reaches the husband's ears; he seeks an introduction. His shock and his anger are without bounds when he finds out that this woman is none other than his wife. He attacks her savagely and attempts to choke her but her maid strikes him on the back with a sharp instrument and kills him.

The balance of the story deals with a detective's discovery of the secret passage and of his laying the crime at her door; but the maid's confession clears everything.

The picture has been based on "Vicky Van," one of a series of mystery stories by Carolyn Wells. Released by Paramount May 4. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"Josselyn's Wife"—Robertson-Cole

NOT since "The Heart of Rachel" has Miss Bessie Barriscale produced a picture to equal this one in entertaining values. In the review then, this department had pronounced that feature 100 per cent., a claim which was later upheld in the reports sent in by those of you who had played it. "Josselyn's Wife" comes as near equalling it as any picture can: In fact, you couldn't miss it much were you to take it for granted that this offering will give as much satisfaction.

Miss Bessie Barriscale is given almost an identical role—that of the much abused but suffering in silence wife, a wife who finds great comfort in the care of her boy whom she loves devotedly. The part of the boy is taken by Ben Alexander, an amiable youngster who has appeared in many pictures, and lately in "The Turn of the Road," an attraction which, according to the reports, has been acclaimed by the picture going public.

The spirit of the story appeals to our better nature; it should touch the heart-strings of any human being; the production end, on the other hand, has been skillfully handled.—Released through Exhibitors' Mutual. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"His Debt"—with Sessue Hayakawa

TO say simply that "His Debt" is a very good Robertson-Cole attraction, would not be giving all the credit such picture deserves. At any rate, you would be making no mistake, were you to class it with the star's best screen contributions. The story not only is full of substance, but also it has been produced in an atmosphere so artistic that the screen can hardly point to a superior one. Its artistry surpasses every one of Mr. Hayakawa's former offerings.

The story is of an entirely different nature than any of those so far contributed by this star. It is a gambling medodrama, thoroughly American, hardly any other Japanese being shown excepting two servants for a few short scenes. The star is presented as the owner of a fashionable gambling house; but he conducts his games straight. A young man plays and loses heavily. Thinking the game crooked, he plans a revenge. He enters the hero's house at night, shoots and fatally wounds him, the bullet piercing his lungs. He is taken to the hospital wher the close watch of the nurse saves his life.

After his recovery, the hero sends for his assailant. He is about to deliver him over to the authorities, when the nurse comes and, telling him he is the man she is about to marry, begs him to spare him. As the hero ows his life to the nurse, he lets him go for her sake, saying that a Japanese never forgets to pay his debt.

The theme is strongly dramatic, but not of such nature as to leave a bitter taste. It is a picture that should add class to the house that would run it. Released through Exhibitor's Mutual. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"I'll Get Him Yet"—with Dorothy Gish

AS a screen comedienne, Dorothy Gish is in a class by herself. Her comical mannerisms could make the sourest of faces turn to laughing; and she succeeded doing so in "I'll Get Him Yet," in spite of the story's lightness. In any event, while the picture could not be called a knockout, it should make everybody feel as having spent an enjoyable evening.

Farce-comedy is the nature of the subject, in which the heroine is presented as the daughter of a railroad magnate. Her father, in order to reduce the amount of his taxation, gives his daughter a railroad. She accepts it, but insists on running it herself.

She loves a young man, but when, at her insistence, he calls on her father to ask his consent for their marriage, he throws him out calling him a money hunter. Angered, he vows never to marry a rich heiress. At her solicitations, he is inflexible. Her persistence, however, softens his heart, and he agrees to marry her, but on one condition, that she should agree never to accept any money from her father.

The balance of the story, and the most comical, deals with the way she tries to hide from her husband the fact that she owns the railroad that passes through the town but doesn't stop, she herself having issued such order previous to her marriage. She is induced to join a movement to appeal to the unknown owner, whom they have knicknamed Skinflint, to allow the trains to stop there. The scenes showing the heroine's attempt to hide those of her employes who run the railroad for her, while calling on her to have some documents signed, are also comical. Released by Paramount May 25. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"One Week of Life"—with Pauline Frederick

THIS is an average picture. There is nothing extraordinary about the story. It contains no such twists as would take a spectator by surprise and thus give him pleasure. On the other hand, the fact that the story is of the dual role type, detracts from whatever entertaining value a subject of this class, written to be acted in the usual way, would naturally possess. A strange woman is shown as substituting the hero's wife, whom she resembles closely. It is hardly possible to make a spectator believe that the husband would not have become aware of the substitution. The different voice, behavior, and in fact a thousand other things, would have caused him to become aware he is not talking to his wife, instead of having to learn of it from the note he found on the floor, which was dropped by the strange woman.

As the production end of it is good, you will perhaps be able to get by with this medodrama. It is also clean. Released by Goldwyn April 13. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"WORDS AND MUSIC BY"—FOX

Good Representation of Small Town Ambition and Talent

WILLIAM FOX has taken his new stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, out of the comedy field for the time being and has placed them in strictly dramatic roles. Whether they will be able to shine as resplendently in subjects like their present offering is a question that cannot be answered on short notice. But they give evidence in the appreciation of their parts that serious pieces become them quite as well as things of a light character.

Interest and sympathy are always engendered through the youthful figures who outgrow the narrow environment of a small town. The hero and heroine in this story are gifted with the artistic temperament and to find suitable expression for it they migrate to the metropolis. And there is where the drama comes in.

The plot has done yoeman service in fiction and on the screen, but despite its age it never fails to hatch out a goodly array of dramatic ingredients. Virtue comes from the country place, while villainy is found in the city. And four reels of fairly suspensive action in which is blended a few notes of pathos are uncovered before the picture ends with a happy solution.

Be it said that the country puts it all over the city as it usually does in fiction. Our temperamental friends firmly establish themselves in the Broadway hall of fame. The romantic element is mostly subordinated in the story in order to permit character drawing. It is not missed, however, because the theme of stick-to-it-iveness is well developed.—Length, 5 reels—Released May 18.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

William Fox's new stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, will appear together in their newest attraction, "Words and Music By—" at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The picture, adapted by Charles Kenyon from a story by William Charles Lengel, treats of a small town boy who makes his way to success as a composer, and shows him surmounting a series of obstacles, as country boys have a way of doing when they go out into the world to seek fame and fortune. He writes an opera after several months of earnest labor and takes himself to New York to dispose of it. Naturally he encounters a plagiarist who succeeds in stealing his score, and the future looks black indeed while he endeavors to prove his authorship. Interwoven with his career is that of a young woman from the same little town whose voice takes her to fame in operatic circles. She had preceded him to the metropolis, but as he considered himself a failure he had been careful to avoid her.

Just what takes place before the lovers are reunited will be revealed on the ——— screen when "Words and Music By—" is shown. Suffice to say that it is an interesting picture filled with dramatic situations and climaxes and one that carries a strong human appeal. The romantic element is well brought out and so carefully is the atmosphere suggested that it seems like a story of everyday life. The stars give a good account of themselves and seem like perfect representations of what they pretend to be. The cast includes Robert Holder, Eugene Pallette, and Edwin Booth Tilton. All competent players. The picture was produced under the direction of Scott Dunlap.

THE STORY

Brian McBride and Millicent Lloyd are gifted with artistic temperaments that cannot find expression in the little town in which they live. Fortunately a musical show visits the place and Millicent is given a try-out for she possesses a beautiful voice. Naturaly she is selected for the prima donna role, while Brian is given kindly advice to keep on trying in his compositions and some day he will make his mark. But the play is a failure in the metropolis due to a poor score. When Brian completes his opera and comes to New York, the composer of the failure lures him to his apartment and succeeds in stealing the score, although he fails to memorize the finale of the second act. The music so impresses the manager that he engages the plagiarist to rewrite the failure, and it is a masterpiece in every way until the finale. His own music is decidedly inferior at that point.

Brian is rescued from his despair by a song publisher and his opportunity arrives when the manager of the opera solicits a suitable finale from his publishing friend. And so the impresario realizes his mistake in thinking Brian a plagiarist because of the poor finale turned in by the real thief. The young man had avoided Millicent because of his failure. But the time arrives when they are reunited on the presentation of the play. The girl in glad voice is inspired by Brian's music, and when the opera is voted a success. the youthful artists are brought together behind the curtain.

PROGRAM READER

A bright entertaining picture that is strong in human interest will come to the ——— screen shortly under the title, "Words and Music By—." It is a William Fox production and introduces Albert Ray and Elinor Fair as the stars. The story is based upon the youthful ambitions of the characters portrayed by Mr. Ray and Miss Fair and brings them from a small town to a big city where they find expression for their talents after several vicissitudes. The heroine Millicent Lloyd has a beautiful voice and when a musical comedy comes to the little town she is urged to join it. But the show proves a failure in New York due to its poor score. Meanwhile Brian McBride has completed the arduous work of composing his opera and has taken himself to the metropolis to have it tried out.

How he meets with failure after failure in the rebuffs that are offered him, how his opera is stolen by a plagiarist and incorporated in the musical play that features his sweetheart, how sunshine breaks through the clouds and reveals him as entirely successful are events that makes for an interesting hour in the ——— theatre. The picture gives an insight into the Famous Tin Pan Alley of New York and how popular songs are made. It also offers a vein of rich comedy that is punctuated with romance. The stars acquit themselves commendably and receive adequate support. The picture was scenaricized by Charles Kenyon from a story by William Charles Lengel. Scott Dunlap directed.

CATCH LINES

He didn't amount to much in his little home town. His talent for composing music wasn't appreciated until he took his opera to New York. How did he fare in the metropolis, and what became of his sweetheart whose gift of a beautiful voice led her to the same city? See "Words and Music By—"

The new Fox stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, in a charming story of love and sentiment.

They had the artistic temperament—these small town sweethearts. The girl was a marvelous singer while the boy was a gifted composer. They came to New York to conquer it. Did they succeed? You will find out when you see "Words and Music By—"

The girl succeeded because of her sex but the boy had his opera stolen. And he didn't want to see her because he hadn't made good. But a time came when the wrong done him was righted and their stars were in the ascendant. The curtain closed upon them at a critical first night. They had come to New York and conquered. See "Words and Music By—"

SUGGESTIONS

Inasmuch as the stars of this Fox feature are new in the photoplay world, perhaps the best plan would be to concentrate on them. They made an auspicious start in "Married in Haste" and their present vehicle brings them into the spotlight as very capable players. So to catch the crowd with the picture play up that the stars are the latest in the Fox constellation. Before they ventured forth in "Married in Haste" in stellar roles, they supported other stars in the Ince organization. So play up their personalities, as picturegoers are attracted mostly by the players rather than the subjects in which they appear. You will find sufficient data in the Plan Book review of "Married in Haste" in the Motion Picture News issue of April 19. Then there

"I'LL GET HIM YET"—PARAMOUNT

A Splendid Farce-Comedy from Every Angle

A SPLENDID farce-comedy is offered in "I'll Get Him Yet," Dorothy Gish's latest. The author, Harry Carr, has evolved a clever series of situations through which he pilots his main characters to the accompaniment of some unusually clever subtitles, subtitles which, if we remember correctly, get a laugh every time.

But don't get it into your head that "I'll Get Him Yet" is a piece of weak material bolstered up with witty captions. Far from it. Miss Gish herself doles out many a laugh by her "little disturber" type of playing and her ebullient spirits. Miss Gish is, by the way, one of the few actresses who can be cute and get away with it. And whether it was she or Director Elmer Clifton who injected all the original comedy business into the picture we do not know, but wherever the credit goes it goes in bales. Distinction in comedy marks every scene.

Miss Gish is well supported by Richard Barthelmess, who appears in the role of the at first pursued young man, who later is converted into an exceedingly jealous husband. George Fawcett does a great bit as the father and the rest are always in the spirit of the picture.

There is no room for the plot here. Suffice it to say again that Mr. Carr's procession of farcical situations keeps the observer ever on the alert. It's an all-around splendid comedy from whatever angle you happen to view it.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 25.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Dorothy Gish, the star without an equal or imitators comes to ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Paramount photoplay entitled "I'll Get Him Yet." This is the amusing story of a young lady who set her heart on marrying a certain man who was shy of her because of her fortune. So she pursued and pursued him and eventually won him. But then came a long series of misunderstandings due to hubby's jealousy and the fact that wifie wanted to conceal from him the fact that she had any money in her own name. "I'll Get Him Yet" is farce of the briskest order and awards Miss Gish a role which she makes the most of from first to last.

The story was written for the star by Harry Carr, a well known newspaper man of Los Angeles. He has contrived a clever plot with any number of complications that travel along unusual farce lines. Mr. Carr's story was produced under the direction of Elmer Clifton, the same man responsible for her previous successes on the Paramount program. He has handled the material in hand in expert style and has piloted the picture to a most successful conclusion.

Miss Gish derives excellent support from Richard Barthelmess in the opposite role and from George Fawcett, the noted character actor, in a humorous part. The picture is laid in a number of simple settings but "I'll Get Him Yet" needed nothing of a lavish character to make it a success. The plot and the players succeed in doing that.

THE STORY

Most men make Susie Faraday Jones yawn. She is a very tired young lady particularly as the affairs of business hang heavily on her shoulders. Her father, a capitalist if ever there was one, had named Susie controller of a certain electric railway operated by him so that his income tax wouldn't be so large. Of course he didn't expect Susie to run it but then no one ever did know what Susie was going to do. Then one day Susie meets Speeds McCredy, a young reporter and she straightway falls in love. It isn't long before Speed proposes but getting Mr. Jones' consent is another matter. Speed strikes him just as he is wandering through his tax report and gets rather ungentle treatment.

At that Speed declares he won't marry a rich girl but Susie is of a different opinion and after she follows him around for a few days he says he will marry her providing she agrees to live on his salary. Everything goes well for a time until Speed loses his job. Shortly afterwards however he is made editor of a suburban paper which plans to attack Susie's railway for refusing to stop at its station. Susie doesn't feel very comfortable at this and makes plans to change her previous order about the stops. Her manager, her lawyer and others call. Susie has an awful time keeping her husband ignorant of her presence and after many anxious moments he discovers them. There is quite a rumpus until Susie explains and then—Speed's jealousy soothed—everything ends happily.

CATCH LINES

In the olden days it was considered unmaidenly for a girl to pursue a man. But, dear me, dear me, we are very modern in 1919. If Susie had lived and thrived a few hundred years ago she would have all the bands of ostracism thrust down on her for she insisted on pursuing and pursuing and pursuing—a man. At all events "I'll Get Him Yet" is a fine comedy—be sure not to miss it.

She wanted to conceal the fact that she owned a fortune from her husband and he thought she was concealing a dark and mysterious past. See "I'll Get Him Yet," the biggest laughing hit that ever struck this village.

Dorothy Gish goes on disturbing. Here she crashes in on the peace and quiet of a certain mere male and doesn't give him a chance to cry "quits"—before he knows it he's her husband. See "I'll Get Him Yet," the laughing success of the season.

Love in a cottage and fun in a cottage—see "I'll Get Him Yet."

PROGRAM READER

In the classics and everything ancient it was considered very unmaidenly for one of the so-called gentler sex to pursue mere male. But things have changed considerable since then. Oh considerable indeed! Take, for example, Susie Faraday Jones. Susie had her heart and her eye, everything but her hands, set on Speed McCreedy and she resolved to leave no stone unturned until she had caught him. Said she to herself: "I'll Get Him Yet," and, by jove she got him! In what manner it will be your great pleasure to see in the picture "I'll Get Him Yet" which is due to come here shortly. Yes, she got him but she got a very jealous husband too. And as there was something mysterious in Susie's career, something which she didn't want Speed to find out, she had a very hard—and a very funny time. "I'll Get Him Yet" is by all odds the best comedy in which Dorothy Gish has appeared. As Susie she creates a character that everyone will just have to adore while Richard Barthelmess is Speed. They make an ideal team and the comedy is none the less an ideal comedy.

SUGGESTIONS

Paramount offers you a good title to play on in connection with this picture. It has a catch to it and if employed with a suitable picture of the star in advertising copy it will help to make a display that will attract attention. Among the stills you should be able to find one of the star in a typical pose. Under it use the line "Dorothy Gish as Skinflint Jones." Here again you will be playing on the reader's curiosity. It doesn't seem possible to unite the star's character with such a name.

Put a little humor into the catch lines that you use. The first one printed with this plan book is a fair sample of the style to use. Anything that brings out the unusualness of the central character and suggests the "pep" that Dorothy Gish puts in her performance will suffice. Humor and pep are the elements that should be the basis of advertising the feature. Don't let a chance go by to bring these elements out.

"RIDERS OF VENGEANCE"—UNIVERSAL

Harry Carey in Fine " Good-Bad Man " Western

HARRY CAREY, star and co-author with Jack Ford of " Riders of Vengeance," has created a most sympathetic Cheyenne Harry this time. It's the old idea of the " good-bad " man, but Harry has such good cause for his killings herein (inasmuch as his bride, mother and brothers were shot down by bandits after his wedding) that the character takes on fresh appeal and brings sympathetic response from the spectator.

Eugene B. Lewis, who handled the continuity, has constructed the story skillfully and has brought out the suspense of the tale to a very good degree. This is created by the constant danger surrounding Harry and the cool manner in which he goes about the accomplishing of his revenge.

As for Jack Ford's direction, rest assured that it guarantees a production in which there is action and sweeping western atmosphere every minute of the way. Certainly Mr. Ford knows how to put on a subject of this type, a statement of fact that has been proven time and again in other Harry Carey pictures.

The star endows his role with awkward—but humanly awkward—actions in his love scenes, while he rises to the moments of intensity with a fine sense of their values. Seena Owen contributes a pretty picture of the heroine.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 9.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Harry Carey, the popular western actor in Universal pictures will be seen again at the ——————theatre on —————— of —————— week in his latest photoplay entitled "Riders of Vengeance." Special interest is attached to the exhibition of this picture in that the star, in collaboration with Jack Ford, wrote the story They have conceived an unusually powerful motive on which the action is based and due to this the whole picture remains as one of the strongest westerns that ever found its way to the screen. The scenario was written by Eugene B. Lewis, well known and capable in his line, while the direction was in charge of Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford's work has long been a source of wonderment and admiration to those who follow closely the various western plays of the screen. The amount of rapid action he instills into his work is little short of marvelous. In "Riders of Vengeance" he well upholds his reputation—even surpasses it, it seems.

"Riders of Vengeance" tells the story of Cheyenne Harry whose wedding is interrupted by a murderous plan of his enemies. Shots are fired, the air rings with the cries of the dying and when at last the commotion has ceased, Harry's bride, his brothers, his father and his mother are dying. It is in this manner that vengeance is instilled in the heart of the man who was before just a happy boy. How he goes about to consumate his revenge and how he agains finds a true love go to make a photoplay of the greatest strength.

Senna Owen, one of the prettiest actresses on the screen, appears opposite the star.

PROGRAM READER

It was a gala day for Cheyenne Harry, for he was going to be married. The little church in the western municipality was decked in its Sunday dress and all the town stopped other activities to attend the ceremony. And what made it particularly nice for Harry and his family was the fact that his deadly enemies, rival cattlemen, had signified their willingness to bury the hatchet for the time and help in the merrymaking. And so Harry led his bride away from the altar with his heart bubbling over with happiness. He came to the door, his mother, father and brothers were just behind him. Nothing seemed ready to intrude on the peace and quiet of the scene and then, suddenly, a veritable tattoo of shots rang out on the air and Harry's bride, his mother and brothers fell, mortally wounded! This is the beginning of "Riders of Vengeance," Harry Carey's latest picture which will be shown here shortly. Would not such a deed put murderous vengeance in the heart of any man? Is there a man alive who would not swear to even the score but exactly a life for a life? But there are many surprising turns in "Riders of Vengeance"—and you must see this gripping photoplay to realize their power.

THE STORY

On Cheyenne Harry's wedding day, his family's rivals in the cattle business, signify their willingness to bury the hatchet, a fact which makes Harry exceedingly glad. But the smiles on the faces of these enemies are but masks and when Harry issues forth from the church with his bride, a volley of shots are fired. It is the greatest tragedy in the history of the town of Mesquite for when the crowd has been quieted, Harry's bride lies dead with his mother and brothers while his father's wounds are mortal.

After that no one sees much of Harry for two or three years but eventually he returns and posts the names of those he plans to kill. They are the men who partook in the massacre before and vengeance is deep instilled in Harry's heart. After he has killed off Number One, he meets a girl coming to the town to meet Gale Thurman, the sheriff, whom Harry believes led the gang against his people. He wants to harm the girl to avenge himself on Thurman but her innocence and beauty so appeal to him that his better self masters.

However he goes on with his work and strikes terror into the hearts of the other guilty men as, one by one, his enemies are picked off. Then there comes a time when, through a series of circumstances, Harry and Thurman find themselves obliged to unite forces against the apaches of the desert. In the midst of their struggle Thurman declares that he was innocent of any participation in the crime. The two men fight on and both are severely wounded. It is Thurman who dies after Harry's heroic struggle to save him for the girl he loves, And after the clouds have rolled away a new happiness dawns for Harry and the girl.

SUGGESTIONS

The situation around which the Program Reader is built seems to be the best for any advertising arguments that you may dress your copy with. It appears a bit gruesome maybe but as it is the opening situation of the picture and the one which motivates the hero's actions throughout the rest of the five reels, it is a good one to use. Certainly it implies unusual strength and promises dramatic action to follow of the most intense sort. Build it up, then, and get all out of it you can.

Interest naturally lies in the fact that Harry Carey had a hand in the story. Be sure to mention this in your advertising. The statement could easily be elaborated upon by dwelling on the fact that he has prepared himself a better vehicle than scenario writers have awarded him in the past.

Seena Owen has played with practically every one of the big male stars who works in the west. She is the leading woman here also and you should mention her as heading the supporting cast.

"ONE WEEK OF LIFE"—GOLDWYN

Pauline Frederick in Typical Cosmo Hamilton Story

COSMO HAMILTON is never anything but bold and startling in his plots of society life. Sometimes in his striving for that which is unusual he becomes quite plainly artificial, at least when some of his works are transplanted to the screen. "One Week of Life," an original opus of his his in which Pauline Frederick is starred, makes its bid for fame through this startling unconventionality. There are times during its course when incidents, even situations, are forced, but withal it is made of the sort of stuff that the typical fan thrives on.

Miss Frederick is always counted upon to give an effective performance, and here as Marion Roche, who takes another woman's place before her drink-sodden husband, she creates a character the emotional intensity of which is always a thing apparent. The same drink-sodden husband makes a man of himself with miraculous rapidity when he comes under Marion's softening influence. In fact he puts liquor behind him in a short twelve hours. Thomas Holding in the role of the husband creates a strong character, realistic to the extreme in most phases.

Hobart Henley's direction is entirely commendable. The settings are good and the lighting effective. —Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

Would Marion Roche take Mrs. Kingsley Sherwood's place for just one week? There was no danger. Sherwood was a drunkard and his wife seldom saw him! Would she object then? It was important that Mrs. Sherwood go away for a week. Surely she would render this aid to another woman! Did Marion accept the proposition? What were the consequences? See "One Week of Life," a dramatic thrill with Pauline Frederick in the stellar role.

PRESS NOTICE

Pauline Frederick, the distinguished emotional artist of Goldwyn pictures, will be seen in her latest photoplay entitled "One Week of Life," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "One Week of Life" was written for her by Cosmo Hamilton, widely known as a magazine author and playwright and it affords her a role, à dual role in fact, the counterpart of which has never been seen on the screen before. As Marion Roche, a girl who comes from a little town in Ohio to study art in New York, Miss Frederick creates a character that will long be remembered by her many admirers. Marion is confronted with a startling situation, namely that she take the place of a certain Mrs. Kingsley Sherwood, whose counterpart she is, that the harassed woman may go away from her drunken husband for the period of a week to visit her boy. No harm will come, she is told, inasmuch as the Sherwoods seldom, if ever, see each other. She will only be doing an act of kindness and so—she consents to the proposition.

The strange consequences that this peculiar bargain lead to are graphically depicted in the five reels of "One Week of Life." Mr. Hamilton is never conventional in his writings and in the present story he has evolved a tale that fairly teems with originality and bristles with situations of an extraordinary character. Miss Frederick appears to splendid advantage in her two roles, while the support she derives from Thomas Holding, Sydney Ainsworth and Corinne Barker is very good.

Willard Mack prepared the scenario from the Hamilton work while the direction was in charge of Hobart Henley.

THE STORY

Marion Roche comes to New York from a little town in Ohio to study art and little does she dream of the fate planned for her in the city. One of the first men she meets is LeRoy Scott, a wealthy society man. He looks at her long and hard and strangely. And the reason for his scrutinence of her is shortly made evident. Mrs. Kingsley Sherwood, Scott's close friend, is the exact counterpart of Marion, save for the fact that her life has matured her somewhat beyond the years of the girl from the country. Mrs. Sherwood is exceedingly unhappy with a drunken husband but Scott paints her plight as much more serious before Marion. He tells her that there is a child and that Kingsley refuses to let her visit it. "Will she not," he asks her, "take her place for one week so that Mrs. Sherwood may go away and find happiness with her boy? Just for one week." The Sherwoods seldom see each other, he adds. Marion, moved by the story, consents.

She finds Kingsley less a hopeless drunkard than she had thought. He craves attention that the selfish wife did not give. She learns that there never was a child in the family and then it dawns on her that Mrs. Sherwood went away with Scott. Through Marion's attention Kingsley endeavors and succeeds in making a man of himself and in time he makes the discovery of the deception. But he loves this woman who, through her unselfishness, has made a man of him. Then when he confronts her with his knowledge of the deception word comes that Scott has been drowned with an "unknown woman." And so a short time afterwards Kingsley quietly makes the intruder who saved him his wife.

PROGRAM READER

Marion Roche could hardly believe her ears! Here was a man asking her to assume the position of a Mrs. Kingsley Sherwood for just one week! He was very persuasive in his arguments and seemed to be sincere. "Mrs. Sherwood wants to go to see her boy," he said, "and her brute of a husband refuses to permit her. Sherwood is drunk all the time. They seldom see each other and then only to exchange mere commonplaces." So would not Marion consent to this charitable deception? Surely she could not refuse to assist this other woman! And as for Sherwood he would never know the difference, for his wife and Marion were as like as two peas in a pod. And so Marion, moved by this plea, consented and shortly afterwards was installed as mistress, in the home of Kingsley Sherwood! What were the consequences of this move? Was Sherwood so easily baffled? Where did Mrs. Sherwood really go? What was the other man's motive? Was Marion to regret her first impulse? Startling questions all, and all are startlingly answered in Pauline Frederick's latest feature, "One Week of Life," which is one of the features shortly to be seen at this theatre. It was written for her by the well-known novelist, Cosmo Hamilton, and produced under the direction of Hobart Henley from a scenario by Willard Mack. Don't fail to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a subject which from title to contents offers you unusual advertising possibilities. In the first place the title is alluring. It suggests anything romantic, daring, unusual. It will attract people of all kinds. Display it liberally. Play up the star, of course, but by no means neglect the title. It is such a corker that you simply can't afford to overlook it.

In the second place you have the author, Cosmo Hamilton, one of the best-known novelists and short-story writers of the day. His work is appearing in one popular magazine after another. He is known for the unusual and daring type of story he turns out. Don't neglect his name. Then there are Willard Mack and Hobart Henley, the scenarist and director respectively. These two men are exceedingly well known in their lines. Use their names also.

In the third place you have the big advertising punch of the story, the situation in which one woman assumes another's place in her husband's home. This certainly carries punch and the suggestion of the unusual. It is elaborated upon in the program reader and the catch lines.

"A FALLEN IDOL"—FOX

Evelyn Nesbit Appears in New Version of East vs. West Theme

THE familiar blood barrier of Oriental versus Occidental is given a rude jolt in "A Fallen Idol," Evelyn Nesbit's new picture. Indeed, East and West meet and MARRY, which, incidentally, is something new under the camera lights. Before this puncture of an ancient tradition that Kipling epitomized into poetry takes place, a sensational and highly colorful melodrama is unfolded. And if there is a suggestion of great labor in the composition insofar as coincidences and conveniences occur, nevertheless it is entertaining from inception to conclusion.

The picture marks a screen holiday for Miss Nesbit, since she not only paves the way in breaking down the ancient barrier, but she takes a colorful photograph as an Hawaiian Princess. The star fits the character admirably. Her dark features, her languorous charm, are truly suggestive of the type she represents. Consequently she has given the screen her best performance.

This Hawaiian Princess is the protege of a California social leader, whose nephew becomes enamored with her. The girl is whisked back to Hawaii by the villain of the play because the society woman doesn't want the East and West barrier smashed in her home. When the mad lover follows her to the Islands, the melodrama comes right out in the open, and before he leads her to an Hawaiian altar, the spectator is in for some rousing thrills.

The concluding reels carry an elemental punch which, combined with realistic atmosphere, suffice to get it over. Lillian Lawrence and Sydney Mason render good assistance. Kenean Buel's direction is praiseworthy.—5 reels.—Released May 18.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"A Fallen Idol" is the latest William Fox production starring Evelyn Nesbit and it cannot be denied that she scores her greatest triumph. The picture, which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, deals with love, intrigue and the age-long barrier of East versus West. It visualizes the honor of an Hawaiian Princess who is brought to the United States by a wealthy California society woman—who promptly objects to the attentions her nephew showers on the young protege. During the nephew's absence the girl comes under the influence of a smuggling friend of Mrs. Parrish, the society woman, and he induces her to go back to Hawaii with him through his argument that Keith Parrish is only using her for a plaything since a blood barrier would prevent their marriage.

The nephew follows the pair to Hawaii, where he finds the girl on the villain's yacht. How he rescues her after the severest trials in which he has to overcome the animosity of the natives and overpower members of the crew, is admirably set down in the most graphic terms. The picture is rich in scenic investiture, many of the scenes being reproductions of a typical Hawaiian village. It is also well supplied with that element known as action, consequently it generates a goodly amount of suspense.

"A Fallen Idol" is said to exhibit Miss Nesbit at her best. It certainly brings out her magnetic personality. A competent cast has been selected to assist the star and among the players who contribute good portrayals are Lillian Lawrence, Sydney Mason, Lyster Chambers and Harry Semels. E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the story. The picture was produced under the direction of Kenean Buel.

THE STORY

Princess Laone is a young Hawaiian musical artist who becomes the protege of Mrs. Parrish, a wealthy society leader of Santa Barbara. She becomes a pronounced success through her colorful personality, and it isn't long before she casts a spell over Keith Parrish, the nephew of the society woman. Their love affair has progressed to the point where Mrs. Parrish deems it best to advise the girl that she comes from a different world. And Laone carries out the matron's suggestion to discourage Keith even though he has proposed marriage. When he absents himself for a few days, Stephen Brainard, a social parasite and a smuggler, entices Laone to accompany him to Hawaii on his yacht, pressing his argument that Parrish would never marry her since he comes from the Occident. On the trip Brainard tells her that if she will not submit he will turn her over to the crew. As the lesser of two evils she gives herself to Brainard, though her heart is strained to the breaking point.

In the meantime Keith has returned to find that his betrothed has gone back to Hawaii, and so he follows. He meets Laone but she repulses him because of what occurred on the yacht. When he is arrested for the theft of a valuable necklace, the Princess resolves to save him. So she returns to Brainard's yacht to obtain the papers that will indict the parasite as the real thief. Keith is released on bail and follows her to the yacht and a desperate fight ensues. Laone manages to hold the crew at bay with a revolver and officers from the harbor patrol come aboard and arrest Brainard. They find smuggled jewels and invoices. Thus Keith is cleared of the charge of theft and the lovers are restored to each other.

PROGRAM READER

"A Fallen Idol" which comes to the ——— theatre shortly starring Evelyn Nesbit is a stirring tale of adventure and romance that introduces an Hawaiian Princess as its leading character. The play calls for emotional acting of a high order and Miss Nesbit answers this call admirably. She departs somewhat from her previous roles in the enactment of the character. One is carried from the society circles of California where the Princess is the latest fad in the round of entertainment to the primitive huts of a typical Hawaiian village. And in the story there are romance, intrigue, treachery, retribution, elements which are punctuated with numerous thrills. Miss Nesbit has a love affair with a young Californian but it is interrupted, and she is carried back to Hawaii, virtually a prisoner by the social parasite of the story. Her sweetheart follows and also is made a prisoner.

How the tables are turned and the lovers reunited, how the barrier of East and West is bridged, are events that make a dramatic climax for a richly absorbing picture. The scenic part of the play is perfect in every detail. Miss Nesbit has been given a cast of excellent players to interpret the story. Among those who contribute good work are Lillian Lawrence, Sidney Mason, Lyster Chambers, Harry Semels, Thelma Parker and Marie Newton. The picture was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon, one of the best scenarioists in the business, and it was directed by Kenean Buel.

CATCH LINES

The story of an Hawaiian Princess who becomes the latest fad in the social whirl of California. She is taken up by a wealthy grande dame and falls in love with her democratic nephew. "THE LITTLE DIPLOMAT"—PATHE

Baby Marie Osborne's Pranks Are Subordinated for Crook Melodrama

ALTHOUGH Baby Marie Osborne still carries out the idea that "a little child shall lead them" in her newest essay, "The Little Diplomat," nevertheless she is relegated to the background along with tiny Sambo to amuse herself as best she can until such time as her foster parents think it wise to let her guide them. Which hour isn't reached until the concluding scene, when she has saved a rare antique from being captured by a desperate band of burglars.

It seems odd to find the little star away from her customary job of reuniting papa and mamma or bringing happiness to a childless couple. And the Diando people should put her back in her familiar portrait, for it stands to reason that tender juveniles and crook melodramas don't mix. Little Miss Osborne can stand on her own chubby legs and delight film patrons with her childish pranks, even though her stories are expressed in the simplest screen language possible.

In "The Little Diplomat" she has a subject that could be used by several grown up stars, so matured is its general outline. It is a weird and wild melodrama that has been concocted and before the end is reached it goes off on a tangent and comes back with a bit of romance that has no place in the story, unless one of the laws of drama must be obeyed.

But Baby Marie as a French war orphan finds her true place at the finish. By proving her mettle she becomes the idol of her foster parents.—Length, 5 reels.—Released in June.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Baby Marie Osborne, the leading child actress of the screen, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her newest subject, "The Little Diplomat." This picture takes up the trials and tribulations of a French war orphan in her search for happiness in America. The story was written by Emma Bell Clifton, and through the fine guidance of Stuart Paton in his capacity as director, it makes a thoroughly enjoyable screen hour.

Baby Marie is adopted in the story by the Bradley Wests. Her foster father took this course to appease the heart hunger of his wife, since he doesn't care for children. He is more interested in his valuable collection of antiques among which is a sacred idol stolen from a Hindu temple.

It may be seen that this is the beginning of a mysterious melodrama. Its development forms the body of the picture although it is admirably blended with juvenile playfulness. Let it be said that the idol is sought after by a desperate band of crooks. When they succeed in breaking into the West safe, Little Marie tumbles out of her trundle bed and captures them. The picture carries a fine flavor of romance, and there is a goodly portion of heart interest.

Baby Marie Osborne succeeds in bringing out the juvenile spirit in her accustomed manner. She seems to derive a great deal of pleasure from her pictures, and it is quite a delight to watch her cut up capers with the tiny pickaninny, whc is as much a part of the Osborne machine as she is herself. Others who appear in prominent roles are Lydia Knaught, William Welsh, Jack Connelly, Murdick MacQuarrie, Velma Clay, Al MacQuarrie and Betty Compson.

THE STORY

Little Marie is a French war orphan who is adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Bradley West. The child is more or less tolerated by her foster-father, who took the trouble to adopt her to please his wife. He is more interested in his colection of antiques of which a sacred idol is the chief objet d'art. It has been stolen from an East Indian temple and West's possession of it gives his wife a nervous fear that it will cause her husband a lot of trouble. Little Marie occupies her time playing with the child of one of the negro servants and she also becomes the favorite with Trent Gordon, the nephew and private secretary of Bradley West.

A band of crooks bent upon gaining possession of the idol, entice Trent to their apartment in order to drug him, in the hope that he may have the combination of West's safe on his person. Chagrined over their disappointment, they let him find his way home in a seemingly intoxicated condition. His sweetheart sees him and places a wrong construction on the incident. But Little Marie patches up the affair.

It happens that the burglars attempt to rob the safe at the West home, but they are apprehended by the little girl. She has been awakened by the commotion and entering the room unseen she manages to imprison the chief burglar in the safe. When the latter succeeds in freeing himself, Trent comes into the room and captures the entire outfit. Thus Little Marie becomes the pet of the household and wins her foster-father's undying love.

PROGRAM READER

The popular little child actress, Baby Marie Osborne, will come to the ——— screen shortly in her newest picture entitled "The Little Diplomat." Our patrons have followed her pranks with rare interest since her first appearance at the ——— theatre. But notwithstanding the place she occupies as the leading child actress of the screen, credit must be paid to the foresight of her managers in giving her the companionship of the little pickaninny. Together they have made the pictures something to look forward to. And so Baby Marie is supported by her dark-skinned playmate in "The Little Diplomat."

The young star appears as a French war orphan who is adopted by a collector of rare antiques. Her foster-father neglects her since he is too wrapped up in his work to care a great deal for children. So she finds companionship with a tiny pickaninny, the child of one of the servants. A time comes when she proves the mettle of her own people. Awakened one night by a mysterious noise, she tiptoes downstairs and noticing a group of people at her father's safe she has the idea that they aren't there for any good. So she imprisons the chief burglar and wins the undying love of her foster-father. The management feels sure you will like this Osborne feature. There is enough drama to counterbalance the childish pranks. The picture was directed by Stuart Paton. Emma Bell Clifton wrote the story.

CATCH LINES

She was a French war orphan and she was adopted by a childless couple. The husband didn't like children, but he grew to think a great deal of this little waif from France when she saved his valuable collection of antiques from being stolen. See "The Little Diplomat."

They had almost stolen the antiques. Almost. What stopped them? Simply the presence of mind of a little girl who imprisoned the chief robber in her foster-father's safe. You see she hadn't gone to sleep and a noise awakened her. Tiptoeing downstairs she found the burglars at their work. And then? Well, you must see Baby Marie Osborne in this, her latest picture.

SUGGESTIONS

If you are in the habit of playing the Baby Marie Osborne pictures you have probably noticed that they have an enthusiastic following. While the themes of her pieces do not vary a great deal, they being principally conceived to bring about the reunion of parents through the tender appeal of the child, or the adoption of a little girl by childless parents, yet they are filled with enough playful interludes of a childish character to make them attractive to the majority of picturegoers. The Pathe youngster has a bright little piece in "The Little Diplomat" and one that has enough depth to please the grown-ups. You might bring out that it marks the first appearance of the star as a juvenile detective. Perhaps the strongest point in the advertising would be to concentrate upon the plot and detail the adventures of the little French war orphan who is adopted by an American family

"THE LION'S DEN"—METRO

Bert Lytell Stars in a Faithful Picture of Small Town Life

THE sincerity and naturalness of Bert Lytell in the role of a small town minister is one of the strong features of "The Lion's Den." Another point in its favor is found in the authorship. It was Frederick Orin Bartlett who furnished the star with a fine photoplay in "The Spenders" a short time ago, and his latest Saturday Evening Post story makes a picture quite out of the ordinary.

Mr. Bartlett certainly knows his small town and he has breathed so much delightful sentiment and charm of one of these rustic places into his tale that it is made real and wholesome, and above all, appealing. His people are everyday human beings and by drawing a minister who conducts a grocery store during the week he has sounded something new in characterization.

Such a story as this is easily transferred to the screen. The director has invested it with the author's atmosphere. Not a detail is missing. There is the quaint town with all of its charming rusticity. Other points he has brought out too—points which generate pathos and homely humor. And not in any part of the picture is there the least suggestion of exaggeration. Indeed Mr. Baker can be trusted with a story.

The moral that it is more blessed to give than to receive is well emphasized. Of course for such a piece as this splendid acting is required. It has received such. Alice Lake contributes a performance marked by sympathy and understanding, and the others are in their places.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 19.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Bert Lytell's latest Metro photoplay entitled "The Lion's Den," will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is from a story by Frederick Orin Bartlett which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post, and translated upon the screen it offers the star an ideal role. Mr. Bartlett will be remembered as the author of "The Spenders," a Post story that served Mr. Lytell a few weeks ago. 'The Lion's Den" is a worthy successor to "The Spenders" in that it contains the same fine humanity, the same faithful representation of small town life. The star is called upon to assume a different charactrization, however, in the figure of a minister. Mr. Bartlett knows his small town atmosphere and so splendidly is it conveyed that one unconsciously becomes a part of the environment.

It is simple and straightforward is this story and is made compelling through the human touches in the plot and characterization. Here is a minister who is determined to install a boys' club but who is not encouraged by his wealth church members. When he beards the lion in his den the latter so humbles his pride that the young preacher enters the grocery business to compete with him and gain the necessary funds. His trials and tribulations, his successes which are visualized in his romance with the daughter of the rival grocer, and the prosperity of the business and the friendship of the boys are events that are dramatically and humorously told. To see "The Lion's Den" is to see a faithful virsualization of small town life that is in no way exaggerated. It generates a fine humanity and heart appeal.

Mr. Lytell again scores in the naturalness and sincerity of his performance. He is an everyday clergman, one who is doing good work without any ostentation whatsoever. Good support is accorded him by an excellent cast. George D. Baker adapted and directed the play.

THE STORY

The Reverend Sam Webster didn't meet with much response in his efforts to raise funds to install a boy's club in connection with his church. When he requested a big donation from Grocer Stedman, the latter so humbled the Reverend's pride with the insignificant contribution of $25.00 that he decided to become a groceryman himself and raise the necessary sum. Stedman was tactless enough to inform Webster that he had no more right to tell him how to conduct his business than he (Stedman) had to tell him how to preach. This remark led the preacher to enter the Lion's Den of Commerce. So he preached in his church on Sundays and on week days sold groceries to the good wives and mothers of the community. Stedman had nearly eliminated Grocer Jarvis from business due to his cut prices. And Webster became Jarvis' partner. And the business of the store revived.

Stedman, furious at the success of his rival, sold at lower prices than ever, but he didn't reckon that the boys would take their mothers' orders and trade with the minister. His jealousy caused him to have the young preacher put out of the church. The Stedman grocery caught on fire one night and the boys, led by the clergyman saved not only the contents of the store but also the life of the proprietor. And out of gratitude he retrieved his self esteem by building the club himself. He even went further and offered Webster a partnership in his business and saw to it that the grocer-clergyman kept his church. But the latter wasn't entirely successful because his heart was conquered by Stedman's daughter. .. ..

PROGRAM READER

Bert Lytell, the popular Metro star, will be seen here shortly in his latest feature entitled "The Lion's Den." This is considered one of the best of his subjects by the producers for besides offering his fine player a thoroughly congenial role, it provides a plot filled with the quaint situations of small town life and one that is well sustained to the end. The story was written by Frederick Orin Bartlett and appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post. This author has found his way to the screen several times and our patrons will remember his story entitled "The Spenders" which Bert Lytell enacted recently. No other writer in the fiction field has a surer grasp upon small town life than Mr. Bartlett, and his "The Lion's Den" is splendidly real in its delination of that life.

Mr. Lytell appears as a minister who conducts a grocery store in order to find means to install a boys' club in connection with his church. To beg for the necessary funds through the regular channels on Sunday does not meet with success. Hence his grocery business. How he enters the "lion's den of commerce" to achieve his end, and his subsequent trials and successes, are dramatically and humorously shown. A refreshing romance ends the play with a note of gladness.

CATCH LINES

If you were a minister and needed a large sum of money how would you set about getting it? How did the Reverend Sam Webster get it in "The Lion's Den?" See this delightful play of small town life which will come to the ———screen with Bert Lytell in the stellar role.

He requested a large sum of money to install a boys' club, but the rich man scoffed at the idea. His pride humbled, he started a grocery store in direct competition to the man of wealth to gain the necesary funds. Did he meet with success? See "The Lion's Den," a thoroughly interesting play.

SUGGESTIONS

No player on the screen is making more rapid strides than Bert Lytell. The reports that are coming in about him from all parts of the country indicate that he is a pronounced success. Fortunately he has been given excellent material. You no doubt cleaned up with "The Spenders" which he presented a short time ago. Well his new feature is written by the same author, Frederick Orin Bartlett, and the story appeared originaly in the Saturday Evening Post. Bring out this point. Any Post story is usually successful on the screen. Advertise it as one of the magazine's best articles. Many of your patrons undoubtedly read it in its original shape and will

"THE MINTS OF HELL"—HAMPTON-ROBERTSON-COLE

William Desmond Is Splendid in Vivid Picture of the Yukon

WILLIAM DESMOND has in "The Mints of Hell" a well planned, absorbing and suspensive melodrama. Everything that goes to make up a Yukon picture is there: Husky men who live hard; husky dogs that take up the white man's burden and hurry it across the trackless wastes; men brave and bold, men mean and cowardly; the mushroom mining camp, and the endless reaches of merciless snow and mountain.

Close scrutiny of the feature failed to reveal any new screen language, as it is a mixture of almost all the dramatic ingredients from which Yukon pictures have been concocted. Yet "The Mints of Hell" is told in a straightforward way, and it is so vivid and absorbing in its display of elemental action that it seems just a bit bigger than the usual stories of the frozen North.

Space does not permit the story to be told in detail, but suffice to say that it presents love and lust, greed and self-sacrifice—elements that are brought to the surface at the four corners of the earth whenever men in their mad scramble attempt to find the hidden golden treasure.

The director has uncovered a bottle of No. 1 Brand of Yukon atmosphere. His snow scenes are picturesque. You are with Desmond sinking deep into the trackless wastes and wondering if you'll survive. A fine stroke of realism there. The star gives a finished and effective portrayal as the heroic miner. There is not a false note in his performance. Length, 5 reels.—Released in May through Exhibitors' Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Mints of Hell," which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with William Desmond as the star, is a story of Alaska and particularly of that portion known as the Yukon. It presents the star as one of the gold-seekers that tracked across the frozen wastes in search for the yellow ore. Gold! How it has tested men's souls. Some have gone mad, eaten snow and died. Some found the precious metal, staked their claim, and perished when success was at hand. Some were conquered by the frozen silences, for civilization is far away and loneliness is near. William Desmond would have perished in his search for the "flat gold" valley had it not been for a girl who rescued him from a blinding snowstorm just as success crowned his efforts. Flat gold? It is soft and black and heavy and flat like coins from the mints of hell. It is harder to find than the yellow ore that lies deep beneath the surface.

But Dan Burke (William Desmond) discovered the rich vein and a girl at the same time. How he started out for the valley against the advice of old prospectors, how the storms and silences nearly drove him mad, how he vindicated the girl's honor with her would-be-despoiler, how he raced back to the hidden vein to beat the others in the mad rush, how he was tracked down by the Mounted Police for a murder he didn't commit, and how he came into good fortune in the end are events that are graphically told in this highly entertaining picture. "The Mints of Hell" is rich in picturesque scenery. The trackless wastes of snow, the fir trees and pines that stand like silent sentinels against the white background, make a setting that brings the story out in bold relief.

Mr. Desmond gives a virile performance as Burke, and his customary good nature is in evidence as usual. You follow him with the keenest interest. In his support are Jack Richardson, Vivian Rich, Charles French, Frank Lanning, and Edward Jobson.

THE STORY

Winter had arrived in the Klondike when Dan Burke stepped into the saloon of the little town of Sundown in search of the elusive metal known as gold. Ever since he had struck the North country, Dan had heard of "flat gold"—gold that is soft and black and heavy. Where it came from no one knew except Gaston Chaudiare, his daughter Aline, and a half-witted dwarf called Maung, who lived together over the Lillimuit Divide. Those who had gone in search of it always met with disaster, although this fact did not deter Dan from blazing his trail over the frozen fields to succeed where others had failed. But he would have succumbed when he reached his goal had not Aline found him.

After she had nursed him back to health he started back to Sundown to mete out punishment to Clay Hibbing, who had shown his vicious nature toward the girl when he found the "flat gold" country in a previous search. This accomplished, Dan returned to the Divide, but Hibbing followed him to gain his revenge, and also to beat him in staking a claim to the property. The latter won the race sure enough, but in attempting to shoot Dan he killed his own partner. As the dead man had Burke's gun in his possession, Hibbing made it appear that he (Burke) was guilty. Meanwhile the Mounted Police, who were in search of Hibbing, found Reardon's body, and so turned their attention to hunting down Dan. And as he filed his claim, Chaudiare and the police entered the office bent on punishing him. The former thought him dishonest until he showed that the claim was filed in the old man's name. When Chaudiare signed Dan's name as a copartner, the police were convinced that he was innocent. And with Hibbing found frozen to death, Dan and Aline were free to develop their claim and romance.

CATCH LINES

Up in the Klondike they say that the sight of "flat gold" saps men's brains. The pathless wastes of snow and ice lie like a shroud over the skeletons of fortune-seekers who, in their fruitless search, have "gone mad, eaten snow and died." Did William Desmond meet his fate in "The Mints of Hell"? Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and you will know.

William Desmond in one of those bang-up Alaskan stories that deal with the lure of the precious gold.

How long he floundered through the snowdrifts, after the storm had driven him off the trail, he never knew. He only knew that icy fingers clutched at his throat and he would have perished but—you must see this picture of the snow country to appreciate its powerful and picturesque scenes.

SUGGESTIONS

You can't be to strong in boosting this Desmond feature. Since it is an Alaskan story you have something that usually fascinates the average picturegoer. It is a tale of the search for gold, but the gold in this case is represented as the mints of hell because it is black and soft and heavy and difficult to find. Flat gold they call it. Play up this feature and advertise the catch lines that have expressed the nature of the story. Write your copy around the plot and bring out that the lure of the hidden metal is enough to try men's souls. Get them excited with the dangers that confront goldseekers. Play it up as a regular he-man story that carries all the elemental passions that are enacted against a background of wild inanimate nature as it is found in the frozen North. What of the title? Surely it is a corker, and should be played up for its full advertising value. Bring out the marvelous scenery. Snow, snow, snow everywhere and great firs and pines loom against the white sky. White above, white beneath, and the search for gold goes on. Bring out the frozen silences and how William Desmond went through hell to find the yellow ore. Play up that life is lived in the raw in the Yukon. Then what of the star? Mr. Desmond has found his place as one of the most capable actors on the screen. He is always in there trying and his earnestness and good na-

"REDHEAD"—SELECT

Alice Brady in Thoroughly Human Picture

THE element of simplicity and the human note sounded throughout the five reels of "Redhead" confine its appeal to no one particular class. It will probably prove a success before all varieties of audiences inasmuch as these two qualities are really at the base of all universal entertainment. The story is a single-track affair, merely telling of the manner in which a cabaret girl proved the means of making a man out of a drunken waster by marrying him. Both characters are well drawn and are played in excellent taste by Alice Brady, the star, and Conrad Nagel, leading man.

While the original story by Harry Payson Dowst was, no doubt, exceedingly good, great credit should be extended to Charles Maigne, who adapted and directed "Redhead." He has made the whole picture human to the core, has handled the continuity in his usual highly skilled manner and has touched up the action with original bits of business. Nor should the small thread of humor that runs throughout the picture be forgotten. As in many works that are real, this humor asserts itself naturally.

Miss Brady's performance is well shaded and Mr. Nagel, her leading man in her present stage success, is fine in the opposite role. The makeup of the star in her first scenes is a little off.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

SUGGESTIONS

The central situation of this picture is one which will stand off well in newspaper and lobby advertising. It has the suggestion of something a little spicey about it and at the same time presents a situation that for its unusualness will attract all sorts of attention. Look over the catch lines printed herewith and see if one of them will not fit for your advertising.

Don't fail to mention Miss Brady's great stage success, "For Ever After." This show is still running in New York after almost ten months of success. There are many, many people from out of town who have seen it. It is an out-of-town show par excellence. Cash in on it and mention it, just a line, perhaps, in your advertising. It will pay. State also that Conrad Nagel, Miss Brady's leading man in "Redhead," is also in the play. This will help, too. Mr. Nagel has a good picture record of his own, also.

The usual advertising stunt regarding red-headed people might be worked with the exhibition of the picture providing you care for this sort of stuff.

PRESS NOTICE

Alice Brady, Select luminary and star of the great stage success, "For Ever After," will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture entitled "Redhead." This is an adaptation from a story by Henry Pawson Dowst and awards Miss Brady the role of a cabaret dancer, nicknamed Redhead by her intimates. The chief intimate in the case is Matthew Thurlow, a rich young fellow without a purpose, who spends his nights, almost without exception, in the cabaret. He admires Redhead greatly, in fact he loves her, a fact which he makes public whenever he is so far in his cups as to be indiscreet. But certainly in his sober sense he never thought of marrying her. One night after the wine has been flowing swiftly he is dared to make Redhead his wife, and Matt accepts the proposition.

As a consequence he awakes the next morning with a hangover and a wife—neither one of which he seems to care about. How Redhead went about making a man of Matt and how she succeeded despite his pretended scorn for her are events which make a photoplay full of human interest and real drama. Miss Brady never appeared to better advantage than in the title-role, while she derives suport from an excellent cast headed by Conrad Nigel.

Charles Maigne adapted and directed the picture, and his work is thorough in every degree. Replicas of the famous Claridge grill, tap room and bar in New York City are included among the settings for the production.

THE STORY

Dazie is a cabaret dancer, much admired by Matthew Thurlow, a young man about town. She returns his admiration and his love, and it hurts her to see him wasting his life away in company of fast friends. So one night when Matt is particularly drunk Dazie marries him—the two having been dared to go through the ceremony. The next morning it is a far from pleased husband that Dazie finds. He starts to prate about his reputation and his name, and plainly signifies that he is not at all pleased with the bargain. However, Dazie decides to insist on her rights, and as a result Matt is cast off by his uncle without a penny.

With what little money she has Dazie rents and furnishes an apartment and then settles down to a peculiar domestic existence in which Matt is an unwilling partner. Forced to look for work, Matt eventually lands a job as a truck driver and after a short time reaches a better position. He takes a new interest in life but refuses to admit that Dazie was at all responsible for his success. It then becomes a matter of bringing Matt to his senses. It takes a long time before he is able to bury his pride and give Dazie the credit and love that is due her for the good she has accomplished, but at length he proves himself man enough to acknowledge her as the fine woman that she is.

CATCH LINES

He thought Dazie was good enough to play with but not good enough for his wife! Why did he draw this distinction? Was he correct? See "Redhead," Alice Brady's latest dramatic success.

He was ready to sit with her and drink with her and dance with her, but he wasn't ready to wake up one morning and find her—HIS WIFE! See "Redhead," Alice Brady's Select photoplay.

Their marriage certificate was the back of a menu card, their honeymoon was a thing of quarrels and sullen silences! But Dazie made a man of him! At first he was fool enough to think he had done the making—but see "Redhead."

PROGRAM READER

Matthew Thurlow had been seeing much of Dazie for a long time. He was attracted to her immensely. Every night when she did her dance at the cabaret he applauded her loudly. And the chances were that when she came to his table and plied him with various highballs he would speak words of admiration—even love—to her. But nevertheless Matt wasn't ready for the shock that greeted him one morning when he came to, with a dark brown taste in his mouth incidentally, and found that he had married this Redhead of the cabarets the night before! She was all right as a merry-making companion, reasoned Matt, but as a wife! That was a little too much. But whatever Matt's views on the subject, Dazie had very set ideas of her own—and chief among them was to make a man out of the drunken wastrel. Did she accomplish it? Could she overcome his pride, his pretended dislike of her? These are questions that are dramatically answered in Select's latest photoplay starring Alice Brady, which will be shown at this theatre shortly. It is a strikingly human picture told in a pretty manner. Conrad Nagel, Miss Brady's leading man in her stage success, "For Ever After," appears as Matt.

"A ROGUE'S ROMANCE"—VITAGRAPH

Latest Earle Williams Picture Fails to Reach Average

"A ROGUE'S ROMANCE" is a story of a Paris outlaw (incidentally and for sympathetic purposes an honor man of the war) who spends his time dodging the police, helping them round up other criminals and courting the hand of a society girl whose smile and worried look has reformed him. The picture is quite disjointed and leaps from one track to another without apparent cause. Some of the tricks contrived to throw sympathy in the way of the main character are more or less bald and fail in effect.

James Young, usually a good director, went astray in "A Rogue's Romance." The Paris society atmosphere, for instance, will only appeal to those whose education is exceedingly limited and whose taste is not at all cultivated. In fact, it must be confessed, that the whole picture deserves the same criticism. It is not the sort of entertainment that we are used to in the year 1919.

Earle Williams is starred and plays sincerely, but is quite lost in the rambling action. His support does its best.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 9.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

All Paris gendarmes were on the lookout for this man. The orders from the Prefect of Police were to leave no stone unturned until he was captured. And why this drastic measure taken against him? Had not he won the highest honor bestowed on a Frenchman—the Croix de Guerre? Did he not enjoy the confidence of the leading citizens of Paris? Had he not frustrated a gigantic swindle and turned its would-be perpetrators over to the very police who were hunting him? What had he done to earn the stamp of an outlaw? A war hero, a respected citizen, a benefit to the social welfare of his city, he was hounded day and night, obliged always to be on the alert lest some friend should prove false or some clue leak out to the enemies that seemed to surround him! Such is the predicament of Monsieur Picard, the hero of "A Rogue's Romance," a Vitagraph picture shortly to be seen at this theatre with Earle Williams in the stellar role. It is one of the most exciting pictures in which this popular actor has appeared. Written for him by H. H. Van Loan and produced under the direction of James Young, it remains a highly enjoyable entertainment from start to finish.

PRESS NOTICE

Earle Williams, the popular Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture production entitled "A Rogue's Romance." This is based on a story written by H. H. Van Loan, a well-known screen writer, and awards him the thoroughly congenial role of Monsieur Picard, a rogue of Paris who takes extreme delight in tricking the police at every one of their many excited turns. In fact, Picard is just about the smartest society crook in all Europe. His intimates also know him as a gentleman and hero for he fought during the long years of the war and returned with the highest decoration a Frenchman can receive—the Croix de Guerre.

However, hero or no, the prefect of police of Paris and subordinates are bound to capture the wily Picard and to this end they bend all their efforts. How he escapes from them, how he meets the woman responsible for his reformation, and how at last after a particular clever trick Picard and the girl escape for the last time from the net of the law, are events which make a thoroughly enjoyable picture. Mr. Williams is singularly well suited for the role of Picard and plays it with a dash and grace that are admirable. His support is headed by Katherine Adams as the girl and by Harry Von Meter and Brinsley Shaw in other prominent roles.

"A Rogue's Romance" was produced under the direction of James Young who also wrote the scenario from the Van Loan story. Other pictures on the ——— theatre's bill for the same dates are ———————.

THE STORY

Monsieur Picard, Paris society crook, returns from the war with the Croix de Guerre, but goes back to his old pastime of tricking the law. During one of his escapes from the prefect of police he is assisted by Mme. Deprenay, a young lady of wealth and position. His bold, romantic appearance appeals to her but when later she learns his real identity she writes him regarding her disappointment. But Picard is not one to stop at such a little turn down when in love. He meets Mme. Deprenay again at a reception when he is masking under one of his aliases, and proves to her that he has turned straight since meeting her. More, he also proves that Leon Voliere, who courts her, is a crook and a swindler.

Later Picard presents himself to the prefect of police with credentials from Scotland Yard. He sets about running down Voliere and eventually exposes his whole swindle game to the great satisfaction of the prefect who is to get the credit. But it is a very surprised prefect who finds himself locked in the room with the swindlers by the representatives of Scotland Yard whose parting words give the information that he is M. Picard.

The prefect makes one more attempt to capture the elusive rogue but this time he is warned by Mme. Deprenay. Through her services he escapes from the police and before the excited gendarmes and their superior know what has happened Picard and Mme. Deprenay have left Paris for another city where the rogue's reputation is not so well known.

CATCH LINES

He wore the Croix de Guerre yet was constantly hunted by the police of Paris! He had saved the city thousands of francs, yet the Prefect would cast him in jail! SUGGESTIONS

The best line to play on in this picture is the one developed in the program reader elsewhere on this page. The main fact is that the hero, a war honor man, is hunted down by the police. This will lend a mystery touch to your advertising and will help matters along considerably. Aside from this it should be announced that the picture is a romantic drama with the star's name played up according to his popularity. He has a certain following in this type of picture so be sure to bring out the fact that the story possesses a real romance.

What benefit you find in the names of the author and director will depend entirely on the other pictures of theirs that you have played. They have done some very good work, both of them, and if you believe your patrons remember them, use their names by all means.

"WORDS AND MUSIC BY"

is the title. You can write a lot of clever copy around it in the shape of catch lines and leaders. The words and music by Albert Ray and Elinor Fair are given expression before a critical New York audience. You might bring out that it is suggestive of small town talent that eventually becomes big town talent before the concluding scene is reached. Emphasize the fact that the hero comes to New York and has his opera stolen but that he recovers it in time to make fame and fortune for himself as well as for his sweetheart. You can work out some clever advertising copy with the title by having your artist dash off a few bars of music in a black and white effect with the pictures of the stars in a conspicuous place. And to excite curiosity you might play up a bar of some famous old tune in your paper asking the readers to guess the names of the author and composer. The piece lends itself well to advertising any way you look at it.

"HIS DEBT"—ROBERTSON-COLE

"HIS DEBT," the latest picture in which Sessue Hayakawa appears, is piloted through an interesting series of situations to a dramatic climax, the strength of which makes the picture well worth while. The whole building of the picture contributes to the strength and sympathy of the star's character, and his deep emotions during the scenes of the denouement score effectively.

Nor is Hayakawa a star who deprives members of his supporting cast their opportunities for prominent playing. In "His Debt" both Jane Novak, his leading woman, and Francis MacDonald, the weakling native, have plenty of chances to register forceful points, and they make good use of these opportunities.

William Worthington in his direction has brought out the strength of the picture through a series of good lighting effects, while the settings are always appropriate.

If exhibitors have found that Hayakawa pictures sell well there is no reason in the world why "His Debt" will not take its place with the most successful of his series.—Length, 5 reels.—Released in May through Exhibitors' Mutual Exchange.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "His Debt." This presents a striking story centering around a Japanese gambler whose sense of honor comes above all else. He is a gambler who is known for his squareness and fairness and prides himself in enjoying the confidence of the best men of the city. Then into his life comes an American girl whom he learns to love with all his heart and soul. She, however, cannot return his affections mainly because they lie with another and again because there is that stern barrier of blood between them.

But the Japanese remains firm in his love only to discover later to his horror that the girl is engaged to a man who attempted to take his life! Here indeed is a powerful situation, particularly when it is considered that the Japanese holds the fate of the other man in the hollow of his hand. How he decides marks a truly exciting climax, a climax pictured with due regard to its dramatic value. In fact "His Debt" is filled with dramatic moments from first to last. Mr. Hayakawa and his supporting players taking full advantage of them. This support is headed by Jane Novak as the girl and by Francis MacDonald as the American. The picture was produced under the direction of William Worthington, whose work on previous pictures in which the Japanese star has appeared has attracted such favorable comment.

PROGRAM READER

Fate had willed that this man who had attempted his life should fall completely in his power. To Goro Moriyama, the Japanese gambler, this meant one thing. Revenge, wholehearted revenge. Even the police did not know that Blair Whitcomb was the man who had so foully stolen upon him in the dark and fired point-blank at him. He was in his power and there was no chance of his escape. And Moriyama prided himself on always paying his debts. But there was another debt he wished to pay and that was a debt to Gloria Manning, the nurse, who by her careful watching and inexhaustible patience had saved him from the very jaws of death. And then he discovered that Gloria was engaged to Blair! The woman he loved himself, loved with his whole heart and soul, engaged to the man who attempted his life! And his debts must be paid! How did Moriyama choose? What feeling guided his course, love or revenge? The answer is to be seen in "His Debt," a dramatic photoplay starring the noted Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, which comes to this theatre shortly.

SUGGESTIONS

The central situation of this photoplay which is dramatically builded up to throughout its length is the one to accentuate in your advertising. This situation centers about the star's character who holds the fates of two lovers in his hands. You will find this situation played up in some of the catch lines and in the program reader that are printed elsewhere on this page. If you handle it appropriately you should have no trouble in building up good, strong, dramatic copy.

You know how far to go with the star's name and his acting ability. Beyond a doubt he has few superiors in the histrionic line on the screen today. You can use superlatives in describing his talent. His name has come to mean much in this line so display it liberally, particularly if other of his pictures have gone over well at your house.

Be careful about comparing the honor of this particular Jap in the story with the contemptible character of the particular American in the story. This offers plenty of chances to go wrong and to offend. Put the soft pedal on it, or, better yet, don't mention anything about the honor stuff at all, that is comparatively.

THE STORY

Goro Moriyama runs a gambling house but runs it on the square. His patrons, some of the best men in the city, know him for his honesty and fairness. Blair Whitcomb is a young society man who loses heavily at Moriyama's and, at length, accuses him of playing a crooked game. To uphold his honor Moriyama offers to bet his entire establishment against Blair's ten thousand dollar check on the turn of a card. The Japanese wins. That night, frenzied, Blair attempts Moriyama's life and succeeds in severely wounding him. It is through the gentle services of Gloria Manning, society girl and nurse, that Moriyama recovers. He knows his asailant and is astounded to hear that Gloria is engaged to him for he himself loves Gloria with a holy love.

It is Moriyama's boast that he always repays his debts—in full, and so at length he sends for Blair to come to him. Not realizing that Moriyama is aware of the fact that he attempted his life, Blair comes prepared to make good his ten thousand dollar check, which was bad. But Moriyama wants more than this—and sends for the police. In the meantime Gloria has found out that Blair has gone to Moriyama's house and fears for his safety inasmuch as the Japanese has been ominous when she has seen him.

So she makes all haste to the house and there discovers Blair a captive. She pleads with Moriyama, saying that she loves Blair even though he was a scoundrel and that she can never love him (Moriyama) because of the barrier of race. And so Moriyama considers his debt to Gloria greater than that he owes Blair. He sends the police away and silently watches the lovers depart.

"THE WOMAN NEXT DOOR"—PARAMOUNT

Ethel Clayton Has an Excellent Number in Her Latest Picture

PARAMOUNT showed good taste when it took Carolyn Wells' story, "Vicky Van," for screen representation. Scenarioized by Marion Fairfax, and renamed "The Woman Next Door" for dramatic purposes, the subject makes an ideal one for Ethel Clayton. It is a tale of an unhappy wife, and naturally it is developed seriously. Yet in the forepart of the story there is a delicate vein of humor that constantly comes to the surface and gives it the proper balance.

The subject is defined as a thing of mystery, which is not exactly correct, because the line of action is discernible throughout. Yet it never becomes obvious, so carefully has Director Vignola framed his situations. Indeed he has gotten the most from every scene, and each one follows the other in a progressive manner. The result is "The Woman Next Door" unfolds a deal of cumulative interest.

Miss Clayton marries into a proud and haughty family and she is so restricted that she builds a secret door in the adjoining house. Thus she finds freedom of expression as Victoria Van Allen, or Vicky Van. When her husband penetrates her disguise, he attacks her, but the maid comes to the rescue and kills him. The latter scenes are charged with suspense, and one breathes easily again to find the murder cleared up and the bride happy.

Rather an improbable story, isn't it? Still its improbabilities are not realized until it is over. Miss Clayton is always in the picture as the restricted wife. Her earnestness and appeal are ever speaking in eloquent language. Capable assistance is given by Emory Johnson, Noah Berry, and Jane Wolfe. "The Woman Next Door" is one of the star's best pictures, and she has had many good ones.—5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

Ruth Endicott had been reared in complete ignorance of what life really was. She knew none of its wonderful joys or its sorrows and before she was old enough to become on good terms with her own mind she was married to Randolph Schuyler, a man quite old enough to be her father. After a month in New York with him she realizes the big mistake she made and casts about for some means of finding happiness in life. When she receives a legacy she keeps it secret from her husband and rents the house next to his. She gains admittance through a secret door and there entertains a large set of Bohemian friends under the name of Vicky Van. But it was not long before Randolph discovered all this—he protested; there was a murder—and then—. The conclusion of this tale is pictured in the vivid picture drama, "The Woman Next Door," which will come to this theatre shortly. Ethel Clayton is the star of the production and it was adapted from Carolyn Wells's novel, "Vicky Van." Don't fail to see it—it's a real treat.

PRESS NOTICE

Ethel Clayton, the beautiful Paramount star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture entitled "The Woman Next Door," an adaptation from Carolyn Wells's novel, "Vicky Van." This is the strange and dramatic tale of a young woman who married a man old enough to be her father before knowing the dictates of her own heart. After a month of married life she discovers the great mistake she made and casts about for some means of deriving what happiness she can from life. The scheme she hits upon is one of amazing ingenuity and although it leads to consequences of a most serious nature, the turmoil is cleared before the final fadeout and Vicky has found happiness with the man she really loves.

Miss Clayton's sincere emotional work shows to splendid advantage throughout the many difficult scenes of "The Woman Next Door." She is an actress whose work is always effective and the role awarded her here brings out her varied capabilities to their fullest extent. In the role of the ancient husband appears Noah Beery, one of the chief character players of the Lasky stock company. He plays the part with a rare show of ability. Emory Johnson has the role of the hero while a supporting cast embracing several other players of ability appears.

The adaptation from the novel was made by Marion Fairfax, herself a photoplay author of no mean ability. Robert G. Vignola, remembered for his fine work on many of the Pauline Frederick pictures, was in charge of production on "The Woman Next Door."

THE STORY

Ruth Endicott has been reared in complete ignorance of the seriousness of marriage and weds Randolph Schuyler, who is old enough to be her father. They start to New York in his motor, which breaks down. While he is seeking a garage Chester Calhoun sees the young wife seated with her maid, and fixes up the car. A month in New York disillusions Ruth. She is a prisoner in her own home. Then she gets a legacy of fifty thousand pounds from India and keeps it a secret. She rents the adjoining house, has a secret door cut through and disguising herself with a black wig, inhabits the new home as Victoria Van Allen, or "Vicky Van," her maid appearing as a French servant. She entertains a Bohemian set in a Bohemian way.

Schuyler learns of the famous "Vicky Van." He visits the place, but a scar on the shoulder of the hostess gives away the scheme. Meanwhile, Chester has recognized in "Vicky" the girl of the auto. The husband snatches off his wife's wig and denounces her, grasping her by the throat. A few minutes later he is found dead. Detective Stone arrives and learns of the duality of the wife and "Vicky." She is about to be accused of the murder, when the maid confesses that she killed him to save her mistress. The maid is arrested but it is understood that she cannot be convicted. Then Ruth and Chester find their happiness.

CATCH LINES

The dramatic tale of a beautiful woman who led a dual existence—by day she was the wife of staid old Schuyler—by night the center of an admiring throng of Bohemians! But her husband found out! See "The Woman Next Door."

She fooled the whole city but could not fool her husband—see "The Woman Next Door."

remember it when it comes to your screen. Bring out that it is a delightful presentation of small town life with the leading character a minister. Play up that a member of his congregation is one of those rich men who finds it hard to enter the eye of a needle in the march toward Heaven until he is purged of his sins. His daughter and the minister furnish the romance and you can see that it is full of conflict because of her relations. Emphasize the human note. Enlist the clergy in your town and the school board. The minister starts a boys' club and the success that crowns his efforts will be appreciated by all people who have the boys of the community at heart. Feature the star. He has become immensely popular, and his stories have been so good that picturegoers are assured of fine entertainment whenever they appear. Write your advertising around the fact that "The Lion's Den" is a Post story that is full of sentiment and romance. You can't go too strong in your exploitation.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 9, 1919.

DAUGHTER OF MINE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY (MAR. 30) ....MAY 17
"Human interest story that hits the mark."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Ordinary feature. Nearly as bad as 'Day Dreams.' With the same star. They like Madge Kennedy here but NOT in the kind of stuff Goldwyn is handing out lately. Poor business." "A good picture if audience is in the right mood to enjoy it. Opened big business but fell down second day." "Not up to Goldwyn standard. Very ordinary." "My, but this was awful! Our patrons said so and we say so." "This picture did not draw well and it's no wonder. Madge Kennedy deserves a better fate."

DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL, THE (UNIVERSAL) MAE MURRAY (APR. 27) ....MAY 3
"A highly pleasing comedy with Mae Murray starred."—M. P. News.

DESTINY (JEWEL-UNIVERSAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS (MAY 25) ....MAY 24
"Big in every sense of the word; Frenzied finance the theme."—M. P. News.

END OF THE GAME, THE (HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN (MAR. 23)........MAR. 29
"Too much footage in this Western of '49 days."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was the worst of any of the late Kerrigan pictures. Average to poor business."

ETERNAL MAGDALENE, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST (APR. 20) ....MAY 3
"Long heralded picture largely an allegory."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to big business in spite of heavy rain early in afternoon. People satisfied."

BROKEN BLOSSOMS—GRIFFITH

Simplex

THOSE OF YOU WHO WERE PRESENT AT THE PREMIER PERFORMANCE OF D. W. GRIFFITH'S LATEST TRIUMPH, "BROKEN BLOSSOMS," AT THE COHAN THEATRE, NEW YORK —MARVELLED AT THE PHOTOGRAPHY—THE DETAIL—THE ATMOSPHERE—ALL OF WHICH BESPOKE A SPLENDID TRIBUTE TO THE MASTER MIND OF GRIFFITH

AND YOU HARKED BACK TO HIS OTHER TRIUMPHS

HIS UNFORGETTABLE DRAMATIC STORY OF THE SOUTH—"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" IN WHICH SIMPLEX WAS USED THROUGHOUT—HIS MIGHTY-GLORIOUS SPECTACLE "INTOLERANCE"—WHERE SIMPLEX WAS ALSO USED EXCLUSIVELY—HIS STIRRING WORLD-WAR MASTERPIECE "HEARTS OF THE WORLD"—WHERE SIMPLEX AGAIN WAS CHOSEN

AND NOW—IN HIS LATEST EFFORT—GRIFFITH AGAIN CHOOSES SIMPLEX IN ORDER THAT THE THOUSANDS COMPRISING HIS AUDIENCES MAY SEE "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" AS THE GENIUS OF GRIFFITH CONCEIVED IT.

AND THROUGH THE ENTIRE GRIFFITH REPERTORY SEASON AT THE COHAN THEATRE SIMPLEX WILL BE USED.

DOES GRIFFITH'S JUDGMENT MEAN ANYTHING TO YOU?

If you hear that we have engaged the four great screen artists and intend to astonish the world with feature productions, blame old Dame Rumor.

But, when you hear—and you will, soon—that we are ready to regularly furnish the exhibitor with several single-reel attractions of real merit, get busy and book the entire series.

Our productions will be worthy of the Rothacker hall-mark—the prints will show the quality which characterizes First National attractions.

By the way, Mr. Charles Chaplin will soon delight you in a new comedy.—Harry Garson's "The Unpardonable Sin" is a box office tonic, Miss Anita Stewart in "Mary Regan" is more attractive than ever, and the following worth-while features are available at First National Exchanges:

Whom The Gods Would Destroy

A Midnight Romance	Virtuous Wives
Shoulder Arms	A Dog's Life
Tarzan of the Apes	Romance of Tarzan
Panther Woman	The Sign Invisible

DOMINATES THE FIELD

LIBRARY JUN 1919 PERIODICAL DIVISION

1. No producing company can keep constantly adding to the list of exhibitors it serves without some reason.

2. Famous Players-Lasky constantly is building bigger business for exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures and is adding daily to the number of exhibitors it serves.

3. There's a reason. This is it:
The most carefully made productions, fashioned by the finest producing genius of the screen, the most popular plays, stories and original pictures, nationally advertised and furnished to the exhibitor with all the exploitation aid a corps of experts can devise—that's Famous Players-Lasky.

A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Jesse L. Lasky presents,

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me"

A Wire from Newman

"'THE Woman Thou Gavest Me' broke all previous house records at the Royal Theatre by $1,000. Comments from patrons, 100 per cent. good. Compelled to hold picture over for second week at Regent Theatre. Undoubtedly the most pleasing and best directed dramatic picture we have ever had to date. Forced to run extra shows every day to accommodate crowds. Give us more pictures like 'The Woman Thou Gavest Me.'"

A Paramount-Artcraft Special

She Got 'Em

"HATS off, folks, and make way for the queen of celluloid comedy." "Easily one of the best bits of amusement on Broadway." "Twice as funny as any other comedienne." "Most laughable." "Bubbles over with clean fun." "Hilarious reels of a very joyful farce." "One of her very best vehicles." "No escaping the humorous appeal of this delightful little actress."

Variety, the New York American, The Tribune, The Sun, The Trade Review, The Globe, The Telegraph, Wid's, The Evening Mail—every critic of the screen has hailed "I'll Get Him Yet" as the best Dorothy Gish picture to date.

That should mean a longer run for you,

SHE wallowed in wealth. He loathed the touch of a girl's money.

Then she got busy! She had to run away with her father's whole railway—cars, motors, tracks and everything—to do it but, by Cracky—!

You ought to see Dorothy Gish in this great story of the girl who ran a railway.

"Gwan! I'll Run This Road!"

SHE wouldn't be the president of that railroad in name only! Not she! As long as her father wanted her to assume the responsibility for his taxes by taking over his standard-gauge, four-track, warranted-in-first-class condition railroad—

She'd be THE boss too! Nope! She's not a suffragette! Just a little girl with grown-up ideas.

Better than she was in "Battling Jane," "Boots" and "Peppy Polly" That's saying SOMETHING!

The Vision

YOU know Charles Ray and his "Greased Lightning," "The Girl Dodger," "String Beans"?

Were they successful? Did your audiences like them? Ninety-nine per cent of exhibitors and audiences did like them—very much.

"The Busher" will beat them all.

HERE'S a case where one dollar spent earns big returns.

Bill-board advertising for motion picture theatres is more effective than ever.

The public is bill-board trained. They have got the read-the-bill-board-habit. For amusement advertising the bill-board is an essential today in most communities.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is giving much thought and time and money to the production of people-pulling posters for advertising Paramount and Artcraft pictures.

The twenty-four sheets are now sold for one dollar, a reduction in price on a raise in quality.

The modern, business-building exhibitor cannot afford to overlook the big value in Paramount and Artcraft

Over twelve hundred thinking exhibitors and state rights buyers have "addressed Box 42, all trade papers"

we thank them again for assisting us in selecting the best title for a notable photoplay, from among the five suggested. By a tremendous majority they have chosen one of the strongest and most appealing titles ever selected for any attraction.

"THE SOLITARY SIN"

"'The Solitary Sin'' portrays vividly—forcefully—dramatically—one of the greatest social problems that has ever confronted the human race.

It is splendidly produced—with a sterling cast, including

GREAT AUTHORS' PICTURES

INC.

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S splendid vision and imagination, that, months ago, led him to organize Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., were the first definite moves to bring the greatest of American writers into the motion picture industry — contributing not only their famous stories, but taking a personal hand in the actual production of them as well.

Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., is the other revolutionary production unit promised to the exhibitors of America by W. W. Hodkinson in the trade press announcements of his company two months ago.

Simultaneously W. W. Hodkinson has been gathering around him for distribution through his national organization not only Mr. Hampton's powerful Great Authors' alliance, but other units in which the responsibility for big pictures is going to be placed definitely upon the authors themselves.

So conclusively big are the results that have been achieved by Mr. Hampton with his first Great Authors' production, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," and with Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," the first of his Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., productions, that already other companies with authors of lesser importance and popularity are following Benjamin B. Hampton and W. W. Hodkinson with prospectuses laying emphasis upon the importance of famous writers.

For more than a year W. W. Hodkinson and the fine associates whose producing ideals are in harmony with his own have foreseen the great evolution that has now made big stories the prevailing demand of the exhibitors of the nation, and they are ready with completed productions to supply this demand now instead of at some time in the future.

—AND AGAIN HODKINSON IS LEADING

The contracts of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., call for the biggest and most famous literary successes of a group of authors whose popularity is without a parallel and a definite part of our agreements is the personal participation of the authors themselves in co-operation with Mr. Hampton in the production, titling, editing and final preparation of their challenging works. The Great Authors' initially-announced productions are those of:

Stewart Edward White	Emerson Hough
Winston Churchill	Irving Bacheller

Announcement by the producers has been made of "The Leopard Woman," "The Riverman," "The Rules of the Game," by Mr. White; "54-40 or Fight" and "The Mississippi Bubble," by Mr. Hough; "The Dwelling Place of Light" and "The Inside of the Cup," by Mr. Churchill and "Keeping Up with Lizzie," by Mr. Bacheller.

ZANE GREY PICTURES, Inc.

Mr. Benjamin B. Hampton's and Mr. Eltinge F. Warner's other organization controlling the stories of this world-wide favorite, of whose book 2,000,000 copies will be sold this year in reprint editions alone, has completed the production of "Desert Gold," an epic of the Great Southwest.

In these two units alone, Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., and Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has more really commanding productions, made under the best selective conditions for the exhibitors of the country, than will be available to you elsewhere in the industry.

Of added importance is the fact that you will not have to wait for months to be told about them—already we are prepared to begin furnishing them for release throughout what is certain to be the most prosperous summer you have ever known.

MORE UNITS OF POWERFUL AUTHORS

In keeping with these producing elements that have placed their distribution in the hands of W. W. Hodkinson, there are still other powerful author units whose productions we control and will offer to the exhibitors of America.

Harry Raver, a producer of fine ideals and further equipped with the capacities of a splendid showman, is producing for Hodkinson distribution with his Four-Star organization the plays and novels of

AUGUSTUS THOMAS

America's foremost dramatist and former President of The Authors' League of America. The powers of this brilliant author are further intensified by the inclusion in the Four-Star elements of production of the abilities of Mr. Raver as the Producer, Mr. Thomas as the Author, Miss Leah Baird as the Star and the genius of Mr. George Irving as the Director.

This organization is not a prospectus, but an organization of achieved productions with the celebrated stage success, “As A Man Thinks,” already released for the screen and “The Volcano ’ completed and ready to be scheduled for release.

Still Another Unit

is the Sunset Pictures Corporation, starring Mr. House Peters, a long established favorite, in stories of recognized popularity with scenarios and all production details laid down under the skilled attention of the W. W. Hodkinson literary department. The first big author production of this Hodkinson unit is “You Never Know Your Luck” by

SIR GILBERT PARKER

This announcement of the scope of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's preparations for the current summer and the year ahead reveal our immediate readiness to provide the big first-run theatres of the nation with productions in keeping with the importance of the theatres seeking them, and also will indicate to exhibitors that they are in no danger of being squeezed by the contending elements seeking to control the motion picture industry on the basis of selfishness instead of merit.

in

is a luxurious, colorful, powerful, emotional drama with its scenes shifting from Paris to mysterious Cairo.

It is a big special production on its exclusive picturization values, but made still bigger to exhibitors and the public because of the work of these remarkable screen craftsmen:

J. PARKER READ, Jr.: The first wonderful production of a man who henceforth will be a new factor to be reckoned with in the field of quality pictures.

ALLAN DWAN: One of the few very great directors in the industry. "Sahara" is the greatest and ablest picture he ever supervised.

C. GARDNER SULLIVAN: The foremost author of the screen. The master scenarist. The man whose stories make stars. "Sahara" is his finest story.

LOUISE GLAUM: When you see her in "Sahara" you will say: "I always felt she was the screen's greatest emotional actress; now I know it."

DR. HUGO RIESENFELD, the famous managing director-composer of the Rivoli and Rialto, has prepared the musical score for "Sahara." It's wonderful.

ADVERTISING AND EXPLOITATION: There has been provided for "Sahara" the most unusual advertising material available on any picture in a year.

Prints have been shipped to the Hodkinson organization in the thirty Pathe American offices. We cannot quote prices for first runs from New York despite the wires received from exhibitors in many cities. Please see our Hodkinson men and, above all, see "Sahara" itself.

ALBERT E. SMITH
GLADYS LESLIE in
"TOO MANY CROOKS"
By E. J. RATH
Adapted from the Magazine Story Published in the All-Story Weekly
A VITAGRAPH FEATURE
Directed by RALPH INCE

Play Up the "Baby Vamp" Stuff In This One

"VAMPS"—the old-line, plain-vamping "vamps"—are nothing new nowadays. But this is an age of invention, and E. J. Rath has invented a new kind of "vamp" in "Too Many Crooks." It is a new and different "baby vamp" that we see in the portrayal of Gladys Leslie, who uses her youthful and vivacious personality to perfect advantage in this new type of characterization which taxes all of her delightful versatility. The story caused a sensation when published in the All-Story Magazine.

Miss Leslie appears as "Boston Fanny," one of the guests at the party given by Charlotte Browning, a society girl who decides to write a real crook play, and, accordingly, invites real crooks to her house party that she may study them at close range.

She wants her guests to appear natural—and the guests, aces in the respective if not respectable branches of their "profession," are led to believe that Charlotte and her wealthy father are really the master crooks of the universe. Accordingly, the light-fingered gentry "work fast" at the house party, not only for material gain, but in feverish efforts to display their professional skill. The result is that the exclusive suburb where the Brownings live is the scene of a series of events positively shocking to its conservative residents. Charlotte would even forsake her idea of writing a crook play if only she could send them all away and forget. But things have gone too far. "Boston Fanny," in particular, keeps things humming. And just when events are coming so thick and fast that they simply pile up, one Bindwell Wright, believed to be a master crook, sets things to rights. It develops, too, that he isn't a master crook at all, but a young lawyer, although he does steal Charlotte's heart. But he loses his own, so everything comes out even.

Let your audience know the names of the full cast in this picture. Don't just call it an "all-star cast." It is all of that, but give the names. They are known, and they are favorites. Get the attention of the magazine readers by advertising the name of the writer. And, of course, you know the value of advertising Ralph Ince as the director.

All of these points are certainly going to help get them in, and the story itself—the action, the thrills, the love interest, the unexpected climaxes of punch and power, are going to hold them after they're in and advertise the picture outside. That's why you simply can't fail to benefit big by doubling your booking.

GLADYS LESLIE APPEARS AS A LOVABLE LITTLE "BABY VAMP"

HERE'S a picture that will keep your patrons on the fence between being amused and being thrilled. For awhile, they won't know whether to hold their breath, or use it for perfectly good laughter.

Human nature demands something new. If you could give your patrons something new every day, you'd be satisfied, wouldn't you? And you can give them something new with this one.

Look over this supporting cast:

Jean Paige, Huntley Gordon, Anders Randolf, James Dent, Cecil Chichester, T. J. McGrane, George O'Donnell and other supporting players who have followings equal to that of many stars.

And it's directed by no less a master of production detail than RALPH INCE.

Better double your booking on it.

At left, Gladys Leslie, as "Boston Fanny," steps in between the rough and smooth types of crooks at her house-party; centre, a flash of love interest, of which there's a-plenty; at right, a thrill-laugh-surprise scene. All from Vitagraph's new feature, "Too Many Crooks."

REX BEACH'S

Famous Story of Thrills and Mystery

Rex Beach Personally Brings His Millions of Readers to Your Theatre

You know the power of Rex Beach's great picture "The Brand." You know its grip upon your audiences.

His newest production, "The Crimson Gardenia," is a melodrama of speed and mystery and punch built on the same high plane of perfection and crowded with even greater drawing power.

The cumulative force and popularity of the Rex Beach pictures is due to just one fact: Mr. Beach makes himself personally responsible for every step in the making of these productions, from continuity to editing.

Rex Beach is the only great writer thus devoting his talents consistently to the screen.

That is why Mr. Beach's fictional genius is as evident on the screen as in his books.

That is why the army of Beach readers comes back time after time, pleased and satisfied.

That is why "The Crimson Gardenia" stands out as the swiftest and most thrilling mystery melodrama of the year.

In every theatre where Bennison is shown, his popularity with women—the women who make matinee audiences and "pick the play" in the evening—has outdistanced that of any male star this season.

Strength and kindliness, good nature and deep abiding power, the things women bank on, are all there in his smile and his stride and his splendid physique.

NEW YORK May 23, 1919.

Mr. R. H. Clark,

501 Fifth Ave.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Clark:-

After reading the box office reports from twenty-five of the Loew Theatres in New York City which have played the First National attraction, "Auction of Souls", I feel that it is only fair to tell you that this production, without a single exception, is the biggest business getter that has ever played our theatres.

We have shown several really big specials, but "Auction of Souls" is the greatest of them all, as a production, as a story, for its phenomenal appeal, and, of equal importance, as a box office energizer.

Yours very truly,
Marcus Loew

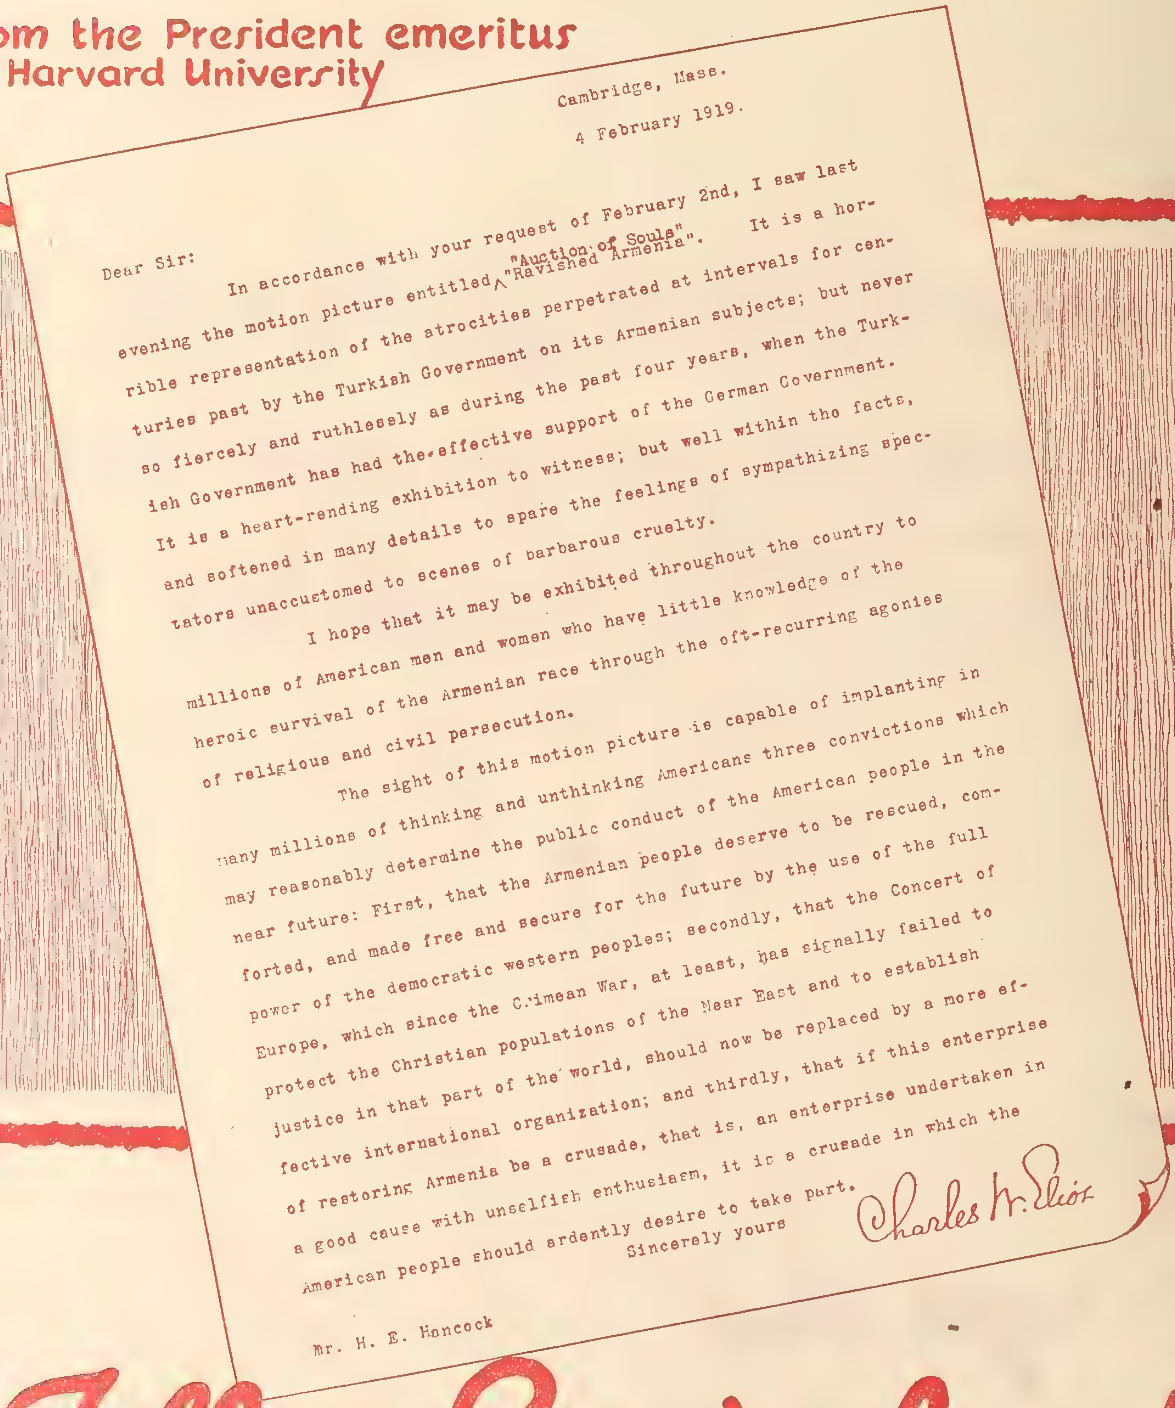
Some exhibitors thought

but if you're a Christian or a Jew or just a plain American

From the President emeritus of Harvard University



Cambridge, Mass.
4 February 1919.

Dear Sir:

In accordance with your request of February 2nd, I saw last evening the motion picture entitled "Auction of Souls" "Ravished Armenia". It is a horrible representation of the atrocities perpetrated at intervals for centuries past by the Turkish Government on its Armenian subjects; but never so fiercely and ruthlessly as during the past four years, when the Turkish Government has had the effective support of the German Government. It is a heart-rending exhibition to witness; but well within the facts, and softened in many details to spare the feelings of sympathizing spectators unaccustomed to scenes of barbarous cruelty.

I hope that it may be exhibited throughout the country to millions of American men and women who have little knowledge of the heroic survival of the Armenian race through the oft-recurring agonies of religious and civil persecution.

The sight of this motion picture is capable of implanting in many millions of thinking and unthinking Americans three convictions which may reasonably determine the public conduct of the American people in the near future: First, that the Armenian people deserve to be rescued, comforted, and made free and secure for the future by the use of the full power of the democratic western peoples; secondly, that the Concert of Europe, which since the Crimean War, at least, has signally failed to protect the Christian populations of the Near East and to establish justice in that part of the world, should now be replaced by a more effective international organization; and thirdly, that if this enterprise of restoring Armenia be a crusade, that is, an enterprise undertaken in a good cause with unselfish enthusiasm, it is a crusade in which the American people should ardently desire to take part.

Sincerely yours
Charles W. Eliot

Gentlemen:

We wish to advise you that the majority comment on your photoplay "Auction of Souls" From Ravished Armenia

reviewed by The National Board of Review on January 25, 1919 was as follows.

Entertainment Value Impressive. Educational Value Unusual.

Artistic Value. Dramatic interest of story Gripping. Coherence of narrative Convincing. Acting Inspiring. Photography Excellent

Technical handling Good. Costuming (if period production) Sincere. Atmospheric quality—Scenic setting Life like

Historical value (if period production) Admirable

Moral Effect Elevating

General Comment A frank straight-forward exposition of sufferings of Armenia which makes a sincere and powerful appeal to every drop of red blood in America's manhood and womanhood.

THE FUNCTIONS OF MOTION PICTURE REVIEW.

The critics of the motion picture advise regarding morally objectionable elements before they are presented to the public. They bring to the picture the judgment of the typical audience. They appreciate the necessity of liberty of speech and liberty of creation. Under no circumstances must these be curtailed. The critics must give full liberty to ideas presented through the drama, matters of propaganda, historic interpretation, tragedy, comedy, current events, etc. At the same time society, which is being amused, entertained or inspired, must be given the right to register ethical convictions. The National Board of Review through its members aims to perform this service for society with broad-mindedness, liberality and even-handed justice. It avoids enforcing personal opinions. It does not believe in coercion. It searches diligently for fundamental convictions and renders decisions which it is convinced will have broad public support. Though it is a voluntary extra-legal body having no legal power resident in itself, its decisions become effective through the crystallization of public opinion regarding the treatment of the subjects represented, and which it seeks to gauge and reflect through the cooperation of official and non-official correspondents of the National Board of Review in all parts of the country.

NOTE:

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE—This term applies to all that which is entertaining or interest-holding.

EDUCATIONAL VALUE—This term applies to pictures that are instructive in science, industry, travel, and the presentation and interpretation of great classics, or that are illustrative of customs of people and ways of living of different classes of society past and present

MORAL EFFECT—This applies to the moral effect of the picture either consciously or unconsciously produced

ARTISTIC VALUE—This term is interpreted broadly to include the acting, the drama itself, the stage setting, artistic out-door scenes and scenery, the appropriateness of the production to the story treated, the costuming, and t absence of incongruous elements.

The Man Who Turned White

THIS is a production people will talk about and bring others into your theatre to see.

First runs have been contracted for in every important center. Some exhibitors are already asking for increased bookings, others for repeat dates. They have screened the picture—they know. "The Man Who Turned White" is as big as anything put out this year.

D. W. GRIFFITH

More enduring than tablets of bronze is the hold that these master-artists have on the minds and affections of the millions. To them has come the supreme tribute of the seekers of happiness and the better things of life—men, women and children alike—who have enshrined them in their hearts for all time.

And that they may give to the full as their art grows in its maturing richness, they have dedicated themselves to making the motion picture screen free—an unfettered medium for all that is best in life's play hours.

To make the pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith available to the entire film world without the restrictions and obligations and limitations of the program and star series systems of film rental, United Artists Corporation has been created.

Each production—as nearly perfect as human skill and genius and art can make it—will be rented on its own individual merits.

United Artists Corporation thus guarantees to Exhibitors their full freedom in the booking and exploiting of the screen's supreme productions. It gives to them the opportunity to reap the full benefits of their own ability as showmen.

By JOSEPH FRANKLIN POLAND

Directed by EMMET J. FLYNN

What's that? A bachelor's wife? Yes, just that. The picture is even more enticing than the title. It sets 'em all to talking the minute you announce its coming.

This is one of Mary Miles Minter's best.

Think of the way such a picture and such a title will lend themselves to an advertising splurge for YOUR theatre. Here's a bet that's too good to overlook. Hop to it now. See the American Film Company representative at your nearest Pathé Exchange today.

A Powerful Drama About Women

By man-made laws of tradition evolved centuries of sex-bound women emeshed in a slavery of sex. The bond by which man—in his natural desire for a mate—has held her, cheating himself of the SUPER-WOMAN.

The Other Man's Wife

is one of the most pretentious productions of the present theatrical season.

By means of a gripping drama with intensely interesting situations and a powerful ending, a big subject is presented in an extremely sensational manner.

If you cater to high-class audiences, do not fail to arrange play-dates for this exceptional feature immediately.

A VIVID AND VIRILE DRAMA

PRODUCED BY
EDGAR LEWIS "THE BRET HARTE OF MOTION PICTURES" WHO PICTURED "THE BARRIER" "THE NIGGER" THE CRISIS AND "THE BONDMAN"

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY:-

New York Telegraph:—
"Love And The Law," picturized from William Hamilton Osborne's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Troop Train," is a play that gets your American up. That's a good sort of play wherever you find it.

Chicago Evening Post:—
"Love And The Law" is a drama that hits the high spots of dramatic action. The play is a symphony in Simon pure Americanism. There are some foreigners in it, but they don't count.

St. Paul Pioneer Press:—
"Love And The Law" has a grip on the emotions from the first scene to the finale. It is a corking story and one that is always certain of immediate approval among red-blooded Americans.

Very sincerely,

Marcus Loew

"TWILIGHT" WAS WRITTEN BY TWO GREAT AUTHORS, LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE AND VINGIE E. ROE

DIRECTED BY J. SEARLE DAWLEY

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY:-

In "Twilight" Doris Kenyon shows emotional power and acting ability of real strength.—Edward Weitzel in Moving Picture World.

"Twilight" takes rank as a superior attraction, largely attributable to artistry in production and splendid acting.—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

"Twilight" is both pretty and dramatic, an artistic and satisfying production filmed with more than usual care. The forest fire scene is a masterpiece of staging.—Agnes Smith in the Morning Telegraph.

"Twilight" is a delightful offering, thrilling as well as inspiring. You can safely call Doris Kenyon the most beautiful girl on the screen.—P. S. Harrison in Motion Picture News.

ATTENTION!

The MacManus Corporation Will Parade Soon the Greatest, Biggest, Most Spectacular Feature Ever Marshalled in the Ranks of Real Photo-Plays.

Its story is one with such an intense objective that one look will convince you of its invincibility from attack.

It has no fissure, no break, no weak spot; it is invulnerable.

It belongs to the people of every nationality.

It is a GALVANIC FEATURE that consistently shows the Melting Pot of Humanity seething, cooling off, and drawn off with its product of great-hearted men. It is a compelling picturization of voltaic action.

So unusual, SO SENSATIONALLY DIFFERENT from any feature ever presented to the public, it will vitalize into action the most indifferent or blasé amusement seeker in the world.

An all-star cast of world famous characters of the most picturesque incident of recent times appear in an authentic version of their history-making achievement.

In calling ATTENTION to this, its first Big Production, the MacManus Corporation promises all a real clean up.

The proving ground—2 West 47th Street.

"Not worthy of a moment's sorrow!"

That's what "society" said of the one they condemned. Yet the woman whom their leader threatened to publicly disgrace, compromised herself that happiness should exist for the one who sought to disgrace her.

Such is the valor of mother-love. An appeal to heart interest in the screen classic—

"WHEN BEARCAT WENT DRY"

Is a story of "Bearcat" Stacy, one of the powerful characters of the Cumberland Mountains.

He hates men, despises women, is an illicit distiller, fears nothing. The revenue officer is his eternal enemy.

Used to sleeping in the room with the remainder of his family. He neither reads nor writes.

"Bearcat" knows not the pangs of disappointment, the joys of living, the ecstacy of love. He is akin unto the beasts of the forest.

Then "Blossom" comes into his life. He has just had a terrific struggle with one of his natural enemies and is glowering over the victim. He sees "Blossom." A new and unknown feeling comes over him.

When this feeling has blossomed into a bigger thought-a rival enters.

No bigger, more fascinating, more gripping story has ever been placed upon the screen.

JOHNNY DOOLEY

AN INTERNATIONAL ASSET

JOHNNY DOOLEY is an unusual sure-fire comedian. His comedies are produced under the direction of a master director, skilled photographers and with all-star casts. Extensive expenditures are made to attain perfection in every branch of the production and to outclass all previous efforts to deliver exceptional quality in construction without resorting to slap-stick and vulgarity. Uproarious laughter is legitimately provoked by Johnny Dooley in these comedies.

JOHNNY DOOLEY does a world of things that are new to the screen. As a headliner in vaudeville and star in Broadway musical productions he has developed a method of imparting snap and ginger in his screen work that is positively refreshing. His stunts are truly funny, novel and wholesome.

Details of distribution will be announced when completed.

Absolutely new Comedies in which transition from the "Sublime to the Ridiculous" are portrayed in a manner such as will produce wholesome laughter. They are peppered with enough Slap-stick for the huge enjoyment of comedy-fans who enjoy this class of farce.

The scenic backgrounds for these pictures have been chosen with deliberation and care, and rarely, even in the most celebrated Feature Pictures, will such beautiful scenery be observed as in these comedies. Ocean beach, tropical river and lake scenes, desert and jungle scenes as only Florida can produce—and where, may we ask, in the North and in the great Inland States, is there a man, woman or child, who does not go into ecstasy over this class of scenery, so foreign to their surroundings?

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 23 June 7 1919

Remarks at Random

NEW YORK CITY, which, since the days of Mayor Gaynor has been a model of law and reason in its regulation of motion pictures, is now in danger of official consorship.

An ordinance, said to have been prepared with the co-operation of city officials, has been introduced in the Board of Aldermen. To some extent the ordinance is harmless, since it merely defines and definitely bestows police powers which the Commissioner of Licenses already possesses.

But the Commissioner's police powers must at present stand review by the courts on each individual occasion where they are exercised; with the proposed ordinance on the statute books his sway would be autocratic and his judgment arbitrary.

Further, the ordinance makes it obligatory on producers to secure a permit for each picture shown in New York City; it creates a club over the individual exhibitor.

It can readily be seen that there is real danger, both to the motion picture and to American ideals of liberty, in the proposed legislation.

Legislation With Possibilities

THE industry has the greatest possible confidence in License Commissioner Gilchrist, the present incumbent, and the man who would first be called upon to exercise the provisions of the new ordinance.

We can recall no license commissioner who has been more warmly praised by exhibitors in the Greater City for his administration of the office. Officials of the exhibitor organizations have found Commissioner Gilchrist at all times willing to co-operate in a spirit of reason and justice.

Aside from the principle involved, we feel certain that if the industry could be assured that future incumbents would be of the high caliber of Commissioner Gilchrist there would be no objection to the proposed legislation.

But the principle cannot be side-tracked. It is not in the spirit of the American people or of American institutions to bestow arbitrary command of press, pulpit, stage or screen on any one man.

And neither can the industry be certain that the turning of the political wheel will always bring a Gilchrist to the license commissioner's chair. In fact, the possibilities are otherwise. With the new powers created by the proposed ordinance it is very likely that the post of license commissioner would become a plum to be fought over bitterly by the politicians of each incoming administration.

Between cranks of the Funkhouser type and politicians who are "practical men," there would be little choice for the picture industry.

When East is West

ABOUT a year ago there was every indication that New York was being deserted as a picture producing center. The exodus was on, and though it was at bottom due in large part to fear of another coalless winter, the surface appearance indicated the doom of the East and new life for Los Angeles.

And today?

Well, we need go no further than the current week's news that William Fox is planning a studio city right in the heart of New York. A picture-making plant of gigantic proportions built in the heart of a city where property is valued higher than any other section of the country!

Surely, to borrow the title of a Broadway success, "East Is West." And if we care to go further for evidence that New York is overtaking Los Angeles once more, there is the Famous Players-Lasky plant rapidly nearing completion in Long Island City; there are the various Selznick companies now making their headquarters near Broadway; there is the announcement from Percy Waters that the new Triangle productions will be made in the East.

"Westward the course of empire takes its way"—but it must have had a return ticket!

"Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn"

SURELY the picture industry cannot be accused of continuing to neglect "The Story" when an announcement comes to our desk linking in its headline the names of a prominent author and a well-known producer. And when that headline is followed by the news of the formation of a company controlling the creations of a most distinguished group of authors.

And only a few weeks previously we chronicled the gathering of another group of celebrities around another film man—W. W. Hodkinson.

Surely the day of "The Story" is at hand. And with it the promise of a Fall's output averaging higher in quality than any previous period has seen.

Dealing in Personalities

Bill Fox pulled a surprise on the boys with the announcement of his big new plant at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-sixth Street. Some of our best news hounds have been trying for weeks to learn the identity of the organization behind the move. The construction company and the men working on the grounds told all inquiring sleuths—"The Big Four." And now it turns out to be William Fox, who was in Europe all the time the sleuths were working and therefore free from suspicion.

We'll say that Bill Fox has his nerve with him. The price per foot of New York real estate at Fifty-sixth Street is enough to make us feel dizzy at the mere thought.

But we were just thinking that with a studio ten minutes from Times Square Bill can get his money back in quick time if he will throw it open to visitors at a dollar a head.

What visitor from Oshkosh wouldn't pay a dollar to see William Farnum toss the "heavy" around a set—and all within ten minutes' walk of his hotel.

Have received a letter from the Film Exchange Managers' Association of Atlanta which we can't very well publish, but which would indicate that bicycling is not confined to those sections where bicycles are available. For with the letter comes a photograph of a pickanniny bicycling on foot. On the evidence as they present it the exchange managers seem to have caught a fairly well-known exhibitor with "the goods." The letter, by the way, is sent as a reply to Mr. Melton Phelos, who declared in a recent issue that the exhibitor is always the goat.

Charles Schwerin blew into town early in the week with reports that "The Unpardonable Sin" is going like wildfire in his Southern territory.

Mr. Atlanta Criterion Samuels may have to buy Charlie a new suit of clothes next week, for he has a bet on the business that "The Unpardonable Sin" does in Atlanta next week.

Mr. Samuels, by the way, has been given the honorary title of "Reg'lar Feller" by New York film men. After a week in our midst he left on Monday for Atlanta, with a stop-over at Atlantic City on the schedule.

"Ritchie, the Lithographer, Sued by a Chorus Girl!" Scandal? Oh, no. It's only because the fair damsel says her picture was used on a poster.

"Schenectady Declares for Sunday Movies by a Common Council Vote of 8 to 5." Just one more reason why you must surely be at that Waldorf-Astoria dinner on June 18. The dinner is a testimonial to Sydney Cohen, Charles O'Reilly and Samuel Berman. They are the men who gave to the industry the additional revenue it will secure from Sunday bookings in such places as Schenectady. There'll be a thousand film men there. Gosh, won't you feel lonely that night if you are not at the Waldorf?

You have to hand it to Harry Reichenbach. The latest is to send a copy of the novel, "When Bear-Cat Went Dry," to all the film men. And the wrapper reads, "What Damn Fools we were not to have bought this book when we had a chance. Now Macauley Photoplays have finished the picture—Oh, my!"

Just after we learn that a Delaware incorporation has been granted "United Picture Producing Corporation," with a capital stock of thirty-three millions, we hear rumblings of impending activity at United Theatres. But oh, boy, those figures! Thirty-three millions!

The long-expected Famous Players-Lasky plans will probably be sprung on the industry next week.

It doesn't look as though Samuel Goldwyn is going to be caught asleep at the switch when the Fall rush of business comes. Working shoulder to shoulder with Rex Beach and with a line-up of real big authors contributing to the Eminent Authors Company, the open market need bring no worries for Samuel.

Jack Woody has served notice that his vacation at the Astor is over. He confesses that the vacation has been both profitable and enjoyable, but duty calls. About Monday Jack will be sitting with his feet under a desk once more.

We can't say any more just now, but of course the statement above gives the information that Arthur Kane will also be heard from next week.

And by the way, we wish to deny a statement printed on this page last week. We said that Arthur Kane was fishing in Maine. It's all wrong. He has been learning to play golf in Connecticut.

While we are making a correction we could also confess that in the rush of business this page neglected to tell you of three important news events of the past month. Three—count 'em. The arrival of twins at Jim Beecroft's home; the return of A. J. Lang from South America, and the shift of Ben Grimm from the World to Wid's.

Neither had we told you that Sergeant George Gould, after eighteen months' service in France, is once more at his desk in Motion Picture News office.

Eddie MacManus is a busy young film magnate these days, dividing his time between the office at 2 West 47th Street and the Biograph studio. There's a big special coming soon with the imprint, "MacManus Corporation."

Herbert Howe, one of our most popular publicity providers, is once more hanging his hat in the Vitagraph office after a sightseeing trip to France.

Randall White's automobile got him into trouble this week and he had to say "Good Morning, Judge," yesterday. No, it wasn't for speeding. "Obstructing traffic."

With "The Unpardonable Sin" going at its present gait it looks as though "The Hushed Hour" will follow right along and do the clean-up act for Harry Garson.

That Robertson-Cole organization is going along at a smooth, steady, consistent speed. We had a few words with Alex Beyfuss during the week and after feeling his enthusiasm we wanted to go out on the highway and tell every one we met, "Keep your eyes on Robertson-Cole."

One thing Robertson-Cole has done. It has worked out a connection between producer and distributor that provides real incentive to the independent making pictures.

Harry Poppe dropped into the office during the week, so we can tell you that in a few weeks you will hear a slam-bang announcement from B. A. Rolfe. It's a feature this time, with a brand-new idea and startling possibilities.

Jake Wilk is now snugly settled in his own offices at 825 Longacre Building.

R. A. Rowland sails for England on Saturday. This seems to be fashionable with our magnates these days.

Wm. Fox Builds in Heart of New York

Studios, Laboratories and Offices to Cost More Than Two Million Dollars—Expected to Be Ready by October—Work Already Well Advanced

A LUNCHEON to representatives of the leading motion picture trade papers, followed by a visit to Fifty-fifth street and Tenth avenue, Manhattan, was chosen by the Fox Film Corporation May 27, as a setting in which to announce that William Fox is building on that site in the heart of New York City what is declared to be the biggest motion picture plant in the world, under one roof. It will be a veritable motion picture city, two minutes from Broadway.

This plant is expected, it was announced, to adequately care for the rapid expansion of the Fox business. More than two million dollars are being spent in the structure, which is to be ready for occupancy about the first of October.

Modern in Every Way

The building, work on which already is well advanced, will occupy practically a whole city block at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth streets, and will cost more than $2,500,000. It will be completely equipped and probably the most efficient motion picture plant in the world. Designed from plans outlined by Mr. Fox as a result of his long experience and years of observation of film affairs, the building not only will include every practical modern device for the expeditious and economical production of films, but will be so laid out as to obtain a maximum of efficiency in administration, a minimum of lost energy and waste, and the greatest safety and comfort for employees.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, made the announcement of details. The building will have three stories and a basement and will house all of the William Fox film activities in the East—laboratory, studios and administration offices. The Fox home executive offices now occupy seven floors of the Leavitt Building at 130 West Forty-sixth Street, Manhattan, but for the last year even this large space has been inadequate to care properly for the rapidly growing business.

Plans laid by William Fox and Winfield R. Sheehan on their recent trip to Europe call for an extension of business which makes a radical enlargement of producing and laboratory facilities imperative. While in France and in the various countries of the continent Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan established ten exchanges for the distribution of Fox Films. These exchanges are in addition to the already comprehensive distributing system which Williiam Fox has long maintained for the benefit of his European exhibitors.

All Units Grouped

Besides the seven floors of the home office building, the William Fox organization also, at the present time, has a large laboratory building at Fort Lee, N. J., equipped with every modern appliance for handling, developing and printing of films, and also extensive studio accommodations in the New York district. The Eastern studios used during the last year include six in New Jersey, four in Manhattan and others in Yonkers, the Bronx and Brooklyn.

When the new building is in operation all these scattered forces will be brought into one compact unit, co-ordinated under one head, and in one building. This plant, however, will not in any way decrease the output of the Fox establishment in California or affect the plans for plants in England and France.

The new building will have the entire frontage on Tenth Avenue and will extend 275 feet along Fifty-fifth Street. The frontage on Fifty-sixth street will be 150 feet. The total floor space of the structure will be 150,000 square feet.

In the plans ordered by Mr. Fox elaborate precautions were taken to insure safety for employees. At a recent meeting of municipal fire experts various suggestions were made to minimize fire hazards in film manufactories. All of these ideas have been embodied in the new plant, besides a number of others which Mr. Fox devised himself.

The building will be absolutely fireproof. Its walls will be of brick, with a front of pressed brick, while the main construction will be of steel and concrete. The floors will be of concrete throughout the whole building.

The offices of the various departments of the organization will be grouped according to the relation of their functions. The executive offices have been laid out on a unit plan, which is the development of numerous consultations held by Mr. Fox with the most eminent efficiency engineers in the country. As a result, there will be a minimum of waste motion and effort in consultation and supervision and at the same time the whole establishment will be arranged on the simplest of plans.

There will be large and cheerful rest rooms on each floor, recreation rooms, shower baths, gymnasium and other features which are designed to make for the well-being of the employees.

Each Department Distinct

The building will be divided so that the making of pictures will be confined to one section, the clerical offices to another, and the physical handling of the film to a third. Each of these three departments will be within easy reach of the executive offices, making the establishment one of the most compact in the world.

Direct communication with the Fox branch offices on this continent and abroad will be provided by a telegraph office in the building having connection with all telegraph and cable stations.

The basement, which has a floor space of more than 45,000 square feet, will contain all the departments that have to do with physical administration of the building. There will be a high pressure boiler plant, capable of generating 600-horsepower and a series of enormous bins for coal. This, too, will be a spacious room, equipped with everything needed in the way of electrical apparatus for such a large structure. There also will be a hypo room, a filter plant and extensive quarters for laboratory research work, where a staff of chemical experts will devote all their time to devising and improving mechanical apparatus and chemical formulas for the improvement of photography, film developing, tinting and printing, and to general experimental work.

The rear sections of the first and second floors will be devoted entirely to the physical handling of film. This will include the laboratory, which has been laid out to give a capacity of 3,000,000 feet of film every week, with the employees working an eight-hour day basis. The floor space of the laboratory will comprise 40,000 square feet, and the arrangement will be such that film will go through the various processes of development with a minimum of waste effort.

All the film editors of the corporation will have their offices in the laboratory section and in addition there will be a large room for the use of directors while cutting and editing their productions. On this floor also will be thirty-five fireproof and waterproof vaults, which will contain negatives of the Fox Film Corporation and in which prints will be stored during the process of production.

Besides these facilities, there will be twelve projection rooms. These are to mark a big advance over most similar rooms; will, in fact, be miniature theatres, equipped with every convenience for the comfort of audiences. The seats will be arranged on a sloping floor, and will be generously upholstered. Each projection room will have a piano and provision for other music so that photoplays will be seen in an atmosphere approximately that of a well conducted theatre. The length of these rooms, located at one end of the building, will be such that considerably greater projection can be provided than usually is possible.

In the laboratory section also there will be a number of rooms for the examining of films. Besides these there will be a large, sunny rest room for women employees, with ample locker space; a men's room with a large number of lockers, and a gymnasium to be used by employees during luncheon hours and before and after work.

Plenty of Fresh Air

An unusual feature will be a large air-conditioning plant which will supply washed air for the whole structure, so that the same temperature will prevail throughout the building during all seasons of the year. Although thermometers on Tenth Avenue may register 98 degrees in the shade, or 10 degrees below zero, the temperature in the Fox offices will be 68 to 70 degrees. This plant likewise will supply fresh, pure air for the building.

The Tenth avenue front of the first and second floors will be devoted to administration offices. Here will be the large private offices of Mr. Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager; Jack G. Leo, vice-president; John C. Eisele, treasurer; Herman Robbins, assistant general manager; James E. MacBride, chairman of the executive committee, and other officials. Grouped near the administration offices will be the offices of the numerous departments and sub-departments—contract, sales, financial, auditing, foreign, advertising, exhibitors' service bureau, printing, requisition, purchasing, etc., etc.

The scenario department will be placed so that it will be in close touch with both the administration offices and the offices of the photoplay directors. In connection with the scenario department there will be a large library space for filing the books and manuscripts obtained by William Fox for photoplay production. Near the executive offices also will be rest and recreation rooms for women and men, and a large restaurant in which the employees may obtain their luncheons at cost prices.

The back portion of the second floor will be given over to offices and dressing rooms for the people connected with the studios. There will be dressing rooms for 1,000 players. These rooms will have toilet facilities and shower baths.

"Extras" will come into their own in the new Fox building. Shunted about for years, these actors will find in the new Fox building two big, airy, well-appointed rooms —one for men and one for women—where they can make up and dress.

The William Fox staff of directors also will have commodious private offices, situated so that they will be close to the administration offices. And conveniently near them will be a large carpenter shop; a shop where artists can make plaster casts for sets; a room for scene artists; three working prop rooms; a sewing room; a drapery room; wardrobe department; storage space for studio properties; and a studio library where information regarding locations, costuming, sets, etc., will be assembled and catalogued for the convenience of directors. This room will be in charge of the studio research department, which is expected to prove an important adjunct to directorial work.

Samuel F. Kingston, casting director, will have his general offices on the second floor also, with private offices for consultation with players and others.

The top floor will be ultilized exclusively for studios. There will not be a post or other obstruction in the whole floor.

Leading French Producer Here

President Demaria of the Association of Motion Picture Manufacturers of France Arrives in New York

AFTER nearly five years absence the leading film producer of France comes to America with an important message to the American film industry. Jules Demaria, Chevalier de la Legion d' Honneur, President de la Chambre Syndicale de la Cinematographic Francaise (Association of Motion Picture Manufacturers of France) announced that the Grand International Congress of motion picture manufacturers of the world postponed in 1914 would take place in Paris sometime during July or August, 1920.

Mr. Demaria was found in the offices of Edmond Ratisbonne, President of the France-America Corporation, at 220 West 42nd Street. He stated that an international standardization of all elements of the motion picture industtry should be the outcome of the proposed International Convention which is scheduled at the Grand Palais in Paris next year.

Through the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Mr. Demaria expects the co-operation essential to the success of the gathering. Not only the producers of films but the manufacturers of all equipment and accessories for the studios, laboratories and theatres are urged to try and settle upon a metric system to be standard for all nations.

The productions of films in France at present is still in chaos, according to the noted visitor. Many directors are now active in American productions. Many of the most experienced motion picture people have been lost during the terrible four years of war.

Five prints of any good screen subject is sufficient for the theatres of France, which number about 1,500 houses. It is stated that in proportion to population, France has less theatres than her neighboring countries. All the theatres were ordered closed during the first period of the war, but most of them were urged to open afterwards by Government officials, who considered motion pictures a great help in maintaining the morale at a high standard. The legitimate theatres and operas were the last to be permitted to open.

Comedies and western thrillers are the favorite American film products with the French people. Charles Chaplin is the big card.

President Demaria deplores the fact that so few French productions are being circulated in America. He contends that as there were more than two million American soldiers over there ,that they would be highly entertained in seeing photoplays with the familiar French settings and locale.

"Not only in New York, San Francisco and New Orleans, but throughout the entire United States, the interest in French pictures should be keen," declared Mr. Demaria, "for these boys came from every section of the country and I predict a great interest in French pictures made by French producers with French screen artists in France."

Legal Lights Fight for Penn. Censor Board

How strongly the Pennsylvania Administration backs up the State Board of Censors when that body gets in a tight place was shown last Tuesday (May 20) when the Commonwealth's best legal talent appeared before the State Supreme Court in session, in the capitol here, in an effort to overturn the decision of Common Pleas Court, No. 2, of Philadelphia, which had overruled the censors who had ordered the entire film of "The Brand," barred from the theatres of Pennsylvania.

Not only did the Attorney General of the State, the Hon. William I. Schaffer, appear in person before the Supreme Court, to plead in behalf of the censors' appeal from the lower court, but he had with him, to render assistance in the fight, Deputy Attorney General William Swoope.

Memphis Theatre Bought

Abe H. Kaufman, President of Kaufman Specials, in association with Walter Apple has purchased the Rialto theatre, a suburban house in Memphis. Paramount and Select features will be run, together with one of the Kaufman Specials each week.

"Open Booking" Keeps the Wires Red Hot

Discussion Refuses to Be "Stopped" and Battle Goes Merrily On —Frank G. Hall Supplies Interesting Statement— Raver Also Says Something

LAST week it was announced that in this issue Harry Raver would hold the limelight in the open market discussions, which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has carried as a serial, seemingly endless despite the fact we announced it would close week before last. But this week Frank G. Hall demands a share of the space in setting forth some interesting points, with the result that shrapnel is expected to burst all over the place. Among other things, Mr. Hall says: "Give the exhibitor pictures and the right to take more. Take your profit and give the exhibitor his."

Harry Raver, acknowledged "a pioneer of pioneers," contributes a chatty historical chapter in his letter which will no doubt attract considerable attention.

Speaks as Exhibitor

Says Mr. Hall:

"Speaking from an exhibitor's standpoint, of which I am entitled to speak, being an exhibitor, I am not at all worried nor very much interested in whether pictures are booked the coming year on a stars' series plan or each picture booked on its merit. When I make up my schedule, this is the way I am going to handle it, and any distributing company that does business with me will have to do it on the following plan: I am going to select a star's series if it suits me, and the price is right. I will no doubt sign up for a series of pictures to be produced by directors and there will be a clause in every contract that will give me the option to cancel on one production notice. They will have to make good pictures or have the contract cancelled, and I believe if every exhibitor will insist upon a clause of this kind in his contract the patrons will see a better class of pictures.

"I do not intend to sign up one picture at a time for all the pictures that I will require during the year. It is my intention to sign up contracts that will give me pictures for about two-thirds of my bookings and I expect to hold open the other third to take advantage of special pictures which come out from time to time, so that I can mix them in with the other pictures that I will contract for and will be able to advertise them as specials. I think that every theatre manager should take at least two big specials a month, so that he can take advantage of the advertising that will go with such productions. I never booked a special picture that I did not give it additional advertising, and I think that any theatre manager who takes on specials and lets them run through his house the same as the ordinary run of pictures is making a big mistake.

"I agree with J. D. Williams when he said that if the exhibitor books a star series plan or a director's series plan of pictures that he should continue to have first call on each picture by having a contract subject to one picture cancellation so that he can get the benefit of the advertising and the drawing power of either the star or the director's pictures. I know if I had to wait to book each picture after I would see it, I would have little time to do anything else but view pictures. The burden must be kept upon the producer and not on the exhibitor. The picture business has advanced to such a stage that there is little reason now for bad pictures being produced, and if the producer cannot take the chance of making a contract through its distributing company, subject to one picture's cancellation, he should go out of the producing business.

"I believe in playing the biggest stars and the biggest pictures in my house, providing I can get these pictures at a price where I can make money, but I will not allow myself to be talked into taking on a star series of pictures, regardless of who the star is, unless I can get the series at a price that will allow me some profit at the end of the week for my work. I will cite an instance regarding one star, and the price I originally paid four years ago and what I am asked to pay today.

"I used to pay $100 for four days for a certain star and when I was asked to sign a contract for this same star just recently, the best price I could get was $750 for four days. Of course I did not sign the contract. If I was obliged to pay in proportion, the advanced prices that they are asking for the stars' series in comparison to what I have paid several years ago, I would have to close my theatre.

"I have done a bigger business this year by 33 1/3 per cent than any year in the past five. I have pleased my patrons and did not book at the price I was asked to pay. I know that the patrons of my theatre are just as well entertained by a good picture with a good cast, well directed, as they are by the high priced stars. As to the matter of distributing and producing for the benefit of those interested in what I intend to do the coming year, I wish to say that the Rothapfel Unit Programme, which is produced under the personal supervision of Samuel L. Rothapfel, will be released in a series of six programs during the year. I am associated with Mr. Rothapfel in the company that bears his name and when we organized the company, and used Mr. Rothapfel's name I told him that he was now stepping on dangerous ground and that if he did not produce good pictures he would ruin his reputation. The exhibitor has the protection of knowing that if Rothapfel puts out a bad one, the contracts that we have taken will all be cancelled, because I have given the exhibitors the right to cancel on one picture's notice. This is the protection that every exhibitor should have, and it puts the burden on the producer. It also makes the director, who is interested in his own company, more careful about the expenditure of money and allows the distributor to sell his product on a more uniform price.

"This same plan applies to the Charles Miller Productions and Hobart Henley Productions and Gerald Bacon Productions. Each one of these contracts that are offered to the exhibitor will have a one picture cancellation clause. I will not attempt to hoodwink the exhibitor to sign a contract for something that he has not seen. I would not sign one and I would not ask anyone to sign what I would not sign myself. I believe that the directors' companies will be the coming thing in a very short time, and there is in my opinion a reason why pictures should be produced by the director, and the director should be interested in his own company so that he will have to make good pictures or quit the picture business. That is the kind of a contract I have signed up with each one of my producing directors. If he falls he will not be able to produce for any other company, because I have him signed up for a term of years, and if they can't make their own company a success, they will have to go back on the farm.

"Hiring directors is easy, when giving them a wide range to spend money and giving them big salaries. But when you put pictures out under the director's name, it is entirely a different thing.

"The men associated with me in the producing business pay particular attention to the story, which is the vital thing, and next a good cast, and the picture is well produced, the continuity good, photography good and entertainment value good, and I don't think the patrons of a theatre give a rap whether it has the biggest stars in the world in the picture or not.

"I don't believe in over-selling an exhibitor and all my salesmen are instructed to sell contracts at prices that will allow the exhibitor to make money and if there are any exhibitors who handle my product and who have a contract wherein they can't make any money, all they have to do is to let me know and I will gladly, if after investigating the conditions, reduce the price of his contract on any series of pictures that I put out the coming year.

"The days of gypping are over. The overselling to the exhibitor must stop if the man wants to continue in business."

Some Interesting History

Harry Raver, "a pioneer of pioneers," contributes a chatty historical chapter in his letter. It follows:

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
Dear Sir:

Why close the "Open Market" discussion just at a time when a number of the Old Timers are beginning to put forth their claims as being Pioneers. Incidentally, there are a few of us still on earth who remember when most of latter-day "originators" were entirely unconscious of the power of the Motion Picture. For example, Jesse Goldberg states that in connection with the Life Photo Film Corp. "We Created the Open Market" in 1913. It seems strange that as far back as 1910 many State Rights sales were recorded, among them "Zigomar," which the writer sold to Mandelbaum of Cleveland, who resold territory to others. Then came "Dante's Inferno" and many others, including a number of Helen Gardner features. Warner's Features bought two films from the writer, "Redemption" and "Glass Coffin," and sold territory on these, later opening their own exchanges. The writer sold territory on Sarah Bernhardt's "Romance of an Actress" and Monuet Sully in "Oedipus Rex" in 1911, before the Famous Players Film Company was formed, also organized the All Star Feature Corp. in June, 1913, a strictly State Rights proposition, releasing "Arizona" and three other features that year. A back file of trade journals shows that the first States Rights feature announced by Jesse Goldberg's Life Photo Film Corp. was in March, 1914, "The Banker's Daughter." It is evident that Mr. Goldberg has his dates twisted, for, according to the records he was not releasing features in 1913 at all, although he claims to have been "the first and only consistent producer of state rights productions in the year 1913." He also overlooks the fact that The Famous Players Film Co. was consistently producing and selling many important features, on the state rights plan, in 1913. Gaumont, Solax, Pathe (Eclectic) and a number of others were also selling features. The writer had sold as many as thirty-six state rights productions (Italia) long before 1913. When Goldberg states that at that time "Adolph Zukor did not know what a motion picture was," he insults the intelligence of many readers of the NEWS who know that Mr. Zukor was an old, experienced exhibitor before the formation of the Famous Players, when he, together

First Rothapfel Unit at Park Theatre

New York theatre goers thronged the opening of the First Rothapfel Unit Program at the Park Theatre on Columbus Circle, 59th street and Broadway, Wednesday night, May 28.

At 8:30 the long line before the box office showed no immediate sign of diminishing. The large theatre has been leased by Frank Hall and a symphony orchestra of thirty musicians rendered special music that won much applause.

A pantomime ballet opened the program in an artistic and unique manner which registered, and the audience showed keen appreciation of the screen offerings of S. L. Rothapfel which rounded out a two-hour entertainment.

The stage and lighting effects were in keeping with the usual high class Rothapfel standard.

Conference of Canadian Exhibitors Is Held

Ottawa, Ontario, held the centre of the stage in Canadian moving picture circles during the week of May 19. A number of important conferences were held in the Canadian Capital by leading moving picture men of the Dominion. Among those who were in the city were N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Regal Films, Limited, who conferred with Harry Brouse, First National franchise holder; J. J. Allen of the Allen Theatre Enterprises who went to Ottawa to look over a theatre property, the Russell, and J. Gorman of Montreal, general manager in Canada of the General Film Company.

It is announced that Mr. Gorman may become a special representative for Regal Films, Limited, to handle First National releases exclusively which are distributed by the Regal.

Urge "Get Together" Move of Church and Film

That the church and the moving picture business is getting more closely associated is being urged in Winnipeg. Sunday moving picture performances have been introduced in Winnipeg theatres, although there is a law against Sunday shows in the Province of Manitoba of which Winnipeg is the capital. These performances consist of services in several theatres and the features of these services are moving pictures. Winnipeg people have taken kindly to these shows.

New York Office Is Opened by B. J. Brandon

Bennett J. Brandon, exporter and distributor of motion picture films, has opened offices in Suite No. 501 Godfrey Building, No. 729 Seventh avenue. His Chicago offices, in No. 64 West Randolph street, remain open for business as usual. Mr. Brandon will move between New York and Chicago, spending most of his time in the Metropolis.

"Open Market" Discussion Is Still On

with Ed. Porter and Joe Engle, produced and sold features nearly a year before Goldberg broke into the picture business. There were 22 open-market-book-what-you-like film exchanges doing business before 1913 and these offices were being supplied by at least a dozen concerns selling films on a territorial basis strictly. No one producer could have "created" or kept these offices alive. Harry Reichenbach registers the beginning of motion pictures with the first film he exploited, "Hypocrites," and claims that "Four Years in Germany" and "Jeff McCarthy" split the market open for all time. Reichenbach was with Lasky when J. J. McCarthy was employed by the writer as manager of the Illinois theatre (Chicago) presentation of "Cabiria," which set the pace for big productions in this country and inspired the elaboration of "The Clansman," which Mr. Griffith presented as "The Birth of a Nation" after "Cabiria" had proven, at a tremendous exploitation expense, the possibility of a two dollar admission price. Everybody seems determined to take a shot at W. W. Hodkinson just because he comes to the bat with a straight, out-and-out, open market policy, backed by a long string of high class productions in which he has sufficient faith to allow exhibitors to pick and choose. Of course, others have sold pictures on the open market, but most of them with strings tied to them in the shape of additional and mediocre films which the exhibitor had to book in order to get the "open market production," but Hodkinson, a strictly free agent, comes out for open booking in its broadest sense and it is up to his producing companies to make productions good enough to stand such a test. The younger generation of press agents seems addicted to the habit of breaking into print on matters of film history and achievement with an utter disregard for the men who employed them, the films they exploited and the money expended to make these "pioneers" famous authorities.

Yours in the Open Market,
Harry Raver.

Questions Reichenbach's Claim

W. W. Hodkinson again dictates a short communication anent some of the statements contained in the recent Reichenbach letter published by Motion Picture News during the open market discussion. Mr. Hodkinson cites a few more facts also which may interest the motion picture trade in general:

Mr. W. A. Johnston, President,
Motion Picture News,

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Without wishing to prolong any controversy, but simply to keep the records clear, I want to say that in respect to Mr. Reichenbach's statement that he had to fight the whole Paramount organization to have "Hypocrites" released on the "open market," that this is not so.

"Hypocrites" was submitted by its producer as a regular Paramount release, but upon screen examination and our discovery that it prominently displayed a nude figure, we decided not to impose it, under the terms of our contracts, on exhibitors whom we felt might consider the film objectionable on this account.

We declined to release the picture on the program, but in order to protect the manufacturer on his investment, we agreed to release the picture separately and under conditions whereby such Paramount exhibitors as wished to use it could have that privilege in preference to any other exhibitors. The producer then engaged Mr. Reichenbach to exploit this picture by public showings and other means.

Nobody ever prevailed upon us to alter or modify our system of doing business with exhibitors while I was head of Paramount, even in the case of "Carmen," the Mary Pickford releases and others, where pressure was brought by the producers to make us change our methods.

Yours very truly,
W. W. Hodkinson.

New Buffalo Theatre to Cost Over a Million

The most elaborate motion picture theatre in the country, to be erected at a cost of $1,150,000, and to seat 4,000—that is what Shea's Metropolitan in Buffalo is projected to be. Construction is to start in June.

These are the outstanding facts in an announcement made by Harold B. Franklin managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, for the Shea Amusement company which organization with the completion of the mammoth Metropolitan will have five theatres under its control in the Queen City of the Lakes. These houses are Shea's Hippodrome. Shea's vaudeville house, the Majestic and the Gayety.

The Metropolitan will be located in the downtown section and while the exact site cannot be announced at this writing, it may be said that the structure will be very near the present Hippodrome. The site under consideration is said to be a plot 120 feet by 230 feet.

Head of Alpha Lithograph Company Is Dead

George J. Cooke, President of the Alpha Lithograph Co., official printers of the Fox Film Co., died Tuesday, May 20, 1919, of paralysis, at his residence Libby Castle, Ft. Washington avenue & 196th street, this city, in his fifty-sixth year. Mr. Cooke was one of the pioneer theatrical printers in this country, having owned with Joseph H. Tooker, the old Metropolitan Job Print, established by James Gordon Bennett, the elder, under the name of the N. Y. Herald Job Print, and is well known throughout the Motion Picture and Theatrical industries.

Dean Returns from Trip

Charles A. Dean, manager of distribution for the Educational Films Corporation of America, has returned from a business trip through the middle west in the interests of "Educational" products. As a result of his trip, the Standard Film Service Company, of Detroit, Cleveland and Cincinnati, will replace the Argus Motion Picture Company as distributors for "Educational" single-reels in Ohio, and the territory which they will serve from their three offices will include all of Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

Arrange Film Showing at Centenary Celebration

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has just consummated arrangements by which motion pictures will be shown on a pretentious scale at the Centenary Celebration of the American Methodist Missions at Columbus, Ohio, June 20th to July 13th, 1919.

The main feature of the National Association's offer of cooperation is the exploiting of the picture—features, comedies, weeklies, serials, etc. The officers of the Association believe that thousands of new fans will be recruited to the swelling ranks of movie lovers as a result of the Columbus exhibition.

Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott has sent an urgent appeal to every producing member to submit to Dr. C. C. Marshall, Joint Centenary Commission, 111 Fifth avenue, New York City, a list of all films suitable for this purpose. As many of the pictures will have to be sreened prior to their final acceptance by Dr. Marshall's co-workers, it is imperative that these lists be in Dr. Marshall's hands at the earliest possible moment.

War Veterans Banqueted

Members of Motion Picture Directors Association, who have returned to Los Angeles from war service were given a "welcome home" dinner by members in the blue room of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, Wednesday evening May 21. The honored members were Capt. William Desmond Taylor, of the English Army, who was president of the Association until he enlisted; Lieut. George Sugman, engineers corp; Capt. David Kirkland; Chief Yoeman Victor Heerman; Top Sargeant Jacques Jaccard; Harry Edwards and Francis Powers of Y. M. C. A. Service; George Marshall, still in France, is the only member now in service.

Goldwyn Managers Feel the Public's Pulse

Eighteen Goldwyn resident managers recently assembled in New York to discuss Goldwyn production and sales plans for next season. From them Felix F. Feist, vice president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation learned that the public, more and more, is becoming dissatisfied with pictures exploiting a star in a poor story.

Following the final meeting Mr. Feist said:

"It was the consensus of the convention that exhibitors had arrived at the point where they appreciated the importance of compensating the producer for properly made and properly exploited pictures."

Exhibitors of Southern States to Organize

A meeting of Alabama and Tennessee exhibitors, looking toward the formation of a permanent association, has been called at Nashville, Tenn., for June 2-3. Robert Seese is attending to the preliminary details, and reports that almost a hundred answers have been received from exhibitors promising to attend.

Political Body of Picture Men

Producers, Exhibitors and Exchange Men Form "Affiliated Picture Interests" on Western Coast

MOTION picture industry out on the West Coast entered politics by banding together members of the producing, exhibiting, exchange and allied interests in an organization named "Affiliated Picture Interests." The purpose of this organization, as outlined in petition for incorporation under the laws of California, filed with the Secretary of the State by A. P. Michael Narlian, general council for the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade, is to bring about a conserted action of allied interest of the industry, oppose unjust legislation and aid in the selection and election of candidates for public office.

The organization was perfected as result of a previous meeting. At the first meeting a committee was named by W. S. Smith, general manager of Vitagraph, who presided as chairman, this committee composed of Frank A. Garbutt, general manager Famous Players-Lasky Corp; Western interests; W. P. Reynolds, Sec. of Motion Picture Producers Assn; Thomas Hancock, Pres. Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade; Attorney Narlian; Sid Grauman of Grauman's theatre; J. A. Quinn of Rialto theatre and M. Gore of Gore's Circuit of theatres. Mr. Garbutt served as chairman of the committee and the report he presented to a meeting held May 22nd included the reading of the articles of incorporation and by-laws for such a corporation. The articles of incorporation were adopted and signed by those present to which list of signatures will be added the names of numerous other important men of the West Coast film industry and the petition will then be forwarded to the Secretary of State. The original signers representing the producers were: C. H. Christie, Christie Film Co.; Joseph Engle of Metro Film Corporation; W. S. Smith of Vitagraph; F. A. Garbutt, F. P. Lasky; Hal Roach of Rolin Film Company; W. A. Waldron of Mack Sennett Comedies; Clark Thomas of Thos. H. Ince Productions; Chas. Eyton of F. P. Lasky's Morosco Studio; W. E. Bidwell of D. W. Griffith Productions and Abraham Lehr of Goldwyn Film Corporation.

Music Tax Will Be Under Fire

St. Louis Convention Will Have Problem Under Consideration, and Some Action Is Expected

ONE of the questions which will come under consideration at the St. Louis Convention, June 25, 26, 27 and 28, is the so-called Music Tax. The experience of both music publisher and the exhibitor so far has not been profitable or pleasant. Exhibitors have resented the paying of a tax on music which they do a great deal to popularize. It is a good deal like when a movie exhibitor popularized a movie star and then finds he has to pay double film rental at the end for his trouble. The actual result has been that most exhibitors refuse to play the so-called popular music which carrys a tax, but instead are playing the rich old classics of which there is almost an unlimited supply. The music of the old masters pleases very much more and is more appropriate to accompany the very high class of photo plays offered to the public today.

As a consequence in the final summary the real loss is to the music publishers. The theatres do not popularize the songs by refusing to pay the tax, consequently the sale of these so-called popular songs are far below normal. One of the largest publishers already has withdrawn from the music trust. It is understood that this company is going to completely reverse itself on the music tax and only let its music be played tax free and give free copies to all motion picture theatres. In this way the theatre popularized the music and the sale to the general public was much greater. Some definite action will be taken and the matter worked out for the best interests of the exhibitor. Many of the exhibitors coming to the convention have special recommendations on the music tax.

The entire industry is invited to attend the Victory Convention as guests of the exhibitors. Social features and entertainment by the city of St. Louis are being planned.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Jarred

Senate Passes Bill Prohibiting Children Attending Picture Houses Unaccompanied

THE motion picture exhibitors of Pennsylvania got something of a jolt on May 20 when the Senate passed finally the Leiby bill which would prohibit children between eight and sixteen years old from attending motion picture shows during school hours unless accompanied by a parent or guardian or unless they have a permit from their school teacher.

The vote was 26 to 13. The bill, before becoming a law, must, however, be passed also by the House and receive the signature of Governor Sproul. It is now in the hands of a House committee. If it is enacted into law it undoubtedly would have the effect of materially cutting down the size of daylight audiences in motion picture theatres and thus make more difficult the exhibitors' already great problem of how to keep their houses filled in the afternoons, at which time the adult attendance is smallest.

Every one of the half a dozen bills designed to prevent scalping in the sale of tickets to motion picture and other theatres, now pending before the Pennsylvania Legislature, seems destined to go down to defeat. Each session of the Legislature in recent years has seen the appearance of a considerable number of measures of this type which spring up to harass their opponents, but which, by the exercise of some mysterious influence, ultimately go by the board.

The Reader has His Say

[Editor's Note.—J. D. Williams' onslaught directed at the "'single picture" policy and in favor of star series booking has inspired a number of exhibitor letters from all over the country. The writers line up with Mr. Williams and declare that the possibility of bringing exhibitors to a bidding policy series plan is necessary if exhibitors are to have protection against the evils of cut-throat bidding.]

Mormand Turns to Semi-Fiction to State the Case

Garden Theatre,
Flint, Mich.,
May 25, 1919.

W. A. Johnston, Pub.,
Motion Picture News.
New York City, N. Y.
Dear Sir:

For the past several days I have been in a quandary as to the big announcement of the United Artists Corporation, contained in Motion Picture News of May 24th issue, relative to the "Open Booking" plan which that organization very evidently intends to pursue.

I lay abed the other night, after a hard day's grind, speculating upon the ifs, ands and buts of such a policy from the exhibitor's point of view, and what the ultimate future result would be; whether BOLSHEVISM or SOCIALISM in the ranks of EXHIBITORS OF MOTION PICTURES.

Socialism takes from one man that which he has and divides it with the other party or parties.

Bolshevism is rampant in destruction and takes it all.

To my opinion the "Open Market" plan of distribution will prove only a Club for the Enrichment of the Exchange and Producer and for the Enslavement of the Exhibitor, whether he be BIG, with a BIG HOUSE IN A BIG TOWN, or Small, with a Big or Small House in a Small Town.

Before an exhibitor definitely concludes that the Open-Market, Single-Booking Plan is best he should weigh all facts considerately. Let him consider what the product of any concern would eventually cost him were he to be a party to the RECKLESS BIDDING in which EXHIBITORS THEMSELVES WOULD INDULGE under SUCH A PLAN. The United Artists Corporation will release for OPEN BIDDING the productions of THREE GREATEST STARS and ONE GREAT DIRECTOR, all of whom stand high in public favor. Their very first release may prove to be a KNOCKOUT and gather in great amounts of money into the box offices of each theatre that shows it, in every city or community in which it is shown. The exhibitors have paid a CONSISTENT PRICE for the privilege of showing said production to their patrons and everybody is well satisfied—except the other exhibitors in that vicinity, who could just as well have reaped the benefit of the big business had THEY had the picture.

..Result: The other ENVIOUS EXHIBITORS inwardly determine there and then that they will never let "So and So" get another United Artist's Corporation production, "even if it costs me more money than I can take in," for "just look at the prestige it would give my house" and "would I not be KNOCKING THE PROPS out of So-and-So?"

And who benefits—the exhibitors or the producers?

Mr. So-and-So is rightfully entitled to the next production of the star whose name he is most resposible for popularizing in his locality, for without the exhibitor-boosting there would not have been such popular stars. Stars are made in Flint and Evansville, Georgetown and Perth Amboy just as much as they are in Hollywood, New York or Florida. But to protect his prior claim Mr. So-and-So goes into the exchange town to secure for his house the NEXT RELEASE OF THE POPULAR CELEBRITY with whose previous release he had done such a nice business that he was enabled to finish paying for his coal supply and the next to last note on his musical instrument, when, behold—there, already seated in the managerial sanctum of the DICTATOR of TERMS, is his ENVIOUS COMPETITOR. Said E. C. has already had an eloquent chat with the D. of T., who has had enough consideration for his previous victim to state in plain English (unmistakably plain and concise) that Mr. So-and-So would "doubtless be in in a day or so to arrange for a date on 'Percy's Dilemma' and we will have to hold your application on this world-beater until we hear from him."

Mr. So-and-So is frankly told that the demand for this newest record-breaker of a son-of-a-gun has never been equaled in all the annals of the film business; that if he wants to get in under the wire and clean up as he did on "Free Gold" he had best make a declaration of his intention.

"Of course 'Percy's Dilemma' is going to cost you a trifle more than did 'Free Gold,' but THINK, MAN, think of the business you did with 'Free Gold' and the amount of money you made with that. If anybody can afford to play this picture YOU certainly can. AND YOU CAN'T AFFORD to LET IT GET BY YOU," etc.

And So-and-So sits there like a SIMP, enthralled and nonplussed, weakly calculating, perspiring; anxious. He felt that he was paying a good rental for "Free Gold." He had calculated to spend a given amount of money in newspaper publicity, but had exceeded the amount by quite a number of dollars. But the results were worth the expenditure. And he had used more billboard space than usual on a "Feature," but the extra space was worth it in results as a whole. He had expended more than a thousand dollars' worth of physical effort in putting "Free Gold" across big—but the result was worth the exertion. And he'd really been so busy for the past three or four weeks or so trying to get uniform business with ordinary and mediocre stars that he really hadn't had much time to consider what success his ENVIOUS COMPETITOR had been having.

He takes a squint at Mr. E. C. "Looks prosperous," says So-and-So to himself. "That Bird may have been slipping one over on me while I was dozing," he thinks. Then he ventures to ask feebly:

"Just what will 'Percy's Dilemma' cost me?"

"$$$$$$$$," is the quick and ready response.

"Good Gawd, Gus," ejaculates So-and-So, "You can't mean it? Why, that's $200 more than I paid for 'Free Gold.'"

"Well, what do you want? It got the coin for you, didn't it?"

"Yes, it did. But don't you think the price on this one is a trifle out of reason? I knew I was paying a big price for 'Free Gold,' but I was willing, for I had always played Jean Valjean in my house and had spent a lot of money in making him popular before your firm ever got him. It was only natural that I should desire to keep his pictures on my screen and reap a little of the interest due me for all I had spent on him in the past. And now you tell me that if I want to keep him I've got to come across with an extra two hundred."

"Well, that's up to you. If you can't see your way clear, with YOUR HOUSE, to handle this release it won't go begging for showing in that town—THASA CINCH." And D. of T. turns with an air of finality to affix his rubber stamp on a number of communications to some hicks up-State who indulge in the delightful indoor sport of showing films on a screen.

So-and-So (externally to judge) is DONE. He seems to be in a trance, dejectedly slumping in the chair which seems to him to be heated with gas. But don't fool yourself about this bird—he's nobody's coo-coo, he ain't. He's just as full of grit, determination and ambition as a four-year-old Lion. And he knows darned well that E. C. was slipping one over and was dead anxious to get "Percy's Dilemma." So he's boiling inwardly when—

The door opens suddenly. In bursts Billy Blink, manager of the SHOWYOUALL, and So-and-So's bitterest rival. Of course it's not So-and-So's fault. Bill was always a sort of flamboyant cuss who acted like the town belonged to him and besides he didn't have enough manners to ever be seen in decent company. So they hadn't spoken for more than a year except, casually, "'Lo So" and "'Lo Bill."

"Hello, Gus," says Bill, walking over and unceremoniously slapping the D. of T. a good one on the back.

"Well, W-e-l-l," responds Gus, good-naturedly, grasping Bill's grub-hook. "How's everything in Tongonoxie? Haven't heard from you for days. How're getting along. Hear you bought a new Zitzer pipe organ? 'Zat right?"

"Yep, doing well. Traded my Ford for a Packard, too. Say, Gus, I can get forty miles easier'n nothin' in that hearse. 'Fraid to let 'er out till I add ten thousan' or more to what I carry, cause a woman and kids hate like blazes to be left alone in the world. By th' way, how about that 'Percy's Dilemma' I've been readin' about? Is it a bear? Who's a-goin' to get it?"

"Don't know yet, Bill—Nothin' definite yet. What's it worth to you?"

"Say, Gus, don't know. Hang it on the hook 'till this afternoon. Be back to see you. Got 'a hurry an' ——"

"Wait a minit, Bill. Go to lunch with me——"

"Can't do it, Gus. Ol' lady's waitin' in the bus. Be back after 'while. S'long, Gus."

"S'long, Bill."

"By the way, Mr. Hookum" ventures So-and-So, meekly and apologetically. "Guess I'd better be going, so go ahead and fix up the contract on 'Percy's Dilemma' for me for four days begining the 'steenth. Guess I'll be able to handle it all right, all right." And So-and-So has firmly decided just what he definitely thinks of the Open-Booking plan, but he didn't figure it was going to hurt him as much as it has, for wasn't he one of the oldest, if not the oldest SHOWMEN in his town? And wasn't he mainly responsible for the prosperity and good will enjoyed by the motion picture there? Oh, well, times change.

So much for the Open-Bidding, Single-Picture policy. Hop to it, men, if you want it.

I would suggest to any exhibitor who is undecided as to his position in the matter to make investigation of the release plan of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit to ascertain IF IT IS NOT MORE JUST, EQUITABLE AND REASONABLE. And then DEMAND THE SAME SORT OF DISTRIBUTING ARRANGEMENT FROM THE OTHERS.

Now here's a tip to indulge in: THE PUBLIC ARE "NOT JUST DYING" for the want of a look at Doug Fairbanks or Mary Pickford or Charlie Chaplin and WILL WAIT CONTENTEDLY UNTIL SUCH TIME AS THEIR NEW PICTURES COME TO THEM IN THE COURSE OF EVENTS. The ZONE SYSTEM, based on population and capacity is best I think. More-so on population, less so on capacity.

So don't any one of you be foolish enough to play into the hands of the BIG PRODUCER WHO IS NOW OUT STRONGER THAN EVER FOR BIG PROFITS, for if you do you will see the day that you will regret it in big. livid letters that spell R-E-G-R-E-T.

Propaganda is a great thing, but it cannot sway all the minds into one channel. Propaganda is trying to put across the SINGLE-PICTURE Booking Plan. Have nothing to do with its success—thwart it at every opportunity. Be fair and just and don't haggle and squabble over prices. But use your head, man, use your head.

Very truly yours,
C. EDGAR MORMAND, JR.,
Manager Garden Theatre, Flint, Mich.

"Williams Took the Lid Off," Says Meister of Milwaukee

W. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Sir:

J. D. Williams, of First National, took the lid off in last week's issue of Motion Picture News. He's absolutely right about the "single picture" system of baiting exhibitors.

Give me the star series every time, in preference to the single picture policy. I book continually on the series plan, and hardly ever look at the pictures. I know what stars please my patrons and I book their entire output. I cater to a class that enjoys the western and rougher stuff, and for that reason I take Harry Carey, Eddie Polo, Tom Mix, Frank Keenan, George Walsh, Pete Morrison, Neal Hart, William Russell, and Warren Kerrigan. I never see any of their pictures until they are flashed on my own screen, with the exception of the one star who is the poorest attraction at this house, and I usually look at his picture first, but I know the others will please the audiences I have, and I book them "sight unseen." It may not be good business policy in all theatres, but because of the class of people attracted to my somewhat out-of-the-way location, I find it is good policy for me. I don't play the pictures I like, I play what my people like, and they like certain stars—so it is up to me to play them.

I won't bid against anyone—I don't need to. That is what single picture policy means, and I'm against it. I get my stars for a flat rate and make money on them. That is what I am in business for. I'd be foolish to try to bid on every picture I play. I'm for the star series all the time!

(Signed) Respectfully,
OTTO L. MEISTER,
Manager Whitehouse Theatre,
Milwaukee, Wis.

"We'd Be 'Out a Luck,' That's All"

W. A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Sir:

The statement by J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, is everything you say for it on your personalities page. Of all big men in the industry, he seems to hit the nail on the head hardest and straightest. There is a lot of real truth in his statement that the "single picture" policy would eliminate the little fellows. That is certain. Those of us who have bad location, or can't pay so much as the big houses, would be simply out of luck. There would be too much bidding against one another for us to

Plan Gala Banquet to Sunday Show Exponents

Charles Haring, Secretary of the Committee to tender a testimonial banquet to Messrs. Cohn, O'Reilly and Berman at the Waldorf Astoria, on the evening of Wednesday, June 18, having sent out a number of letters to the most influential and active exhibitors in the State of New York to act on the committee to enlist attendance at his affair, is in receipt up to this writing of over fifty answers. Each and every one of the exhibitors who have so far answered the call couch their letters in the most enthusiastic terms, it is said. They all express the necessity of the exhibitors to come to this banquet and pay tribute to these three men who by their efforts paved the way to the legalizing of the exhibition of pictures on Sunday.

A number of features will be introduced on that evening different than any seen heretofore at conventions and banquets but the nature of them is being held a secret by Chairman William Fox and his immediate associates, but on one point Mr. Fox is positive and that is "A pleasant time will be had by all."

Big Game Hunt to Be Filmed in Colors

Robert Frothingham, well known advertising man, and Joseph McAllenan are the leaders of a group of big game hunters who have left New York for the eastern slopes of the Rockies to lasso grizzlies, big horn moose, elk and other big game before a motion picture camera.

A Prizma motion picture camera will be used, and the entire trip thus recorded in full colors. Dr. Leonard S. Sugden and Mr. Henry Berger, Jr., will represent Prizma in the expedition. Ambrose Means, who did all the roping in the Buffalo Jones pictures, taken in Africa; Dr. Harlow C. Brooks, but recently returned from France; George Murgatroyd, taxidermist, and Joe Jones, Wyoming ranch owner, are other members of the party.

The party will go by train from Billings to Cody, Montana, thence 75 miles by automobile to Mr. Jones' ranch and by pack train and trail overland to the eastern slope of the Rockies.

Quimby on Western Trip

Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has left on a tour of the Pathe Exchanges which will extend as far as Chicago, including Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Detroit.

Mr. Quimby's trip is in the interests of the forthcoming feature releases on the Pathe program.

Baker to Quit Metro?

Rumors to the effect that George Baker, director, is to shift his affiliation from Metro to some other concern, have arisen from his presence in New York.

Baker has not given a positive inkling of his intentions, but admits he is at present at work on a scenario for Douglas Fairbanks.

Reader Has His Say

try, to keep in the game. We would have to play the little old pictures that nobody else wants, and our business would fall off accordingly.

I consider that I have made the William S. Hart pictures here. I have a clientele that comes to see his pictures, although they never come at any other time. I can only pay a certain price for him. There would have been no incentive to me in booking Hart productions on a "single picture" basis. Suppose another manager saw that I was making good money from the Hart pictures, and he jumped in and bid $250 higher for Hart's next picture. Then suppose another still larger house would bid a still higher sum. Where would I be? Star series means protection to the exhibitor, and single pictures means cut-throat methods!

It is all right to book the big productions without stars on a "single picture" policy. Take the Tarzan picture or "Auction of Souls," for example. It is not every house that would care to play them in the first place, and they can go to the ones who desire them. They are not associated with any single house and are not taking advantage of previous exploitation in any other house, so nobody suffers. But they are the only ones who can safely be booked that way. With single pictures, featuring real stars, the bidding would be too keen, and within a very short time it would become a dangerous menace to every exhibitor who booked that way. The one picture cancellation clause in star series contracts is ample protection for any exhibitor against a decline in quality.

Very truly yours,

"Series Plan Necessary for Me," Says This Philadelphian

Mr. W. A. Johnston,
Publishers, Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

The article on the "single picture" booking policy published in Motion Picture News expressing the views of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, on this vital subject, should be read by every exhibitor in the country and given due consideration, because of the protection given an exhibitor by such a plan as suggested by Mr. Williams. I am located in a part of Philadelphia where there is keen competition at all time and it would be folly for me not to protect myself in securing every picture in which a star appeared after I had played the first release. I am heartily in favor of the plan of contracting for star series when the stars have a real box office value, because it affords me protection against the loss of the second release to any of my competitors. I go the limit in boosting every picture shown in my theatre and should I have only agreed to take the first picture and spent my money and time in exploiting it, then have my competitor come along and secure the next release in which the same star appeared, I would consider myself a poor business man. He would profit from every dollar I had spent on the first star production. Every exhibitor where he has any competition at all, should look far enough ahead to protect himself against his competitor securing the advantage of the first advertising campaign.

The "single picture" policy of booking big star productions might be all right in certain localities where the house is protected by a booking agency controlling several houses, but then there is the possibility of the agency putting the same picture in two houses located only a short distance from one another. Then again the exhibitor has to contend with high prices to be paid for productions. It is just like going to an auction sale where the highest bidder secures the desired article. These bidding contests only go to help in boosting the rental prices on succeeding releases and the prices being asked for big productions to-day have gotten to such a high mark that there is little chance for the exhibitor to make any money on his investment.

Mr. Williams has simply hit the nail on the head, in my estimation, and if the plan can be carried out all over the country, every exhibitor will benefit by it.

Big productions such as "My Four Years in Germany," "Auction of Souls," etc., in which there are no real stars, but which are released on an independent basis and at a time when they are timely and the subject screened is on the tongue of everyone, are, in my estimation, handled with good judgment on the part of the First National, as all these releases proved to be money makes for me.

Yours truly,

Victory Loan Committee's Efforts Appreciated

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and chairman of the Victory Loan Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, is in receipt of a letter from Hon. Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, expressing appreciation not only of the work of the committee but of the assistance rendered in putting over the Victory Loan by all those connected with the motion picture industry who co-operated in any way.

In addition to Mr. Zukor, chairman, the National Association's committee consisted of Walter W. Irwin, George K. Spoor, Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, Al Lichtman and John C. Flinn. Under the supervision of the committee twenty-seven of the films used in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive were revised and retitled and distributed to exhibitors throughout the country during the Victory Loan campaign, twenty-five district chairmen, appointed by the committee, having charge of the bookings in their respective territories.

Stronger Campaign to End Film Thievery

Even more intensive efforts are to be made to stop the theft of films by the Film Theft Committee of the National Association, which in past years has been instrumental in recovering many reels.

A special meeting of the Executive Committee of the Association was recently held to discuss ways and means to end such thievery. The following committee was appointed to assist Chairman Pitman in perfecting details of the fight: B. Adler, George Meeker, Alfred Wise, L. E. Franconi and William Wright.

Brooklyn Bars Showing of "Fit to Win"

Under the impression that the picture was authorized and backed by the U. S. Government for public showings, "Fit to Win," the Public Health Films production was shown at the Grand Opera House, Brooklyn, by the Continental Producing Co., which leased the house for the showing.

The police have stepped in however, closed the house, arrested two of the employees, and revoked the license for exhibition of the picture.

Billie Burke Hostess to Fifty Soldiers

Despite the fact that inclement weather forbade taking of scenes for Billie Burke's new Paramount picture some days ago, fifty wounded doughboys from the Greenhut hospital who were to witness the filming, were given an afternoon's pleasure by Miss Burke.

At her insistence luncheon reservations at the Plaza Grill for the entire party were made. Afterwards the actress took the soldiers to the Globe Theatre.

Richmond Star Ball a Big Hit

About $7,000 Collected Through the Efforts of Picture Folk for Use in Welcoming Back Returned Soldiers

BACK from the big Movie Star Ball in Richmond, Va., many Manhattan picture folk are talking of the success of the affair, which was given at the Gray's Armory in honor of returning Virginia troops.

More than 3,000 people attended while 1,500 more outside were unable to gain admission.

So great was the crowd that turned out, despite the inclemency of the weather, that the sale of tickets was suspended, after every available foot of space in the big building was taken. The picture stars arrived at the Armory in automobiles, after a dinner given in their honor by the local theatre fraternity at Murphy's Hotel. They were introduced by Harry Bernstein, manager for the Colonial, who then turned the management of the events over to Creighton Hale, as master of ceremonies.

After dividing the crowd, so as to obtain moving space, the actors and actresses, amid an ovation from the throng, paraded around the hall, being led by the Lee children and Creighton Hale, followed by "Smiling" Billy Parsons and his pretty wife, Billy Rhodes, Florence Billings, and Jack Alicoate, Ann Luther and Allen Rock, Mrs. Lee and Leon Rodgers.

Jane and Katherine Lee delighted the crowd with dances and songs, singing "Go To the Movies If You Can't Love At Home." Ann Luther danced for fully thirty minutes, Creighton Hale told stories, autographed photographs of the stars were sold, Ann Luther and Florence Billings auctioned off kisses and Billy Parsons and his wife gave imitations.

It was estimated that receipts for the night, including $3,800 collected by the actors and actresses themselves, would amount to something like $7,000, which will be used for entertaining the city's returning soldiers.

Smashing Indictment of Illinois Censor Bill

"Enforce existing municipal laws and state moving picture censorship will not be necessary."

This was the keynote of the opposition to Senator Buck's "statewide censor bill," pending in the Illinois House at a hearing before the judiciary committee which extended well into the night of May 20. Representative Dietrich led the discussion in favor of the bill, pointing out that state censorship would insure Illinois moral pictures.

Walter Irwin, Vice President of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, delivered a straight from the shoulder wallop when he attacked censorship, especially state wide. He said George Creel and his administration of war publicity was a fair sample of what censorship would do, and Illinois wanted no Creels telling the people what they might not see. He sighted how the movie industry was mobilized in Washington early in the war and asked to aid. It was suggested especially that education of the Russian people through the movies was needed to counteract German propaganda.

The meeting was conceded to be one of the most imposing movements against legislation witnessed this session. The active workers were backed by several hundred delegates in Springfield attending the convention of the State Association of Picture Managers.

Another Picture Man Back

Sergeant 1st Corporal Willard Vander Veer of the Photographic Division, Signal Corps, returned from overseas recently after having spent over a year on photographic duty with the A. E. F. Before his enlistment two years ago in the army, Sergeant Vander Veer was on the Camera staff of C. L. Chester, and on release from service will again join the Outing Chester force it is expected.

C. C. Knapp Leaves Films to Manage Show

Charles C. Knapp, well known in the film industry, has returned to his first choice in the show business and is now manager of the Selwyn and Company show, "The Crowded Hour," starring Jane Cowl.

Mr. Knapp is particularly known in the Northwest and Middle West as he first entered the film branch of the show business many years ago for George Kleine, booking "The Last Days of Pompei." In the marketing of films he then affiliated with the General Film Company as salesman and afterwards became manager of their exchange at Minneapolis.

He has since managed several of the film productions such as "Intolerance" and "Cleopatra." Before entering the film industry Mr. Knapp was manager of Rose Stahl's show, also Wright Lorimer's show, "The Shepherd King," Thomas W. Ross in "The Only Son," and "Officer 666."

With the lifting of the port strike at Buenos Aires, resumption of the importation of film has again been made possible, and the shipment of William Fox productions has been resumed to both Argentine and Uruguay.

Dinner Given by Universal Dept. Manager

One of the events in filmdom last week was the second anniversary dinner given by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational and Industrial Department at the Hotel Astor on Saturday, May 24. The occasion marked, as one Universal official expressed it, two years of "startling progress in a field of motion pictures, which, while yet in its infancy, has shown by its marvelous development that it is as rich in promise as was the motion picture industry itself in its first years."

It was brought out during the talks of the afternoon that in spite of the department's youthfulness, the list of productions made in that time compared in size very favorably with any other Universal department. Mr. Levey made the statement that more than 50 subjects had been produced and released, most of them for distribution over selected areas.

Mr. Levey also made the announcement that his department had grown so rapidly, and that demands for further information and service had become so general throughout the country, that he had been compelled to establish branch offices in seven of the country's largest cities. These branch offices, he stated, would serve the territories in which they were situated.

Censor Czar in New York Proposed

Faced with a censorship bill which would give one man the powers of an autocrat over films even before produced, New York City exhibitors attending in force a session of the General Welfare Committee of the Board of Aldermen on May 28, entered strenuous protest, and have forced further consideration of the proposed measure by the Board in executive session.

As introduced the bill would make the License Commissioner, who is appointed by the Mayor, final arbiter of films displayed in New York. It provides for a fine of from $50 to $100, and confiscation of the film should one be given public showing without a permit. The fee for the permit would be one dollar.

Miss Clark's Protege Aids Doughnut Drive

Aleta Dore, tiny protege of Marguerite Clark, and one of the brightest stars of "Good Morning, Judge," the musical comedy playing at the Shubert Theatre, assisted the members of the Stage Women's War Relief at their meeting at the Public Library last week in behalf of the Salvation Army Home Service Fund drive. In a short time she raised two hundred dollars.

New Ohio Theatre Open

The C. & M. Amusement Company has recently opened its new theatre, the Hippodrome, in Marietta, Ohio. Erected at a cost of $150,000, it seats 1,200. Mary Pickford in "Daddy Long Legs" was the opening attraction.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

They're Interested—Do Your Part

LAST week we told you that we were starting a census of the newspapers of the country as to cooperation with motion picture theatres in an effort to find out just exactly what the situation is. Already several hundred replies have been received and though there has been no time to digest their contents as a whole, we can safely say one thing—and that is that the professed attitude of newspapers as a whole is much better than we expected to find.

One of the questions that we asked was: Do you regard motion picture matter as news interest to a considerable volume of your readers.

Ninety per cent. of the replies received answer "Yes," some of them most enthusiastically and a number telling of plans to establish photoplay departments or to increase those already in existence. A few are non committal and pass up that point.

Out of the several hundred blanks that we have surveyed only five have answered an unqualified "No." One of them, the Poughkeepsie Star and Enterprise tells us that it occasionally uses a motion picture item as a "filler" but regards all such news matter as subject to paid advertising rates.

ANOTHER surprise that is supplied by the preliminary survey is the large number of papers which have no photoplay departments which say that they do regard motion picture matter as of interest. The answer to the question why they do not have such departments can generally be traced to the fact that the exhibitors of that town are not advertising. Certainly the vast majority of the papers show their willingness to go more than half way.

In reply to this question a large number of the newspapers complain of the poor quality of matter that they receive and many of them come out with the statement that they will not print the ordinary press agent matter that they get from most of the companies. Some complain that they are getting too much matter, and others that they are not getting the sort that they want.

But we want to say that there is one thing plainly shown on far too many of these answers—and that is that there has been no cooperation on the part of the exhibitors. Many of the replies in which interest in the photoplay is stated it is very evident that the exhibitor knows mighty little about his own daily paper.

During the two years that this department has been running we have been urging as the first essential that you get in touch with your newspaper people. We felt sure that a great part of the trouble was in the lack of "get together" feeling. And we know that we have been right in the great number of cases.

Now's a good chance to start. Have you phoned your newspapers as we asked about filling out and returning this blank? That will start the interest and it may mean a movement that will bring a lot more dollars to your box office.

STILL another thing that this census has shown so far is that advertising of the motion picture houses has greatly improved in the past couple of years. To every town that reports the theatres as poor advertisers there are two that say they are good or satisfactory. One southern city of considerable size says: "We regard motion pictures as one of our best accounts. They appreciate the value of advertising." Another says "Our theatres are good advertisers and increasing their space." There might be quoted dozens of others that prove that the tendency is to better things.

But, to mar the joy of things a little a lot of these papers complain that the local theatres are apparently not able to get the sort of matter they should have to illustrate their advertising.

And on the other hand many of the newspapers declare that they are willing to lend their fullest aid in preparing matter even for the smallest accounts.

Taken all in all, it is high time for the exhibitors as a whole to act. The outlook on the part of the newspapers seems mighty bright. They want to help you and help in the sort of way that pays.

WHILE we are talking newspapers and advertising we want to call your attention to the unusually large amount of matter about advertising that appears in the Exhibitor Service Bureau with this issue. It breaks the record in the history of any trade publication.

This issue, in brief, is an education to most.

There is one of the splendid S. Barret McCormick articles.

L. H. Grandjean tells you of a teaser stunt in a small city and we give the use of one by P. E. Noble, in Seattle. Then there is an article by C. W. Perry, of Minneapolis. And then a lot of other matter, to say nothing of four pages of criticism of newspaper advertising.

It's a good time to get the advertising bug—and start faster on the road to prosperity.

Saenger Publicity Chief Hides Identity of Star in a Teaser Campaign for "Salome"

By L. H. Grandjean
Publicity Director, Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans

I WISH to make it clear at the outset that while this discussion concerns the exploitation of an individual production, it covers points applicable to many productions. I have taken the Fox Film Corporation's "Salome" as an illustration because I wish to direct attention to a particular newspaper campaign, believing that the general style of this campaign may frequently be adapted to other pictures.

It is my opinion that two weeks' newspaper exploitation of a picture is not too great for the average small city, and this article deals with advertising which was done in our circuit towns where the range of population is from 15,000 upwards. In the case of "Salome" we used teaser copy. Such copy, ordinarily, might begin with the name of the attraction, the dates of playing, or any other one point that might be found suitable for the particular attraction to be advertised.

For starting the "Salome" campaign we select the dates, April 18th and 19th, as the points to be emphasized, coupling this up with the theatre name-plate and announcing: "Something's Going to Happen Here April 18th and 19th." A single column space of only one and one-half inches is used, and the first publication is twelve days in advance of the showing of the picture.

On the following day the copy is changed to read: "One Word Tells the Whole Story. What Is It? We'll Tell You Before April 18th and 19th." Again we use one and one-half inches, single column, and feature the dates and the theater name-plate. Gradually, however, the size of the advertisement is increased and the scope of the text broadened. Thus, on the fourth day, we say: "The Suspense Is Awful. Why Can't We Tell You? Is It a He? A She, Or It, What's to be at the Rapides April 18th and 19th?" The type display here continues to be in the date, and the name-plate is used. This advertisement runs two inches deep, single column width.

Four columns, eleven inches, telling the full story

The following day we announce: "Ah! It's a SHE Coming April 18th and 19th—the Tomorrow We'll Print HER Picture." On the sixth day we use seven inches, single column, with a cut of Theda Bara as Salome, her face, however, being masked by routing out her eyes and forehead. Over the cut we announce: "Here She Is!" Below it: "And Now the Question Is WHO IS SHE?" followed by name-plate and dates.

It is Saturday and as no Sunday newspaper is printed in the town where this campaign was first run—Alexandria, La.—we have given our patrons some food for thought over Sunday. On Monday Salome still wears her mask in the illustration of a seven and one-half inch, single column advertisement, and the legend above the cut states: "Now We'll Tell You; She's a Wild Woman." Below the cut are additional details: "Yep, A Wild Woman—and the Most Noted Dancer You or I Ever Heard Of. You'll see April 18th and 19th," and then the name-plate.

So far we have not divulged the nature of the attraction. It may be a stage or a screen play. Our theatre, in this case, is a combination house, but this same campaign was run in other of our towns in which we have photoplay theatres only.

On Tuesday, the eighth day, we use the same Salome illustration used previously, except that the features of Theda Bara are visible (we had two cuts; the one we defaced and this one) and our caption is: "Oh, Look! Her Mask Is Off!—So Now We'll Tell You Her Name. And the Sewing Circle will Have a Live Topic to Discuss. For she is (the cut here) Salome, the Python of Palestine." Then follows more copy, the name-plate and the dates. This advertisement is ten inches deep, single column. And on this day, for the first time since the inauguration of the campaign, we use a press notice and a two-column scene cut in the amusement columns. The cut is selected to fit the story; we always take care that cuts tally with the stories.

Our campaign now is in full blossom and eight inches, double column, are used for our next advertisement. A three-column scene cut illustrates the advertisement and another one of similar size is used in a story in the amusement column. Stress still is laid on the dates—three different mentions, one of them, "The Day After Tomorrow and Saturday," driving home the time.

Drawn Ads—Few Words

By Charles C. Perry

Manager, Strand, Minneapolis

ADVERTISING is like water poured on the garden—it brings results, but still one can't exactly tell how the advertising affected the box office. Without advertising no business will thrive, and with it the real value of it can never be determined, because patrons do not tell what has prompted them to see your show.

It is the personal belief of the writer that in the city the newspapers are unquestionably the best medium for advertising. At the Strand we have made a practice of doing 95 per cent of our advertising in the three daily newspapers, dividing our appropriation equally. Occasionally when we have a picture that is extraordinary and can stand up for a week or a little longer with extra advertising we put up fifty twenty-four-sheet stands.

The Strand seats 1,300 persons, hence we must make the best of a moderate advertising appropriation each week. We could spend much more money in the newspapers, but it is doubtful if the returns would aggregate proportionately larger. The theatre is doing a good business. Its clientele has been developed because of its policy of advertising productions according to their real value and in a modest, sensible way. We have not maintained that every attraction we have played has been "the greatest show on earth." Neither have we lavished a lot of superfluous adjectives upon our advertising space. In each ad. we have had published we have simply told of a coming or current attraction, have played up the star when the star was really popular and a box office value, have played up the story when we thought it was better known to the public than the star, have tried to build up the weak stars, and have preferred to tell of the unique plots, diverse, interesting complications of the plays than to tell of lingerie the star wears.

Perry is strong for hand drawn advertising

Therefore, preferring to be modest in all of our advertising, we admit that as a whole our advertising is not startling, but from experience we do know it is attractive. Making it attractive is an art. The secret of advertising, we believe, is not making your ads. full-page size, but in making them attractive enough to dominate a page, regardless of size. At the present time, with hot weather as the stiffest opposition, free band concerts in the parks, the lakes, ball games, fishing, out-of-door amusement pavilions and motoring appealing to all who appreciate the goodness of nature, we cannot make our present advertising a criterion by which to be generally judged, yet the following paragraphs describe our ideas of getting maximum results from minimum expenditures.

Charles C. Perry

Taking our capacity, previous maximum summer business and the attractions we are to play into consideration, we have adopted the following summer advertising policy, which, after considerable experiment, has proved adequate. We usually change our program twice a week—Sunday and Thursday. On Saturday (the Daily News has a big Saturday edition and no Sunday paper) we run a directory ad of about one column, five inches, or two column, two and a half inches. This depends upon how other theatres construct their ads. With a photograph in the layout and several publicity stories on the same page, we do not think it necessary to use much space in the Saturday or Sunday papers. Our advertising in the Sunday Tribune and Sunday Journal corresponds with that in the Saturday News, and for the same reasons. Doesn't it seem logical that with a photo in the layout and several stories on the amusement pages that a large ad. is not a necessity?

On Sunday your prospective patron has time to read; he reads; he knows that he can find out what your theatre is to show in the amusement section, and it is safe to say that the amusement section is better read than any other. So a program ad. is all that is necessary.

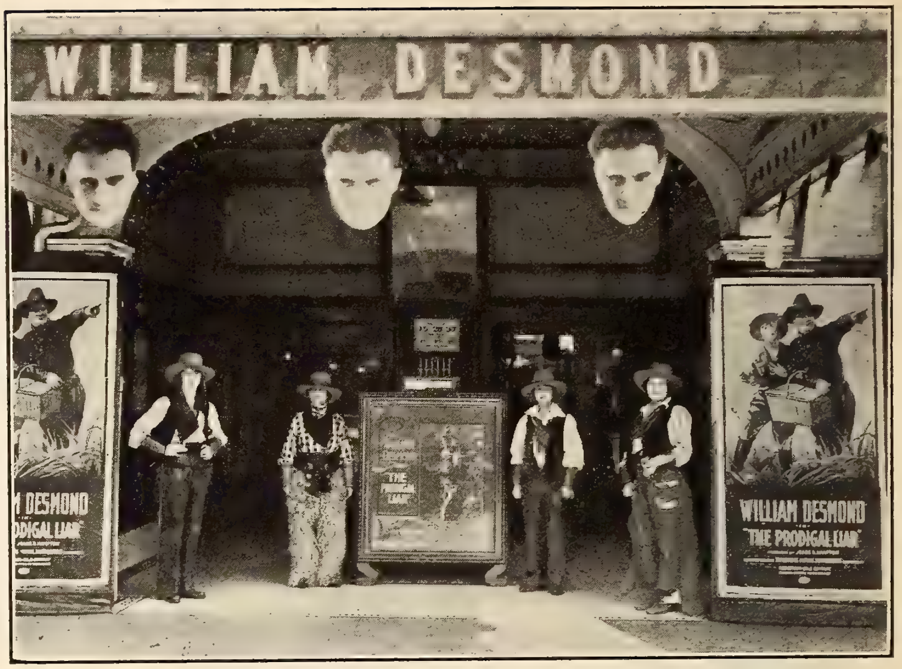
On Monday all three papers carry reviews of our show. We figure that these reviews are as good as the best of advertising. So we do not advertise on Monday. On Tuesday we usually run a small amusement ad. with the other theatres in the regular amusement column. On Wednesday we use commercial space to mention our current attraction's last day's run, call attention to the show starting Thursday, and to mention the coming Sunday's offering. This commercial space during summer months averages about three columns ten inches. Ofttimes we run three-tens in the Daily News (which runs a mid-week movie page) on Wednesday, and in the Tribune Wednesday night and Thursday morning, and the same display in the Journal on Thursday, because of department store advertising in the latter paper on Thursday, which attracts attention of many more women readers (and we figure the women make up a majority of our patrons). On Thursday, in the amusement column, we run an ad. a trifle bigger than the usual program ad. because we know people will wonder if our Sunday to Wednesday show is being continued. Therefore we try to "steal" best position in the amusement column, to show them quickly that we have a new bill.

Friday being the best department store advertising day of the week, we figure it our best day for advertising coming Sunday attractions. The department stores usually run a lot of small type matter and outline drawings; hence we try to get position near them and make our ads. contrastingly as black as possible. By so doing our black spot on the light page dominates the page and makes our ad. just as attractive as if it were twice, or three times as large as it is—three-tens. On Friday also we run a small amusement ad. Though we cannot always get preferred position with our commercial ads., we try to place them on pages that the women will read the most.

A few samples of recent Strand advertisements created by our advertising department, with the idea of making the art work of the ad. describe in some way the character of the story, to attract instant attention to the ad., and to make it easily remembered, are reproduced in these columns. The advertising department maintains that just decorative art work is not sufficient in advertising, but that the art work must, if it is to be effective, be connected to the character of the play, or to the star. And, let us add, that 90 per cent of all our ads. are drawn.

A lot of people sell their pictures in the same way they talk about the weather—think it over.

Instead of always trying to get down to your patrons' level, you'll find it generally safer to get UP to it.



Ushers garbed as "cowboys" at Ray's Garden

This Theatre Shows Whole Cast of Picture in Person to Its Patrons

RAY'S GARDEN theatre, Los Angeles, has just set a new record by having a member of the cast of a picture appear at every evening showing during the course of a week. This was accomplished with the showing of William Desmond in "The Prodigal Liar."

The play opened on Sunday night to a big audience and throughout the week.

In conjunction with "The Prodigal Liar," three men dressed as cowboys added to the pleasure with songs of the West.

The atmosphere of the production was maintained in the dressing of the theatre. Girl ushers appeared in Cowboy uniforms.

Desmond appeared at the opening performance on Sunday night, and received such a cordial reception as to leave no doubt of his popularity in Los Angeles. On succeeding nights Betty Compson, who was Desmond's leading woman in "The Prodigal Liar," Frank Lanning, and Walter Perry, appeared in person.

Association of Impressions in Ads

By S. Barret McCormick
Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

"I REMEMBER your Face—but I don't recall the name."

Something about him had impressed itself indelibly upon your memory. Perhaps a twinkle in his eye had caused you to remark, "Here, light a fresh one," and settling back comfortably in your chair in the smoking compartment you listened as the mile posts flew by, enchanted at his modern Arabian Nights yarns while you made the mental reservation that "here was the biggest, but most entertaining, liar since the fellow that invented the Jonah and the whale story."

Or you met him on the street under the yellow glare of a street lamp, and the ugly scar on his cheek brought up boyhood memories of every outlaw from Jesse Jimmy to Attilla, the Hun.

Or, perhaps, the introductions were as per usual, "Smith Meet Jones, he's a good scout," and the smile on his lips as he repeated the stereotyped "gladtomeetcha" had got under the skin somehow, and you liked the fellow—and the name slipped off into the abyss of forgetfulness while the impression of personality remained.

Man is essentially a symbolist. He sees everything in pictures. His God is a Being, Money the Portrait of Power, Love the Colorful Canvas of Hearts Desire.

He forgets names, but he never forgets a mental picture.

In advertising we are constantly utilizing this association of impressions, and frequently the use we make of it is entirely unconscious, therefore realizing on only a portion of its potency.

A man will be walking along the street, and all of a sudden his mind will leap back twenty years, and he will find himself in an old-fashioned garden surrounded by a white picket fence and an arching gate that creaks on its hinges, and just beyond the stone cupid that is acting as a fountain he will see a girl in a swing, and all about her blooms a garden of lilac.

What did it? Perhaps only the faint whiff of perfume as some one passed, yet this T. B. M. married for years, settled down and happy, finds the ghosts of a boyhood romance haunting him.

The other day a man drove out into the country with a friend, nothing unusual for him to do, but his mental contortions serve as a good example of the association of impressions. The miles sped by, fishing streams came to view frequently, dense woods showed up on the horizon, a barefoot boy trailing behind a dozen cows passed them, but not a single thrill of boyhood days passed over the gentleman in the speedster, but further on down the road they whizzed past a country store, the orthodox kind, false front, some farm machinery out in front, and the awning posts neatly whittled by some jack-knife expert of days gone bye.

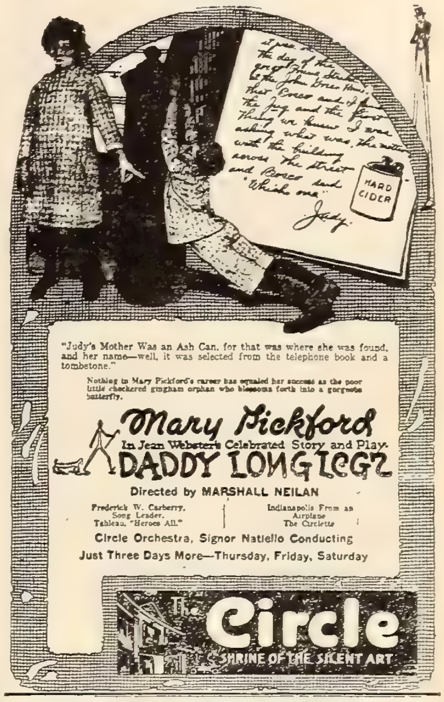
And among the great category of memories what did this fleeting vision of a country store awake in our friend of the twin-six?

Bologne sausage and crackers.

And as though in answer to his silent wish a few miles on down the way the engine gave a few dying gurgles and refused to bulge another step, and the two men passed up the convenience of numerous farm-house telephones and the assistance of friendly cars as they plodded down the dusty road to the waiting feast.

Bologne sausage if served at his club would have justified him in calling a meeting of the house committee, and the dropping of a few bombs among the powers that select the menus, but here was the memory of a boyhood Sunday of a city kid who had driven out into the country with freckled-faced cousins and had lunched on the way. Everything was complete, even to the memory of how he had marveled at the dexterity of the group around the pot-bellied stove who aimed at the Star-Plug box filled with sawdust.



"Judy's Mother Was an Ash Can, for that was where she was found, and her name—well, it was selected from the telephone book and a tombstone."

Nothing in Mary Pickford's career has equaled her success as the poor little checkered gingham orphan who blossoms forth into a gorgeous butterfly.

Just Three Days More—Thursday, Friday, Saturday

The Circle
SHRINE OF THE SILENT ART

Letter spirit still kept up with the Thursday advertising—three more days to go

All of which is a lengthy and perhaps non-essential argument in favor of the association of impressions in advertising.

But it is the knowledge of human nature and its whimsicalities that makes successful advertising just as the little "human touches" in a play often make for its success.

"Daddy Long-Legs," Mary Pickford's recent First National Production, lent itself to the association of impressions, but perhaps, in a different manner than in the foregoing examples.

Very few, fortunately, have memories of an orphan's home, but hundreds of thousands have pleasant recollections of Judy's letters to "Daddy Long-Legs Smith." And therein lay the line of appeal for the advertising of the photoplay, to recall to the minds of the books thousands of readers the joy of Judy's letters.

The campaign of the Circle was one entirely of suggestion, the reader of the advertisement was permitted to look at a portion of Judy's contrasting letters illustrated with scenes suggestive of the text and his imagination did the rest.

Why tell the story?

If one had read the book he had a very definite idea of what the picture should contain, and he sold himself through the medium of previous impressions.

If the book was unknown to him there was sufficient illustration and suggestion of theme to create desire.

ceding the showing. We use a different illustration and the sort of copy we would have used if we hadn't breathed a line about the show in previous advertisements. Seven inches, two columns, are used on the first day of the showing—all type, no illustrations. And on the last day we come back with four and one-half inches, two columns wide, all type.

With our biggest advertisement we run in the news columns our largest scene cut, showing massive settings and hundreds of people, and a story to suit. On the day of the showing we place a two-column scene cut, but the last day we have none—we are expecting our pleased patrons to do most of our advertising on the second day.

This is a flexible campaign. We tested that when the shipment of cuts from one town to another of our circuit delayed the start of the Hattiesburg campaign. It was shrunk from twelve units to seven, and was comprehensive at that.

It is significant that every cut and every word in the advertisements, and in the advance notices, was supplied by the exchange and the William Fox press book, with the exception of the teaser copy, which we wrote. All the necessary material is there. Some of the arrangements of the advertisements might be varied, and you might pick a line from one advertisement and a line from another in the pressbook. But that is largely a matter of taste. The Fox Film Corporation has given everything—even the right for you to use your own discretion! If you're in doubt on a Salome campaign, use the advertisements and stories just as they are in the press book.

"Who's Got the Button?" Plan Used to Exploit Serial

S. G. Honeck, branch manager for Pathe at Milwaukee, has turned out a novel idea for the exploitation of the new serial, "The Tiger's Trail," through the use of special buttons that he is having made for the exhibitors in his territory. The button idea is not new, but in the form that Mr. Honeck is using it there is distinct novelty.

The top section of the button is blue, a white band across the center and the lower section red. At the top the name of the theatre is printed and at the bottom "The Tiger's Trail," with a number stamped across the white band. These buttons are numbered consecutively as high as the number ordered by the exhibitor. In case he orders 3000 there will be probably fifty duplicate numbers.

It is the plan to distribute these on an announced day prior to the showing of the first episode and at the same time to carry announcements on the screen that persons meeting others with buttons of the same number are entitled to one pass each, good for the entire showing of the serial. It is suggested that the exhibitor see to it that some of these duplicate buttons are found early so as to increase the word of mouth advertising. Teaser slides such as these are suggested:

No. 1—Did you match your button tonight?

No. 2—Button, button, who's got your button?

No. 3—If you found your button, step up and get your pass at the box office.

No. 4—Meet at the Grand and find your button.

Motion Pictures Called in During Good Roads Campaign

Once more motion pictures have been called in as the basis of a crusade. The Dallas, Texas, Automobile Club has been conducting a crusade for good roads and the basis for this has been motion pictures of the many muddy stretches of highway in that section. Dallas theatres and those in the smaller towns through the section have been showing these views.

McCormick Writes on Association of Impression in Motion Picture Advertising

Imaginative impressions as well as impressions of actuality, can find valuable place among selling arguments. Life insurance is sold almost entirely through the medium of fear or the creation of imaginative impressions of disaster. Likewise amusement advertising can suggest through the medium of association of the emotions of the play's characters with the feelings of the advertisement's reader a thought that such things are not without the bounds of their own affairs.

It might be unkind and result in a hard time for the so-called head of the house, to suggest to his wife that she might come home any time and find hubby vamping the parlor maid just as it is done in the play, but it would undoubtedly be effective advertising.

The world thinks first of itself, the people of the drama are unreal only to the man who writes the play.

Impressions, Memories, Hopes are all vital factors in advertising particularly in amusement advertising, where we play upon the finer sensibilities of the human organism and appeal not infrequently to man's inherent selfishness for he is basically selfish, within himself he builds the temple of his gods who are the only fair gods, his memories pleasant or unpleasant are the only visions of the past, his imaginative wanderings in the future are the only trips to Utopia.

How much more effective will it be in advertising if we let man rattle the shutters on his own house of imagination instead of merely saying, "This is a ghost story."

The Greatest Automobile Racing Picture Ever Made

Wallace Reid and Theodore Roberts IN THE ROARING ROAD

AUTOMOBILE NIGHT IS TUESDAY NIGHT

Four full columns used Sunday of the opening

First thing that Mr. Noble did was to get hold of the first print of the picture and call in the members of the automobile dealers association to view it. They immediately endorsed it and with this backing he placed his proposition before the newspapers to arrange for cooperative advertising. The result was a "double truck" in the Sunday Journal and page displays in the other papers.

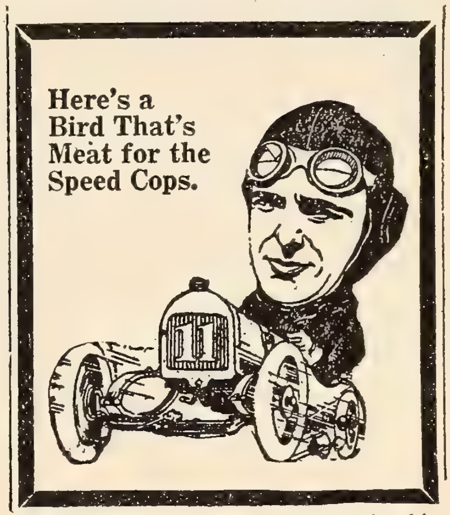
In the double page display that we have reproduced here the advertisement of the Liberty was linked up with that of the Stutz car, one of those that was used by Reid in making the picture. The result was that with the use of the arrow in the Stutz display that space was practically given over to the benefit of the Liberty and no one could even glance at the entire display without finally having the punch put in the theatre announcement.

But that wasn't the end of the cooperation with the automobile industry. Tuesday was set aside for automobile night and special display advertisements were carried in the newspapers stating that all the big people in the industry would be there that evening and inviting every owner of a machine to attend. Noble figured on not only the increased business that would come from the stunt alone, but on the added publicity that would be given by having hundreds of cars headed for the Liberty and lining up there during the performance.

Now Noble believes in pulling all the strings when he starts to work and so he did not overlook the possibilities of a parade. With the opening of the engagement on Sunday there appeared on the streets of Seattle a big racing car bearing "11" in huge numerals—the number of Reid's car in the film race—and in a cloud of smoke and with a roar of the engines this drove up to the theatre at 10.30 Sunday morning. Then on Tuesday there was the big street parade with this car heading the procession and a couple of Stutz racers following. Permission had been obtained from the city authorities to allow the cut-outs to be open for thirty minutes and with the dozens of cars in line the noise could be heard for fifteen blocks, and no one in hearing distance failed to find out what the celebration was all about.

That was one angle of the campaign. The other one was the teaser. Now Noble is strong for the teaser idea, but he realizes that it should be used only now and then and only in case of a picture that fully justifies this kind of exploitation.

On Tuesday before the Sunday showing Noble started off with two column, one inch displays carrying only the picture of the racing car driven by Reid and then a very short sentence with it. On Wednesday this came down to three inches single and on Thursday to 2½ inches single. During all of this time there was nothing to show that the advertisements even referred to a motion picture. There were ten of these used each day and they in a measure read into each other. Here are some of the other lines that were used, each in a separate advertisement:



Here's a Bird That's Meat for the Speed Cops.

Not an intimation, it's a picture in this

An inferno of flying wheels

Your Idea and Ours

MAJESTIC THEATRE, Detroit, has followed suggestions appearing in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Special Service Section on Dorothy Dalton in "The Home Breaker," and has done it well. We advised in the April 26 issue that exhibitors should tell the public that this is a different sort of a picture from the most in which she has appeared, and added: "Don't be content to say that it is 'different.' Just omit that word and tell why it is." And a little later on we suggested that she had been so often seen in vampire roles that it was a good opportunity to play her as an antidote for vampires, and this the Majestic has done well.

And then that was made all the stronger with the line under the title: "You've never seen her in a role like this. Oh, how she hates vamps."

Splendid advertising that, even if it occupies only six inches across three columns.

Money talks—and the loudest in newspaper space.

GEORGE FISCHER, manager of the Alhambra, Milwaukee, hit upon a novel plan to exploit "Mary Regan," starring Anita Stewart. Miss Stewart had been shown in a feature dealing without society life, another with a highly romantic flavor, and the third had to be different, so he emphasized the underworld part. His advertisement the day the feature started was five columns, ten inches, and brought out the sensational parts of the picture. Miss Stewart, with a decidedly terrified look upon her face, is seen in the centre with a telephone. On either side are ranged pictures guaranteed to make the most jaded fan take notice—on the left a picture of a hilarious group about a table with drinks being served. The other picture represents the shooting scene of the cabaret, with a policeman in the background.

The wording in the advertisement is limited, one sentence referring to the pre-natal influence that ruled the life of Mary Regan, and the other asked the question, "What would you have done in her place?" The name of the star and the name of the play are shown in big black letters and a short paragraph devoted to an explanation of the story:

> The greatest production of Miss Stewart's entire career. The story read by twenty million people in the Metropolitan magazine and New York Evening Journal and in best selling books.

Let's make this the summer of our discontent with the mediocre.

THERE isn't any reason why just as much care should not be given to the preparation of heralds as to newspaper advertising. Our main objection to this sort of advertising is that it is sloppily done and that "cheap" is written all over it and this sort of crudeness puts the photoplay on a lower plane that it should be. Yet there are lots and lots of places where it is necessary to use the herald to reach the public and it cannot be done through the newspapers.

It was the witching hour of midnight, the croon of the night wind and murmur of the waves against the rocks that hid them from the huge summer hotel were the music to which she had been skipping over the sands when first he saw her.

They were truants, these two, runaways from the treadmill of life.

He had called and asked if he might join in her revel. Something in his voice reassured her. So they ran, and swam, and talked. Finally, "I dare you to dive off that rock," she said. When he came back she was gone. He had failed to learn her name or whence she came.

He haunted the beach nightly without avail. She was the first woman handsome, wealthy Roger Sloan had ever really wanted and failed to interest.

He often passed her in the hotel corridors, but her maid's uniform and averted face masked her.

Of course he finds her.

Thus began the story of Marie, the mystery girl from nowhere, because of

Two cuts secured from the exchange were used with "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" and there are some interesting selling arguments. The name of Griffith is properly brought out and then are listed his various creations.

The cut in the herald on the Stewart picture is even more attractive, especially at this time of the year, since it shows the two figures in bathing suits. Here the illustration has been counted upon to induce the public to read the rather long selling argument to the left, and we feel pretty sure that it has that result. The selling argument is based on the meetings with the mysterious girl on the beach and the romance idea is strongly put over.

Now especially this section violates most people's ideas of herald, but we believe that it properly violates them and that it got a whole lot more people to the Third Street theatre than would have one of the mere masses of type that fail to pay attention to appearance and therefore do not attract the eye.

They are a decided relief from the usual herald stuff.

The bucket that went to the well too often wasn't made of advertising.

CAN'T help mentioning it when one of the finest theatres in the country, and the head of the biggest circuits in the world from the standpoint of number of theatres, follows in entirety the advice that was given in one of our Special Service Sections. But this is just what has been done by the Strand, New Orleans, in exploiting Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil." Look at this display and turn back to page 3218 of the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for May 17.

We advised exhibitors who liked cuts to turn back to the previous issue and see the advertising that appeared there EXCLUSIVELY, and this is what the Strand did and used one of them. One of the selling talks that we gave was used with a slight change—that of making reference to the "snappiest road house"—and we think improved it. And we repeat the talk here:

> She was the sensation of the city—the leading dancer at the snappiest road house this side of Monte Carlo.
> All the town knew about her beauty and her "purple past."

They that keep their heads in the clouds never see the wildflowers that bloom in the fields.

HERE is an unusually strong instance of the "personal guarantee" plan of advertising and knowing the way that Leo Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, has put these over in the past we are not hesitant in saying that we feel sure this campaign brought big business to his house.

Mr. Landau is a wise manager and he never gives his personal endorsement to a production which he does not feel sure will please his patrons. He doesn't let his personal likes enter into the matter, but looks at the productions from the standpoint of his audiences.

On the Friday before the open of "For Better, For Worse," he used seven inches three columns in answering his own question, "Do the people believe what the theatres say?" in this manner:

> Never exaggerate the quality of the play.
> Do not announce every play as the best ever.
> Don't advertise about the "big crowds."
> Sooner have half of the theatre than to MISREPRESENT anything.
> These are Butterfly theatre policies.
> Adhering to these strict rules: The Butterfly announces for next week, starting Sunday, what it considers one of the most remarkable screen dramas ever produced, with the greatest cast of actors ever in one play.

Then it goes ahead with the name of the picture and the list of the players.

And though it is not the habit of this theatre to use a lot of superlatives in announcing a play, we wish to assure all lovers of good drama that Cecil B. De Mille's "For Better, For Worse," in which the above named all-star cast appears, is one of the really marvelous plays of the year. In fact, after reviewing the drama we could not recall ever having seen a better one. That is saying a great deal. But, as Milwaukee theatregoers know by this time, the Butterfly doesn't make such promises about every play—only when we really know that we have the article.

Both of these displays were in black type, with heavy borders, but there was three-quarters of an inch of white space all around them, so that they stood out.

On the Sunday of the opening eight inches across the top of one of the photo pages were used.

HERE'S a clever idea. Bert Lytell was a favorite in Albany during the time that he was a member of the dramatic stock company there and the Leland theatre is determined to make him equally popular in pictures. So the Leland put on Bert Lytell pictures for two solid weeks, with semi-weekly changes, and advertised this as the "screen stock season."

In making this announcement there was not even a picture of the star used and the entire repertoire was listed. That was good work in this case, for the one thing that was being sold to the people of Albany was Lytell as a picture star and this was the way to sell him convincingly.

Lot's of advertisers merely buy space—and then when they get through with it only mere "space" remains.

TWO things are wrong with this display of the Strand theatre, Tacoma, Wash. There is too much duplication and as the result the name of the picture and that of the star are not displayed as well as they should have been. The second bad feature is that a greater portion of the detail of the half-tone is entirely lost and at least the copy of the paper that we have before us fails entirely to give the slightest clue to what the scene is supposed to represent.

Now directly under the name of the star we have the selling talk, which reads:

> Frothing, straining dog teams racing across the Yukon ice fields to save all a man and a maid hold dear. Rough men at death grips in the snow, a fight for life with dull, yellow gold and a raven-haired girl as the stakes. Jammed with terrific surprises.

This would have been all good if the matter had been indented about a half inch on either side, and had it not been duplicated in the matter below the cut almost in the same languages. And then in the upper left-hand corner we have the same

WITH the material available the Zelda theatre, Duluth, Minn., got a mighty good display in this eight inch, triple column, display on "A Heart in Pawn." We have commented before on the fact that the Duluth papers run either to the heavy Gothic type or to the open face or outline varieties, and therefore the designer of displays in that city is not able to get much variety.

Here the cut has been relied upon to bring out the personality of the star and the title made the main thing, and then instead of using a lot of adjectives there has been listed a number of the things that will be seen in the production. We are mighty glad to see that this carefully avoids the superlative and therefore it is much more apt to get the crowds to the theatre.

Safest way is—better than the other fellow.

THIS is what we call real co-operation, and the instance is that of the Shreveport, La., Journal. In its Saturday edition an entire page is given to motion picture news and advertising with the result that it is one of the most interesting pages that we have seen considering the size of the city.

H. L. Swain, Shreveport manager for the Saenger Amusement Co., which, by the way, was launched in that city and has now grown to the biggest chain in the world, took the advice that was long ago given in these pages and many times repeated and went to the owners of the paper and pointed out to them that the paper was giving pages to baseball and other sports from which little or no revenue was received, and that there were far more people interested in motion pictures. The argument went over strong. The Saenger theatres use two full columns in announcing their bills and we want to say that it is mighty good advertising in that it sells the TODAY attraction and merely mentions the ones for later in the week at the larger houses.

BILL BURNHAM, COWBOY, IN JAIL

Johnny Wiggins on Way to Florida to Protect Chum's Interests

"I'll Make It Hot For The Man Who Sent Bill To Jail," Says Wiggins.

Arcadia, Fla., May 1—Johnny Wiggins, the daring athlete, is expected to arrive this afternoon on his way from the East. His visit here has nothing to do with athletics. Johnny is coming here to help his erstwhile pal, Bill Burnham, the former cowboy, who is now serving a jail sentence.

It recently developed that Bill's father died in Florida, leaving a vast fortune to Bill and his sister, Janet. Bill has prevailed upon Johnny to take charge of the fortune and also keep fortune-hunting men away from Janet.

Wiggins has information that a broker has already gotten hold of some of this fortune and has been speculating with it.

It has also been learned that Wiggins' real name is Fred Stone, and that the Artcraft Picture Company has sent a movie camera man to record the expected excitement for the benefit of people visiting the Strand. The film will be published as "Johnny, Get Your Gun," and will be on view for to-day, Friday and Saturday.

MOVIE NOTES.

You remember Fred Stone as the scarecrow in "The Wizard of Oz," and as the comedian of other stage successes.

Although Stone is new to the screen, "Johnny Get Your Gun," the attraction at The Strand for the week end, being his second, this is a fact nevertheless:

"Stone is the unexpectest, liveliest, athleticist, tumblingest sunuvagun that ever cavorted under the all recording eye of the camera."

Thanks for your attention.

Good afternoon!

I'll see you at the Strand this evening.

HERE is a very clever idea and one that is being used with great success by the Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky. It has been running since April 24 and will appear regularly in the Thursday issue of the Louisville Times where it gets a position very near the top of the woman's page each day.

Practically all of the matter here is devoted to gossip about the current attraction, it being in this case Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun." The main article is headed "Bill Burnham, Cowboy, in Jail" and then tells the story of Burnham going to jail and that his cowboy chum is on the way to Florida in his interest. All the matter is kept strictly in keeping with the story of the picture. There are some brief "Movie Notes" all of which concern the current attraction, a short item about Jimmy Cruze who directed the picture and then under the heading "Coming Strand Attractions" there is a little story about "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." Then there is a small "ad." on the Stone attraction.

It's not the color of the binding, but what's in the book.

REGENT THEATRE, Pittsburgh, has a good effect in this hand-drawn and combination display in the Sunday papers announcing the bill for the week. The Regent is really a neighborhood theatre, in that it is away from the business section of Pittsburgh proper and it is necessary to advertise the two attractions for the week.

Here it has rightfully featured the Elsie Ferguson picture because this was the first to be shown. The line effect gets the eye quickly and then one is attracted to the face of Miss Ferguson. Her name and that of the picture stand out plainly and then there is the selling talk. We think that the Regent overlooked a bet in not stating that this is taken from the Saturday Evening Post story which made such a deep impression on all who read it, especially since the title of the picture is not the same as that of the story.

IN appearance mighty attractive, but in selling power mighty week. That sums up our opinion of this three column, ten inch display of the Liberty theatre, Spokane. We cannot imagine an advertising writer failing to mention that this was made from the celebrated play that ran so long in New York.

That might have been excused if the selling point on the picture itself was brought out. There is a good line in "For they thought she was common clay, but she turned out to be pure gold." That's all very good as far as it goes, but there is nothing to show who "they" are and the quotation from Kipling, while worth using in any advertisement on this picture does not sufficiently explain either. Where you have stated that this picture is made from the celebrated stage success you might get away with the unconvincing selling lines that the Liberty has used, but not without them. Here the picture has been left to make its appeal purely on Fannie Ward's popularity.

Some times a turned over page is a turned down opportunity.

Combination of the gray figure and the heavily lettered title preceded by "The biggest thing De Mille ever did," is certain to get the eye, and then the figure of the director is made the largest, with Gloria Swanson and Elliott Dexter brought out fairly strong, and then Theodore Roberts, Wanda Hawley and Tom Forman in smaller heads. This serves to carry the idea of an all-star cast stronger than would the mere statement.

Here is the selling argument used:

"For Better, for Worse," is a picture so great, so amazing, so spectacular, so gentle, so violent, so compelling, that mere words fail to describe the tremendousness of it.

"For Better, For Worse" answers the tantalizing problems of the riddle, "WOMAN."

"For Better, For Worse" as a drama has rarely, if ever, been paralleled in motion picture history.

"For Better, for Worse," for supreme art, sets a new standard on either the screen or stage.

"For Better, For Worse" establishes beyond argument the supremacy of Cecil B. De Mille as a motion picture director.

Box matter at the bottom gives some points about the showing at the Imperial.

Somehow complete enjoyment and thought about the heat don't seem to run together.

TRUE enough, this violates most of the so-called "rules" of advertising, but it remains that it is mighty good advertising and we haven't the slightest doubt but that it packed the theatre. And in such a case what does any one care about any text book of how to advertise except that of good sense?

Strand theatre, Hartford, Conn., used fifteen inches across three columns for this and then did not mention the name of the star of the title of the picture until the space was over half used. It stamped the advertising as belonging to that theatre by using the attractive name plate first and then going into the selling argument. Then came the Anita Stewart and the title and then a few short expressive sentences about the production itself.

Read over that selling talk, for it is a good one and the typing has been done just right. And it is so different from the ordinary Sunday motion picture theatre display that we are sure that it came pretty close to attracting hundred 100 per cent.

Horater's Campaign on "The Red Lantern" Sets a High Mark for Even the Alhambra

HARVEY C. HORATER, the live-wire manager of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., so well planned and carried out his campaign on "The Red Lantern" that he is carrying this Nazimova attraction for a second week. He believes in doing things on a big scale when he starts in and in this exploitation he went himself one better.

Mr. Horater has played all of the Nazimova productions with success and he has been especially enthusiastic about "The Red Lantern" since he saw a number of the stills during a visit here several weeks before the production was completely finished. He told us then that he intended putting this picture over for a big splash and he has done so.

Now when Horater goes after a special run with a picture he uses all three of the newspapers liberally, then puts up all the paper that the town will hold and in addition uses every other element of exploitation. On the Sunday a week before the opening of the picture he printed in facsimile form a telegram from Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, declaring that "The Red Lantern" surpassed all of his expectations. This was such unusual advertising that it got attention.

On the day before the opening and opening day he used 160 and then during the first week of the run ninety inches a day, carrying the same campaign into the second week. These advertisements were very varied, different displays being used in each paper. In fact Mr. Horater exhausted the specially drawn advertisements that he was furnished by Metro and the most striking of the scene pictures in getting this variety in his advertising. In the specimens that we have reproduced you see he used few words, but drove the smash home with the picture.

Now when he got to the paper question he went just as strong. There were a hundred of the striking six sheets used, 150 three sheets, fifty 16-sheet stands, fifty 24-sheets, 500 one sheets and a thousand teaser streamers. In addition to this Mr. Horater went strong to the suggested plan of hanging a red lantern on the door-knobs of residences, and 2,500 of these were employed. Hangers were used for automobiles.

But that wasn't all. He proceeded to get the co-operation of the music and the five and ten-cent stores in giving special window displays on "The Red Lantern Song." In addition, while he was in New York Mr. Horater suggested to the Universal Music Co. to have music rolls made of this song, and as the result these were also displayed in various stores, giving additional advertising.

Exterior decorations were provided with a capony hung with cut-outs of lanterns and all of the lights in red to carry out the effect. At each end of the canopy there were paintings, 30 by 40 inches, done by the Alhambra's artist, and in front of the canopy was a 3 by 40-foot banner on oilcloth carrying the name of the picture.

In the lobby and the foyer various sizes of lanterns and cut-outs of Nazimova as she appears in the picture were used in profusion, most of these hanging from the ceiling. In the theatre proper the decorations were in the richest kind of Chinese style, but not overdone. The stage was set with Oriental rugs and lanterns with incense burning.

Ushers costumed in Chinese style added the final touch that was needed.

How New York Stages the Show

COMEDY reigns at the three big New York motion picture houses this week with comedy dramas at all of them, male stars at two of the theatres and a woman at the third, while all three have slapstick comedy, with the same picture shown at two theatres and a reissue at the third.

Douglas Fairbanks is the star at the Rivoli in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," one of the typical Fairbanks sort of pictures with lots of stunt stuff in it. Comedy is added to the Pictorial with a Mutt and Jeff, and the slapstick is provided with a Sunshine reissue, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells." There is an effective scenic setting for the descriptive fantasy, "Down in the Coal Mine."

Strand is showing Madge Kennedy in "Leave It To Susan," which is full of laughs and which is shown with an unusual variety of effects. The straight comedy element is provided by the latest Mack Sennett, "Love's False Faces." There is a special setting used during the playing of the overture, selections from "The Mikado," and there are two double solo numbers on the bill.

Charles Ray has one of his favorite sort of picture in "The Busher," with a combination of humor and heart interest. "Love's False Faces" is also being shown at the Rialto. There is a clever arrangement of the scenic, stage settings and the Greek Evans solo "Three for Jack," and the pictures of the mountain home of Sergeant York get a big hand. Rialto magazine is unusually varied this week.

Next week the Rivoli will repeat "The Red Lantern," the first time that this has been done at either the Rialto or Rivoli. Tom Moore will be seen at the Rialto in "One of the Finest," while the Strand will show the latest Griffith-Artcraft, "True Heart Susie."

Strand Theatre

EFFECTS galore are introduced in the feature at the Strand this week by Managing Director Jos. L. Plunkett. In the first portion of "Leave it to Susan" in which Madge Kennedy stars there is a succession of scenes on and off a railway train and here all the effects of stopping, starting, the bells whistles, etc., are reproduced in a way that adds to the enjoyment of the picture without becoming tiresome.

Selections from "Mikado" form the overture. The curtains arise on the orchestra with the house dark and only the red stage curtain with the stage lights in red. With the start of the music these go into purple and the stage curtains part revealing a Japanese setting with a quaint bridge effect and in front a lake filled with water lillies. The effect of the moving clouds is given and there is a gradually dawning until the lights come up to full hold.

Strand Topical opens with Pathe pictures of the first visit to this port of the German liner "Imperator" after four years, when she lay idle at her home docks to prevent seizure by the Allies. And this time she comes flying an American flag and bringing home American soldiers—including Sergeant Alan C. York, whom Gen. Pershing has declared the greatest soldier of the war. York gets all sorts of applause. "King of Clubs" is played for this and continues through Gaumont pictures showing a whale that was run down by the U. S. Gunboat "Marblehead."

From the same source come pictures of a baby tank demolishing an old building at Miami, Fla. The effects of the motor and of the crash of the falling walls is reproduced from the wings while "On Tiptoe" is played by the orchestra, and continues through Gaumont pictures of Vedrines, the French aviator, starting on his last flight. Then there comes a relief from the news picture with Pathe-Ditmars views of wild horses, shows the zebras and some others and especially their antics with a dummy man. "March of the Dwarfs" is used with this.

Then we have "Topics of the Day" with the unusual number of laughs, including: "Let's hope the next time they kill Villa they will cremate him" and "Paris once sent us a message 'For God's sake hurry.' Let's send the same message back to Paris." "A la Bien Aime" is played during these, and then there come Pathe pictures showing the guard of destroyers in the Azores to guard the NC-4 on the next leg of its flight to Europe. Rear Admiral Plunkett gets a good hand and then there follow some views of the harbor and city of Ponta Delgada. "Mene Hula" is the music. International presents some views of the congressional committee visiting battlefields of the Argonne and some of the scenes where the Americans fought. "Mefistofele" accompanies. To the music of "Viscount Nelson" Pathe follows with pictures of the new British air monster, R-33.

Then starts the punch of the final portion of the Topical. International gives us some pictures with the Belgians in Germany, showing the marching heroes in Dusseldorf where they get a big hand from the audiences. "Pozieres March" is used. The same pictures include views of German women voting for the first time and then some scenes showing why the Belgians demand an indemnity, picturing the ruins that the Huns left in their wake. Organ music is used during these and then there come Pathe pictures of the German press representatives at Versailles, including shots of the editor of the Vorwaerts and Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau. During these there is only a roll of muffled drums and the audience views the pictures in silence. Then the final punch comes with International pictures showing Gen. Mangin decorating the heroic "Iron Brigade" which made good at Verdun the slogan, "They shall not pass." "Pere de la Victoire" is played here and adds much to the punch of the pictures.

Next we have a double scenic-educational from Pathe. First there is a trip to the village of St. Michel, France, with some pretty shots of the waterfalls and the famous bridge that resembles a huge snake. Then there are pictures of making pottery in Dahomey and we see the woman carrying in the clay and the men at work on the vessels. There is a good laugh with the flashes of the way that the babies are tied on their backs as they go through their labors.

Malcolm McEachern, basso, then sings "Drake Goes West," and as an encore, and it is a persistent one, "Up From Somerset." It is interesting to watch the increased popularity of the old English songs these days. Undoubtedly it is largely the effect of the part that the British played in the war. For genuine enjoyment of the audiences it is impossible to select better music than the old English songs, and our own famous Southern melodies.

"Opera Bouffe" is used at the screening of "Leave It to Susan," and it is during the first portion of this picture that we have all of the train effects that we have already noted, down to the exhaust of the airbrakes when the train comes to a stop. With the appearance of the man that Susan takes for the bandit, "Vivienne" is used, and then as she walks away from the train with the dog, "Al Mulino." This continues with more of the train effects as it pulls out and leaves her behind and here "Admiration," without the introduction, is used. For the scenes where the bandits hold up the train there is an agitato and then with the scenes of the girl, "Noveletten." There comes up a rainstorm and the effects that are used here add to the realism. "Schubert Songs" follows through up to the title, "Let Me Go," and here there is a change to a portion of "Assassination of the Duke of Guise," and then the organ takes the music over with the title, "Your Recommendations Are Excellent," and continues it for eighteen minutes.

With the scene where Andy lassoes Dawson the orchestra comes back with "Luline" and "Templeweight," following through. When the bandit tells the girl that he must pay her with a kiss, we have "Il Maniscalco" used and then with the change of scene to back east, "Erstwhile Susan" is played. When the girl and Dawson are seen together, "Souvenir de Printemps" is used until the girl declares that she can prove that he is a bandit and here "In the Starlight" is played, changing back to "Souvenir" as the father explains that he sent the message himself and the truth begins to dawn on Susan.

Miss Maude Allen, mezzo soprano, then sings "Roses of Picardy," and "Values," which were delightfully rendered, and then we have the newest Mack Sennett comedy, "Love's False Faces." Cast for this includes Chester Conklin and Marie Prevost, and there is slapstick in the greatest abundance and a lot of the funny automobile stuff that never fails to get hearty laughs. "Take Your Girl to the Movies" is played at screening, and then there follows through "Ostrich Walk" and "Clarinet Marmalade," the organ then taking over the music until the title, "Second Honeymoon," when "Eyes That Say I Love You," "Skeleton Jangle," and "Tiger Rag" are played. Effects are fully used, even while the organ is playing. Smith's "Triumphal March" is the organ solo.

Rialto Theatre

COMEDY rules the bill at the Rialto this week and the generous use of popular and catchy airs that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld has put in the feature and in the Sennett comedy add a whole lot to the enjoyment. Any one who doesn't go away from the Rialto this week delighted with the world doesn't need motion pictures—he needs a doctor.

"Russlan und Ludmilla," a number that is rarely heard, is the overture and this is played with the lights of gold on the orchestra and pinkish gold through the house. There is a marked contrast of the music of the east with that of Russia here, including a chorus based on a Persian melody, a ballet movement from a Turkish theme and several Tartar airs.

Now watch the effective arrangement that has been made with the scenic, "Labrador and Newfoundland," a Post picture. There are some beautiful views of waterfalls with the effects given and then toward the end there are sea views which were taken from the bow of a sailing craft. Now just as these scenes are shown the curtains part and in the panel at the left there is a view of the tossing sea and at the right a light house on the rocky coast, flashing every few seconds, and then just with the end of the picture Greek Evans, in sailor garb appears and sings "Three for Jack" most effectively. The lights are first blue on this and then red comes up in the sky in the side panels, indicating the coming of the dawn. This arrangement gets prolonged applause. Grieg's "Allegretto" from "Sonata" No. 2 is the music for the scenic.

Judging from the variety that the Rialto Magazine contains this week Production Manager Joe La Rose must have been kept mighty busy "pickin' 'em out." It opens with Gaumont pictures of "The Laddies from Hell" on review. The very title brings forth a burst of applause and "From the Highlands" is played by the orchestra.

There Are Too Many Valuable Articles Here to Miss Any

THANKS to the cooperation of the exhibitors there is always a lot of matter in these pages worth reading, but we are so proud of the appearance this week that we don't want you to miss a bit of it.

If you are having a busy time at the theatre as you come by this, take your copy of the NEWS home tonight and sit up a little bit later and read all these stories. It'll be worth while for every exhibitor.

There is McCormick's article, another about the way that Noble put over a teaser campaign out in Portland, accounts of the way that Horater in Toledo and the Rialto in Des Moines put over "The Red Lantern." Then there is a story about a teaser campaign in one of the smaller cities by Grandjean, of the Saenger Amusement Company, and others worth while.

Read 'em all. They were built for you.

Pathe shows children ushering in the Spring with a dance in Central Park and here "Jack and Jill" is played. There are lots of negroes shown in this picture and it is not going to delight audiences in the south.

Gaumont takes us to Chicago and shows scenes in the "We Want Milk" crusade with Poppyland" as the accompaniment. From the same source come pictures of high school boys in a boat race at Boston and then shifts us to Oakland, Cal., where University of California girls are shown in a rowing race. "Giddy Giddyap" is the music for both of these. Then come the laugh-provoking "Sayinks of Toplitsky" which include: "Russia is the only country in the world that has tried prohibition—and look at it" and "It's a sad thing when you see a bride marching to the altar with orange blossoms on one arm and a lemon on the other." "Jewish Melody" is used at the start of these pictures with "He's Had No Loving For a Long, Long Time" following through.

Under the caption "Congress passes the suffrage bill" International gives us pictures of Champ Clark and some of the suffrage leaders to the accompaniment of "Serenade." Then we have scenes with Secretary Baker the guest of Secretary Daniels on a German U-boat and here "Plymouth Ho!" is used continuing through Gaumont pictures of a big submarine going ashore at Plymouth, Eng. Then come the Pathe pictures of the destroyers in the Azores, with the scenics omitted, and "Charmer Waltz" played. Next are the Pathe pictures of the "Imperator" with "American Festival March."

Right here we get one of the most effective bits that we have seen in a long time. All New York and for that matter all the nation has been reading a lot about Sergeant York, the Tennesseean who proved such a terror to the Huns, and here we have pictures not alone of him but "where they wait for him down in Pall Mall, Tennessee." We know a whole lot about that mountain country and we have been disgusted just about every time we have seen one of these so-called scenics that attempts to picture these mountain people and supplies a lot of overdrawn, fake stuff. But here we have the genuine. It's real—the picture of York's old mother and the other children and of Grace Williams who is waiting for him. "American Festival March" is continued through these. Then the final punch is the same as at the Strand with Gen. Mangin decorating the French heroes of Verdun, shown here to the music of "Sambre et Meuse."

With the lights in blue and French horns dominating at the start Miss Ann Rossner and Emanuel List sing the duet from "Les Hugenots."

Then Charles Ray in "The Busher" in which comedy prevails. "Reuben Fox Trot" is played for the opening scenes in the country town and then with the views of the ballplayers on the train "More Candy" is used. The theme, "Waiting for You" is introduced with the first pictures of Mazie and continues until Jim Blair interrupts the sweethearts when "The Trombone Man" is played twice through, followed by "The Girl Behind the Gun" also used twice and then "At the Jazz Band Ball."

With the title "In the long shadows" and the picture of the boy and the girl the theme comes in again changing to "Shadowland" for the Shadow social, a numbered selection with the scene sharing the lunch basket and then at the title. "The national game's only rival" "Pop, Goes the Weasel." When the ticket agent appears with the telegram "By Heck" is used with cowbell effect. Then with the boy and girl together in the moonlight together they then come back. Then with the first scenes in St. Paul the organ takes up the music continuinug until we see the crowd of country folk in the grandstand when "Speed 'Er Up" is used by the orchestra, changing with the start of the game to "Step Lively" as the game starts.

Again the organ takes over the music for a short time, until we see the band parading on the day of the great game and here the orchestra is back full tilt with "Snooky Hollow" changing to "Uncle Tom" as the game starts. Then with the title "The last half of the seventh" we have "A la Carte" and with the announcement that Ben Harding is pitching "Hop Along" is used.

There is an effective arrangement as Ben starts to speak after the victory, the orchestra remaining tacet. Although there are several titles for the speech and the pause is quite appreciable it is good stuff to use now and then. After the speech is for the action stuff and "Fairbanks" with the appearance of the "U. S. marshal," and at the title, "You Wonderful Girl," we have the theme to the end.

There is a most effective arrangement of the descriptive fantasy with one of the John Wenger settings. This is Langey's "Down in a Coal Mine." The house lights are in red for the first part and they go entirely out when the curtains part showing the interior of a coal mine. The Rialto Quartette is heard singing off stage and then we have all the effects of mining even to the shoveling of the coal. Then we have the explosion with a red flash of the footlights carrying this out, and then the searchers, with lights on their caps. These are the members of the quartette and then they sing the other verse of the song and with the signal, "All's Well," the music becomes happy again.

"Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," one of the reissued Sunshine comedies, comes next. "Slippery Hank" is played at screening, and then when the man rides off on the ostrich we have "Step With Pep," changing to "Isme" when the lions are first seen, and to "Yvette" as Goulash enters the lion's den. With the title, "Despite the Lion Tamers," we have "On the Level," and then when the lion jumps from the box, "Pepper Pot." At the point where the negroes see the lion there is a change to "Ghost Dance," and where they jump through the ceiling to "Lion Chase." Then as the lions appear again there is a numbered selection and then "Aves Elan," with "A Wild Jazz Knight" for Ebenezer Bear. Where the man is seen on the bicycle, "Sensation" is used and then "More Candy" at the end.

Leduc's "Gavotte" is the organ solo.

Rivoli Theatre

POWER of music is certainly strikingly shown all through the presentation at the Rivoli this week. As a matter of fact we believe that when we saw the performance the overture, selections from "I Pagliacci" just about set the record for applause at a motion picture theatre. The power of music is continued to be shown all through the bill, and including the descriptive fantasy.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with Kinograms of Canada's welcome to her returning heroes, and here "Highlanders, Fix Bayonets" is played. Gaumont takes us to Paris and shows us King Albert flying home, and the first views of him get tremendous enthusiasm, added to with the playing of "La Brabaconne." Excerpts from "Pomp and Circumstance" are used for the pictures of the Germans at Versailles, and then Gaumont shows us the first girls' high school band at Pasadena, and then the girls marching and going through their exercises. "High School Cadets" is the music.

There is a clever bit of scenic introduced here under the title of "Reflections," showing some bits of lake with reflections of mountains in it. Drdla's "Souvenir" is used here largely as a violin solo and it gets a big hand at the end. Then comes the first bit of comedy with Mutt and Jeff in "Oh, Teacher." At screening there are two choruses of "Schooldays" used with whistle effects for the president of the school board, Mutt and Jeff, and bell effects for the ringing of the schoolhouse bell and anvil effects for the blacksmith. "I Can't Do That Sum" follows through, and after that we have "Palmetto Hop." There is a laugh-provoking effect with the cry of "Teacher" from one of the orchestra in a shrill voice. With the title saying that they will get the thief "At Nod" is used, and then with the courtroom scene one chorus of "Schooldays" is used to the end.

ABOUT TITLES

H. B. WATTS, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, has hit upon one of the failings of pictures, unreadable letters and messages. He writes:

"Why is it that the motion picture producers make some wonderful productions and at the same time make such a terrible job with unreadable letters and messages in the films? Sometimes a letter or message may mean a great deal in the story, and about 99 out of 100 are not legible except from the very first rows of the theatre. There is nothing more disgusting to a patron than to try to read a title that cannot be read."

Pathe then comes with some interesting view of making cannon at Watervliet, N. Y., for which "Siegfried" is used. Kinograms shows us aviators doing circus stuff in the crowds for school children at Houston, Tex., and here "Loved Ones" is played. Under the caption, "Our New Citizens," International shows us pictures of negroes in the Virgin Islands diving, swimming and bringing up coral from the bottom. "Admiration" is played. Then we have the Pathe pictures of the baby tank house demolished with "Scenes Alsaciennes" played.

Now Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement affords a mighty effective bit this week with scenes at the Fine Arts studios and pictures of D. W. Griffith. After the first views to the music of "The Strand at Parame" we have the title telling us that we are within the holy of holies, and then we have trumpet calls and tympany rumble and there dashes in scenes from "The Birth of a Nation," showing the gathering of the clan. Then with the change of scene back to Griffith "Strand at Parame" is again played and we are shown the ruins of the massive sets for "Intolerance," and then as the fade-in from that production starts we have a change to "Queen of Sheba."

There is a smashing ending with Kinogram pictures of General Pershing decorating French heroes with "El Capitan" the stirring music.

Then the Rialto Male Quartette sings "Absent," and "Honey, I Wants You," and gets the big applause that it always receives.

A greater part of the music for the feature, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is either numbered selections or carried on the organ. "Fairbanks One-Step" is played at screening and then with the title, "Our Story Opens," "Bachelor Girl and Boy," is used to the place where he reads the club letter and here "Panama-Pacific March" is played, followed through with "Limbo Land," and then as he goes to his mother, "Mother" is used from the chorus, with the chorus repeated. Then as he starts out on his adventure we have the "Fairbanks" again, followed by a numbered one for the Allison rancho, and then "Fairbanks" again with the scene on the train, and then the view on the lonesome trail brings in the organ music.

With the scene where Fairbanks climbs out the train window, "Hunkatin" is played, and then as he sees, "Oh, You Wonderful Girl" is played from voice, as a song, followed by a numbered selection and repeated as Fairbanks jumps to the window. Where she tells him that the money is hidden, "Zephir" is played, changing to "Goyecas" with the scene of Lopez in Mexico, a numbered one as he enlists his band, followed through with "Wyoming Days" and then three numbered selections ended the orchestra takes up "They Go Wild" and then for the final title "The oldest and best game of all" we have the theme to the end .

After a few strains of "Zoo Step" with the house lights in gold the comedy, "Love's False Faces" starts. This tune continues until the scene showing why saloon keepers go mad and then "Sly Boots" is used changing for the scenes of the monkey and the cat to "Oh Harry." Then for the fight in the bar room "Honky Tonky" is used and for the title "False to the Core" "Pal Beach" changing to "Flower Songs" with the title "You ought to be ashamed" and to "Two Key Rag" with the ex-bartender.

Where the new boarder with the secret sorrow is shown there is an effective bit with "The Curse of an Aching Heart" and then with "What kind of a wife are you?" we get "Porcupine Patrol." With the appearance of the detective "Tremolo Trot" is played and as the wax figure starts to move there is a change to "Money Blues" and with the title "He's in again" to "Who's Who." Then with the views of the man at the safe there is a change to numbered selections, three of them being used to the end. Of course, effects are employed through the picture.

Dubois's "Finale in B Flat" is the organ solo."

Three Blocks Away Huge Lantern Got the Eye of Des Moines People and Drew Them to Rialto

ANYONE who came anywhere near the Rialto theatre, Des Moines, during the week of the showing of "The Red Lantern" could not fail to get the Chinese atmosphere that was carried from the front of the handsome building to the stage.

Eller Metzger, house manager of the Rialto, gave attention to every detail, and the result was that even the crowds that were waiting in the lobby for admission were kept interested trying to decipher the Chinese inscriptions on the walls.

Photographs fail to do justice to the decorations, as there were vivid color schemes used with black and gold bronze which do not show strikingly in pictured form. Other portions of the lobby were in a striking red with the inscriptions all in gold, affording a decidedly rich effect.

In front of the theatre and hanging over the sidewalk there was a huge red lantern six feet high, and in this was a 200-watt electric light that attracted attention to this for three blocks away, since it loomed up stronger than anything on the street. On the sides of the lantern there were Chinese inscriptions in gold. Below the canopy there were twenty-four illuminated lanterns hung.

These were also used inside the lobby, and there was constructed a "fake" effect with three walls painted a rich, warm red. The vertical panels were decorated in black with Chinese designs in gold, and in these panels were displayed pictures of the star and scenes from the production. The lobby veiling was hung with different sorts of lanterns, and the huge dragons over the entrance and exit were most effective.

The foyer walls were covered with rich Chinese draperies and hangings in bright and gorgeous colors. In the auditorium the wall brackets were all covered with hangers of red, blue, yellow and orange, with Chinese characters on all four sides, and from the inverted ceiling lights there were rung peculiar bag-shaped lanterns in which there were large red lights, affording a striking effect as the people entered the house.

Effect of the draperies was carried out in the stage settings with red silk prevailing on which there were embroidered gold dragons. Before each showing of the picture a singer in Chinese costume sang "The Red Lantern" song.

All of the ushers were costumed in Chinese garb, similar to the three shown in the photograph.

Prize Ring Is Reproduced in Lobby of Denver Theatre

A recent American release starring Margarita Fisher, "Put Up Your Hands," was put over by the Strand theatre of Denver by the use of an extra-attractive lobby stunt.

The star is featured as an ultra-athletic society girl who introduces a boxing match as an innovation at one of her aunt's fashionable tea-parties, at which she appears in regulation boxing togs, giving a sparring exhibition with "Bull" Montana, her instructor. They arranged the lobby to look as much like a bona fide prize-fighting ring as possible. There was a roped-off square, and about twenty pairs of boxing gloves hung on the walls. The only stills displayed were those showing the heroine in captivating "B. V. D.'s" forcing her ring partner to take the count.

It was a novel display that provoked curiosity and interest on the part of every passer-by and created city-wide comment. The Strand reports having done a wonderful business on this subject.

Baltimore Theatre Gives Mirrors on Its Anniversary

Bridge theatre, one of the most popular neighborhood houses, in Baltimore, has just celebrated its fifth anniversary with a series of special programs including vocal selections each evening. The house was lavishly decorated with flowers provided by the management and sent by friends and patrons of the theatre.

At each matinee souvenir pocket mirrors bearing the picture of Harold Lockwood on the back were presented to the women patrons.

that these displays referred to a motion picture. Most of the space in the seven inch, triple column display that day was devoted to the surrent attraction, with the same figure of the racing car in the lower right hand corner and just the two sentences in 10 bold face in the upper right hand corner reading:

Hitting the road at 112 miles per, and he'll be in Portland Sunday—
He's comin' hell-bent-for-election.

On Saturday the announcement was made of the picture in a quarter page display and then on Sunday the four full columns were used. By that time everybody in the whole Portland section wanted to know what all of this advertising was about and even had the display not been very attractive in itself they would have been sure to read all of the little reading matter that it contained.

Live News from the Producers

Henry B. Walthall, Star of "Modern Husbands" Distributed by Robertson-Cole Through Exhibitors' Mutual

World Market for Fox Film Now Established

Special Representative Darling, of the Fox Film Corporation, who has been visiting the Dutch East Indies, has practically completed his trip, designed to establish Fox films firmly in that section.

This trip is the final link in the chain of territories which Mr. Darling has visited in his tour of the world and practically means Fox films in all parts of the globe outside of the Teutonic countries.

Exhibitors Book "Big V" Special Comedies

Concrete evidence, it is said, of the growing popularity of Vitagraph's "Big V" Special comedies is contained in the acquisition of these comedies last week by J. C. Brady of Toronto, A. G. Taibot of Denver and J. de Alarcon of El Paso, Juarez and Chihuahua. All these men came to New York City, it is said, to jersonally close contracts for the series as well as for other Vitagraph units.

"High Pockets" Subject of Louis Bennison

The newest Goldwyn-Betzwood picture starring Louise Bennison is entitled "High Pockets." It will be released by the Goldwyn Distributing Coroporation on July 1.

Once more Bennison portrays a cowboy; as usual his vehicle for this presentation is a story of the West. Opposite Bennison is a new Betzwood star, Katherine MacDonald.

Gets Indefinite Broadway Booking

H. B. Warner in "The Man Who Turned White," Taken by B. S. Moss for Long Run — A Robertson-Cole Production

An indefinite run at the Broadway theatre, New York, commencing June 1, introduces H. B. Warner, creator of the celebrated stage role "Jimmy Valentine," before the picture public again. On this occasion he is seen in "The Man Who Turned White" which Robertson-Cole is releasing through Exhibitors Mutual as the initial offering of the Superior Pictures series.

Bookings of this feature, it is announced, have been made by leading exhibitors from one end of the country to the other. B. S. Moss, on booking the picture into his Broadway theatre, proclaimed it one of the most entertaining photoplays he had seen. An elaborate showing at this theatre will be given.

Superior Pictures, according to an announcement recently by Robertson-Cole, are to be photoplays which will measure up in entertainment value and production to the approved specials. They will be made with a view of showing in the finest theatres, and with the three weeks' run at the Broadway, the series should receive a flying start.

"The Man Who Turned White" is announced as both spectacle and drama combined. Jesse D. Hampton, who produced the feature, is said to have given it a most elaborate production. He surrounded H. B. Warner with the most appropriate types he could obtain.

In the cast supporting Mr. Warner are Barbara Castleton, who has the female lead; Jay Dwiggins, Carmen Phillips, Wedgewood Nowell, Walter Perry, Eugenie Ford and Manuel Ojeda.

Mr. Warner in this feature will be seen in a dual role, first as Ali Jaman, renegade white leader of an Arabian Band, and then as Captain Rand, an officer who was cashiered from the army for assuming the responsibility for a bitter charge which should have rested upon another's shoulders.

The locale is said to be most convincing, a natural desert spot in California, faithfully reproducing the Sahara. The photography is also declared to be above the average.

Universal Inaugurates a New "Stunt" Reel

"Universal has ready for distribution," says an official of the company to twenty-four of its largest exchanges in the United States, a 'stunt' reel, or what may better be called a 'silent salesman' reel. This is perhaps the most novel idea of increasing sales and of showing the exhibitor what he may buy that has ever been originated. The reel has been at least six months in preparation and is perfect in every detail. The silent salesman reel will be sent to the exchanges and the exhibitors near the exchange will be invited to review it at special showings, and in case the exhibitor is a neat distance from the exchange the salesman will take the reel with him and it will be shown to the exhibitor in his own theatre.

"The reel is designed so that views of Universal City are first shown, or the actual making of the pictures. Following the opening views are scenes from pictures in which each of Universal's stars have won success. Dorothy Phillips is shown in "The Heart of Humanity" and "Destiny." Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charles Chaplin) in several of her Jewel successes.

"Mary MacLaren is shown in "The Amazing Wife," and following is Monroe Salisbury in "The Blinding Trail."

Other stars, May Murray, Harry Carey, Priscilla Dean, Eddie Polo, Pete Morrison, Lyons and Moran, James J. Corbett and Joe the Monk are also shown in scenes from features, together with shots of the unreleased serial and Universal Screen Magazine.

As a final conclusion, the exhibitor is shown how many audiences have received Universal pictures. This has been accomplished by photographing a motion picture audience at the close of a showing of one of Universal's pictures.

"Too Many Crooks" is Leslie's Latest

Gladys Leslie's latest photoplay is scheduled for release by Vitagraph about the middle of June. It is said to be a screen version of "Too Many Crooks," which was published in All-Story Weekly. E. J. Rath is the author. The story deals with a young woman playright who becomes imbued with an ambition to write a crook play after having seen a performance of that type of play on the stage.

Gladys Leslie and Jean Paige are seen in the principal feminine roles, with Huntley Gordon as the master crook. Others in the cast are Anders Randolf, T. J. McGrane, James Dent, Cecil Chichester, George O'Donnell, John T. Wade and James Gaylore.

Another Police Drama for Joyce

Vitagraph to Star Alice Joyce in Third Police Drama Which Is Planned for Early Fall Production

"THE third in a trilogy of police dramas filmed by Vitagraph is planned for production early in the fall by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph," says an official of the company. "As in the first two, Alice Joyce will be starred. The subject will be based on the new methods of crime detection and correction as developed by the psychopathic laboratory of the Municipal Court of Chicago. It will complete Vitagraph's cycle of police dramas.

"Mr. Smith will personally supervise this production, which George Randolph Chester, famed creator of 'Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford,' and production editor of Vitagraph, has been commissioned to write. In addition to the elements of novelty and 'punch,' which will insure the forthcoming production great general public vogue, according to Vitagraph's prognosis, the play will have a special significance to the law-making and law-enforcing bodies and individuals who specialize in criminology.

"Chief Justice Harry Olson, of the Chicago Municipal Court, is in a way the sponsor of the picture. He is lending Mr. Smith every possible aid in its production, and has placed at his disposal the mass of information contained in the criminal archives of his court, in addition to lending his own acute, incisive knowledge of this subject to the plan. This interest on the part of Judge Olson is founded on a due appreciation of the far-reaching effects on the courts of such a picture as Mr. Smith is to make.

"The new picture will deal with a phase of criminology not covered by the two preceding police pictures—'Within the Law,' which dealt with the circumstantial detection of crime and 'The Third Degree,' treating of the sometimes over-zealous police methods used in forcing the confession of crime. The new picture will deal primarily with the prevention of crime. It will show how, by the use of the psychopathic data, a man who is a potential criminal may be apprehended before, not after, the commission of the crime."

Mr. Smith stated that Tom Terriss would direct the picture, and that the principals supporting Miss Joyce would be picked from the well-known Vitagraph stock forces, whose talents are alternately employed in the support of the various Vitagraph stars, as the characteristics of the roles dictate.

Sub-Sea Picture Producer Buys Small Island

THE purchase of a small island where he plans to breed and train Octopuses for work in his submarine pictures, was announced by J. E. Williamson on his return from a flying trip from the West Indies. "Sandy Cay" is the name of the island.

Mr. Williamson stated he had scenes in mind for a new story which calls for a battle under the sea between the diver, in regular diving costume, and a great octopus, and later a battle to the death between the octopus and a shark. He is quite certain he will be able to get the octopuses, declaring them intelligent, cunning and always ready to fight, but is wondering how he will beable to stop the fight with the shark, once it begins.

In "Sandy Cay," the producer and inventor believes he has an ideal place to work. One side of the island has a smooth, sandy beach and the other side is a mass of jagged reefs, torn by storms, and a spot where octopuses may be found. It is his hope to find a gigantic one, approaching the size of the largest recorded, which Mr. Williamson declares measured twelve feet in breadth across the central part of the body.

Selznick Insures O'Brien

Lewis J. Selznick announces that he has had Eugene O'Brien insured for $1,000,000, this being the first instance in which a producer has protected himself by placing "limit insurance" on a male star. In this manner, it is said, Selznick Pictures Corporation has again revolutionized the motion picture industry.

Solid Booking the Rule on "Bolshevism on Trial"

As a result of an intensive selling campaign, Henry Siegel, branch manager of the Select Pictures' New York Exchange, finds he has ten prints of the Select Pictures' feature, "Bolshevism on Trial," booked solidly for three weeks. He reports the subject is going well with all exhibitors, many booking for three and four day runs, after witnessing a private showing.

Madge Kennedy's Next

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that Madge Kennedy is shortly to begin work on "The Wrong Door," the new story written by Jesse Lynch Williams, the purchase of which was announced last week.

"The Wrong Door" is a production with rich and colorful scenes which take in both the East and the West of the United States. The glory of the West has never had a more poetic presentation on the screen, it is declared.

$1,000,000 Beach-Goldwyn Corporation

Eminent Authors' Pictures Will Control Works of Six Prominent Authors, Who Will Supervise and Direct the Screen Production of Their Stories

WITH a capital stock of one million, and production plans several steps in advance of the ordinary, a new corporation to be known as Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., has been founded by Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn. The author is president of the company, and Mr. Goldwyn, in whose hands will lie the direction of business details, is chairman of the Board of Directors.

The corporation has under exclusive contract for a long term of years six of America's popular novelists, who will supervise the production of their own works, past and to come, in motion picture form.

The stories of Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Gouvernor Morris and Le Roy Scott, as well as those of the late Gertrude Atherton, will be under the exclusive control of the new corporation for screen presentation.

Author Has the Power

The production plans of the new company are unique The author will have the final power of direction and supervision over his picture. All of the authors represented by the new corporation have had their works produced on the screen at various times. Out of their experiences is said to have grown the conviction that the only method whereby an author can be represented authentically in the motion picture is through a direct authority over the details of making the picture. This does not mean that the work of the practical director will be invalidated. It does mean that the director will have at every moment the use of the knowledge, judgement and fine imaginative power which has made the works of these writers famous on the printed page.

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

The experience of Rex Beach as a writer for the screen has contributed materially to the formation of the company. His statement following the announcement of the new corporation illuminates the situation in which authors have found themselves when their work has been screened. Mr. Beech says:

"The growing importance of the story in motion pictures makes it possible to star the story instead of the actor. The progress of the picture industry parallels the development of the stage in this—that the play is recognized as the thing and the actor is to be selected to fit the play rather than that the play should be distorted to fit the peculiarities of the actor. The progress of the motion picture industry has been rapid. It has covered the same ground in ten years that it took the theatrical business fifty years to cover. The mechanical details of production, artistic photography and screen presentation, the intricate channels of distribution and exploitation, have all reached a high stage of efficiency; but the quality of screen stories and plays, as a whole, has not kept pace with the general advance of the art, or business, or whatever you may call it. So far as cooperation between the creative writers of genius and the men who make the pictures, the business is just about where it was five years ago.

All Good Stories

The industry rests upon a solid bedrock of good stories and plays. Remove that and it will not stand. Screen personalities alone cannot hold it up, for no matter how big or popular that personality, picture audiences expect and demand a story back of him or her, and a story, moreover, big enough and vital enough to match the star's personality and prestige. There is a dearth or original creative writers in motion pictures and that scarcity will continue to grow so long as the business remains divorced from the necessary and vital source of supply, as at present.

"Under our arrangement every author in the group will be given the benefit of the most experienced and practical assistance obtainable in the screen preparation of his works. The Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., is out to produce not pictures in quantity, but pictures in quality. Every field of fiction will be covered and no time, money or attention will be spared."

Five New Branches Opened By Select Pictures

General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select Pictures Corporation, has announced that his company will, in the near future, establish several new branches at points widely separated throughout the United States. The projected new exchanges are five in number and will be located at Albany, Salt Lake City, Indianapolis, New Haven, and in New York City, where a New Jersey Exchange will be established quite separate from the New York Exchange already in operation.

Mr. Morris states that the purpose in establishing these exchanges is to render an even better service to exhibitors throughout the country than the service which Select Exchanges have already been giving.

Old Prizma Studios Occupied by New Concern

Offices and studios have been opened by the Adolph Philipp Film Corporation at 11 East Fourteenth street, New York, the site formerly occupied by Prizma. The studios are being renovated and modernized, and a new electric light plant is being installed.

Twenty-nine of Adolph Philipp's plays have been turned over to the concern, and it is predicted these will be successes on the screen. Incidental music to his productions will be presented.

Lillian Gish Speaks of Troubles

But Peter Milne Finds They Are Only " Reel " Ones

THE stories they have to tell regarding the production of D. W. Griffith's " Broken Blossoms " would fill a neat little volume. The latest to give away the secrets of the studio is Lillian Gish, whose performance as the child in this picture gives her rank among the greatest actresses on the screen. Miss Gish came on to New York to witness the premier of the picture at the Cohan theatre and to attend the first nights in other cities on the Atlantic seaboard. And when the interviewer met her at the Hotel Commodore she was bubbling over with the excitement of her New York visit—the first in two years.

And Miss Gish talked a lot of " Broken Blossoms." First she revealed that Mr. Griffith never really meant to have her play the role of the child. He thought her just a little too old. " He searched all Los Angeles for a child actress suitable for the part," said Miss Gish, " but could find none. And then he rehearsed me in it just to see whether I would possibly do."

It can be interposed here with the greatest emphasis that Miss Gish " did."

" The picture was really made in a short time," continued the star, " that is the actual photographing of it. But the troubles we had. Donald Crisp, who played my father, was directing for Lasky at the time, and they were obliged to shoot all his scenes at night. Mr. Barthelmess' mother was sick, and then in the middle of work I got the flu."

But all these seemed small troubles compared to the work that Miss Gish had to put in on the picture without the benefit of a foil. Her famous closet scene when she retreats from the enraged father, and rises to such wonderful heights of fear and agony as the door is hacked down was done without any ferocious Crisp on the other side of the partition and in broad daylight. To work up those intense scenes of mortal fear was a pretty difficult task, Miss Gish admits.

And that it was tremendously effective any one who has seen the picture may well agree.

But then none of these difficulties came out in the wash. Miss Gish's secrets can be looked for time and again in " Broken Blossoms," and not found.

Miss Gish was also enthusiastic about the next Griffith Artcraft picture, " True Heart Susie," in which she carries a role similar to that she had in " A Romance of Happy Valley." " Mr. Griffith thinks my work in this picture better than that which I did in ' Broken Blossoms,' " said Miss Gish, a statement that makes one think Mr. Griffith has discovered a new superlative degree.

Outside of being forced to tell about her picture work Miss Gish has been seeing New York, and finding herself dizzy with it all. She agrees that the contrast between the quiet of California's nights and the noise of New York would make good dramatic material. And a 'bus ride on Fifth avenue, she says, provides quite as big a thrill as a spin down Hollywood Boulevard in a private car.—Peter Milne.

"Mystery" Picture Finally Titled

" The Solitary Sin," Named After Suggestions By Exhibitors, Is Announced—To Be Released as State Rights Film

THE culmination of the vague advertisements appearing in trade papers for several weeks, requesting exhibitors and state rights' buyers to select a title for a feature to be offered, is the announcement of " The Solitary Sin," a state rights special.

The production was made in California, and the cast includes Jack Mulhall, Helene Chadwick, Pauling Curley, and other well-known players. Fred Sullivan produced the picture, under the personal supervision of George D. Watters, who will present it.

Speaking of " The Solitary Sin," Mr. Watters said: " We regard our first production as a highly successful endeavor. It has the elements which make for a successful production. The title is an exceedingly strong one; the story is dramatic and unfailingly interesting, and was very well directed with a cast of fine players, at least one of whom has been starred by another producer.

" In addition to the entertainment value of this attraction we feel that the great moral lesson, which it indicates, will obtain for it a great amount of publicity, as well as the co-operation of the public and semi-public influences for good, in every community. I should like to emphasize, however, that ' The Solitary Sin ' is not a preachment; it is simply strong virile drama, the kind that people wish to see, and the moral, while obvious, is not thrust upon one."

Universal Buys Western

Universal announces the purchase of the Frederick Bennett two-reel Western drama "Five Thousand Dollars Reward." This is said to be one of the best western stories written for screen production and will be produced under the direction of George Holt. Pete Morrison, Universal's western star, and Magda Lane will play the leading roles. Bennett is said to be writing stories for Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons.

Italy's Warriors Enjoy Comedy Cartoons

Simplex Notes

Installs Two Simplex Projectors

Cecil R. Woods of the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company has installed two Simplex Projectors and a Crystal Bead Screen, in the new Rialto theatre, Naugatuck, Conn. He states that the stage setting and general lay-out of the Rialto cannot be equalled off Broadway.

On May 26 the Jesters, an organization of motion picture and theatre men of Connecticut attended the opening of the Rialto, which is considered one of the finest in the state. Rossi C. Cabol, a prominent member of the Jesters, and equally prominent in moving picture circles opened the theatre. After the performance the Jesters gathered and formed an automobile parade to Waterbury, where a banquet was tendered them at Hodson's Cafe by Mr. Cabol.

At the last meeting of the Jesters Mr. Woods was asked to advance to the rostrum and the chief jester inquired as to his business. Mr. Woods stated " that his business was selling Simplex Projectors." The chief then asked him how many machines he has disposed of that week, and upon being told that five machines had been sold, a fine of five dollars was levied upon Mr. Woods, this sum being added to the entertainment fund.

Max Spiegel's Grand Installs Simplex

The Grand theatre, Hartford, Connecticut, a fifteen hundred seat house, which up to last week has been running burlesque, has been thoroughly renovated and opened with very encouraging prospects, it is said, as a full-fledged motion picture theatre. As a part of its up-to-date equipment two Simplex Projectors have been installed.

New Simplex Mazda Pleases Delegates

One of the exhibits that was the center of attraction at the annual convention of the Nela Associates which was held recently at the Million Dollar Pier, Atlantic City, was the new Simplex Mazda Incandescent Lamp Equipment, which was installed and operated under the personal direction of Edwin S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company and to whom, it is said, much of the success of this equipment is due.

Owing to the entire abandonment of the corrugated condenser system, with which all similar Incandescent projectors are fitted, there were many electrical experts present who doubted the ability of the Simplex to work with the plano-convex or present condenser system, however, after being shown the results on the screen and the absolute ease with which these results were obtained, Mr. Porter was highly commended.

Coldewey Joins Universal

Anthony W. Coldewey, who entered the picture industry as a writer on one of Universal's staffs, has returned to Universal after an extended absence. He is the latest addition to Universal's continuity staff, and is best remembered for his screen adaptations of the Richard Bennett's plays and for a number of William Russell productions.

Hodkinson Corners a Literary Output

Announcement of Year's Plans Discloses He Controls Score of Noted Works By Foremost Authors in Assuming Reins of Great Authors' Productions

FAR reaching plans for sales and distribution in the forthcoming year, plans which divulge the fact that he controls the Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., Productions, and in addition the distribution of famous novels and plays by celebrated authors, were disclosed the past week by W. W. Hodkinson. The works of Augustus Thomas, Zane Grey, Sir Gilbert Parker, Emerson Hough, Stewart Edward White and Winston Churchill—names to conjure with in the world of letters—will find their way to the screen under the guiding hand of Mr. Hodkinson.

Of primary importance is the revelation of the complete plans of the Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., which Benjamin B. Hampton organized and has been building for months in California with two big pictures completed and to its credit.

Other Authors Coming

Benjamin B. Hampton's Great Authors' organization at this time controls the stories of Stewart Edward White, Emerson Hough, Winston Churchill and Irving Bacheller, with still other authors in like prominence to be announced.

Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner control the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and have just completed Mr. Grey's story of the southwest, "Desert Gold," which has been shipped east for Hodkinson distribution. Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., has completed the production of Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" and other novels of this writer to be screened include "The Leopard Woman," "The Rules of the Game," "The Riverman," etc.

Mr. Churchill's most immediate novels to be screened include "The Dwelling Place of Light" and "The Inside of the Cup." Mr. Hough's two contributions are to be "The Mississippi Bubble" and "54-40 or Fight." Irving Bacheller's initial screen contribution will be "Keeping Up With Lizzie."

During all the months of preliminary organization William W. Hodkinson foreseeing the evolution in the industry that makes recognizably big stories the prevailing demand of exhibitors everywhere, has been fostering the organization of other producing units that will make productions only from stories by authors of established name throughout the world.

President Fred L. Wilke, of Continental Pictures Corporation

Louise Glaum Is the Star of "Sahara," Distributed by Hodkinson

Harry Raver's Four-Star organization, which recently completed and released "As a Man Thinks" by Augustus Thomas through the Hodkinson sales mechanism has just completed his second Thomas production, "The Volcano," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving. There are to be four more of Mr. Thomas' biggest works in this series, representing America's foremost dramatist given his personal attention to the actual production of his pictures which are being directed by George Irving.

Down in San Antonio the Sunset Pictures Corporation, another Hodkinson ally, is completing the production of Sir Gilbert Parker's story of Canada, "You Never Know Your Luck," with House Peters as the star and under the direction of Frank Powell. The Hodkinson literary and technical departments have given their personal supervision to the preparation of this story for production.

Still another unit controlling the stories of one of the country's most popular authors is to be announced within the next few days by the Hodkinson organization. This additional unit, it is announced, will make not less than four stories with a star of established popularity, under a producer of splendid ideals and personally supervised by the author of the stories in person.

The nucleus around which this evolution has been built has been Benjamin B. Hampton's two organizations, which have completed and are delivering their first pictures from California. To Mr. Hampton with his editorial and publishing experience,

Mr. Hodkinson, pays unstinted praise for his vision and achievements. To harmonize all productions that for the coming year will pass through the Hodkinson sales mechanism, Mr. Hodkinson, it is said, has cultivated and developed other allies of similar high ideals.

Hammons Writes from Abroad

A pile of letters, received from Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation, contains the first detailed information concerning the wanderings of the film man in Europe. His cabled messages, which have so far been the only means by which he has kept in touch with the office, have been too brief to convey any knowledge of what he has accomplished in London.

Mr. Hammons says that he has been particularly fortunate in securing some very fine single-reel material, which he promises will be a feature of the short-subject market this fall, and states that he has a number of other things in prospect that will be most interesting to exhibitors in this country when the results of his trip are announced on his return.

"Lady Windermere's Fan"

"Widespread interest is being evinced," says an official of Triangle, "at the announcement that it will release on June 15th the best known and most widely read of Oscar Wilde's stories, "Lady Windermere's Fan." Everyone is familiar with the story of a mother who sacrifices her own good name that her daughter's may be saved; of the struggle against pride, and the final overwhelming triumph of mother-love over the desire for personal happiness."

L. C. Haynes Pays Visit to the East

L. C. HAYNES, president of the Brentwood Film Corporation, producers of "The Turn in the Road," rights for which were bought by Robertson-Cole, was in New York City last week, arranging for the release of several other productions through this organization. Mr. Haynes is a newcomer in the film business, having retired from active brokerage work several years ago. It was King W. Vidor, author and director of "The Turn in the Road," who interested him in pictures with the result that his first producing venture was the series of Judge Brown pictures released on the General Film program a little over a year ago. Mr. Haynes then saw that there was a greater field in the production of features with the result that the Brentwood company was formed.

It is a new type of production that Mr. Haynes intends to manufacture. He believes there is a big demand for pictures of the type of "The Turn in the Road," pictures which reflect the happy side of life and leave the shootings and vampires out of it altogether. "There is so much in life that is good," said Mr. Haynes, "that we aim to produce good pictures on clean, wholesome lines. Not sugary and altogether sentimental to be sure, but pictures that reflect life as it is lived by the millions of the country and not by the few. A picture does not have to include a murder or a scarlet woman to be a success.

"The Turn in the Road" was in the nature of an experiment but it was such a successful experiment that we were immensely satisfied. As a result there will be productions of a similar character coming from the Brentwood studios in the future. Productions of dramatic value that are clean from first reel to last."

Asked how many pictures Brentwood planned producing during the coming year Mr. Haynes replied that there would be no set number. "Probably there will be four or five, maybe six," he said, "but here again Brentwood aims to get away from the usual order of things. We don't want to make pictures as we would some factory goods and we aren't going to. Mr. Vidor has all the time he wants to spend on each production and we expect each production to stand up as the epitome of wholesome entertainment."

"We aren't out to set the business agog," concluded Mr. Haynes, "but we want to manufacture a product that will appeal to the masses as the reflection of their lives. And if the name Brentwood comes to mean all that is clean and wholesome in picture production we will feel quite satisfied."—Peter Milne.

Author's Name Guarantees "Painted World"

SMASHED box office records are expected by many exhibitors on the release of Vitagraph's third picture of the Anita Stewart series, "The Painted World."

This story, the work of Jacques Futrelle, whose untimely death evoked regret throughout the world, is said to contain many dramatic situations, the creation of which Mr. Futrelle was noted for in his works. "The Thinking Machine," also his work, which appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post, is known to readers all over the country.

"The Painted World" was directed by Ralph Ince and, besides Miss Stewart, includes in its cast E. K. Lincoln, Julia Swayne Gordon, Charles Kent and Harry Northrup. It is a page from the Book of Broadway, dealing as its title infers with that realm known as "backstage" and ramifications of that life.

Mr. Futrelle's own summary of Reel One gives a fair index to the plot. Says Mr. Futrelle in the original script which unfolds the plot and theme:

"By one of those strange, wanton mistakes of nature, a child is born to Elois, the actress. The advent of the child, Yvette, arouses in Elois the one fine trait in her nature, a tremendous mother love. To keep the child clean and to protect it from the influence of her life and that of its dissolute father, becomes the one passion of her soul. A moment comes when it borne in her forcibly that to keep the child clean she must send her away. The reel closes showing her drawing back inevitably to her life on the stage."

Issues Press Book on "Elmo, the Mighty"

UNIVERSAL has prepared what are said to be perhaps the greatest advertising aids ever made for a serial to be used in connection with the "Elmo the Mighty" serial which is to be released in June.

A complete press book on "Elmo the Mighty" is now in the hands of the exchange men. This press book contains all the information that could be got together, it is stated, including all details in a column titled "At a Glance." Stories of the episodes are given in detail, advance stories and stories to be used during the running of the serial. Elmo Lincoln, who won fame in "Tarzan of the Apes," is the star of the serial and several pages are devoted to special stories written about the life and screen work of the star. Special stories about the other leading stars of the serial are included also.

Besides the press book on this serial, Universal is preparing an attractive campaign book. This book is said to contain all forms of advertising aids to be used prior to and during the running of the serial. Several opening ads are suggested for the use of the exhibitor, teaser ads, opening day ads, episode ads, and type ads. Several pages are devoted to the suggestions of novel stunts by means of which the serial may be advertised. Included in the campaign book are reproductions of the slides, banners, lobby displays, special photographs, and the full line of posters. The campaign book will be in two colors.

Big Exploitation for Goldwyn Feature

One of the most original and far-reaching exploitation campaigns ever devised, it is said, for a single motion picture production has preceded and trailed the triumphant exhibition of the Goldwyn Extra, "The Eternal Magdalene," in the leading theatres of the country.

Encouraged by the powerful theme of the Robert H. McLaughlin drama and primed by the appeal which it carries to people of all ages and fancies, exhibitors have set the "sky as the limit" it is stated in the advance and current promotion.

A noteworthy feature of the campaign general is the "teaser" exploitation suggested by Goldwyn's Service Department.

Brady Joins Films

Joe Brady, late captain in the United States Army, has joined the publicity department of Robertson-Cole, and is now stationed at the headquarters of this company at 1600 Broadway. Mr. Brady, previous to joining the army, was a reporter for the New York World and other daily papers. He received a commission as lieutenant immediately after the United States entered the war, and was one of the first in France. Mr. Brady was decorated for bravery in action, and promoted to the rank of captain before his return.

New Sennett Version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin"

Following the success of the Paramount-Sennett satire, "East Lynne with Variations," Mack Sennett is directing a new Sennettized version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" which threatens, it is said, to be the funniest comedy ever filmed on the Sennett lot. Ben Turpin, will be the leading man; Charles Lynn will play Simon Legree, and Marie Prevost is the leading lady. Teddy, the famous dog of the Sennett forces will also be used.

Special Service Section on

Mae Murray in "The Big Little Person"

TO those exhibitors who are going to show Mae Murray in "The Big Little Person" we would strongly recommend that the love element be stressed in all of the exploitation. By that it is not meant that this is a mushy romance, but it contrasts the "love"—if we may call it that in both cases—of the man who is simply infatuated with the girl's beauty and cannot tolerate her affliction and that of the man who loves so greatly that he loves her all the more because of her misfortune.

We would not make it too strong that the girl is supposed to be deaf through most of the picture, for this is not the effect upon your audiences since you have the relief of the brief allegorical scenes and the flash-backs and you pretty well know all the time that something is going to happen—as it does—to restore her hearing. In this picture Miss Murray is nothing of the hoyden or the vixen, but simply a human little character of every day life and that should be made the appeal.

One of the biggest of recent hits in motion pictures has been scored by a simple love story and the advice that we gave in one of these special sections was to treat it as such. And that same advice we give you here. There is nothing amazing about this, nothing scenically spectacular, nothing astounding in the developments—but we would advise you to advertise this as a picture that will interest and delight—that will bring a tear and a heart throb and leave you well pleased with the ending.

AND now we have it: Arathea Manning is of splendid family and with a mother who is ambitious for the girl's marriage into society and a wealthy family, especially since the father, facing financial ruin, committed suicide and left practically nothing. Arathea goes to teach in a private school for little children where she is idolized—by all except one very bad little child. It is her devotion to these little ones during an epidemic of scarlet fever that causes her to lose her hearing.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

Opening flashes of the picture show her leaving the doctor's office where she is told that her misfortune is incurable and it is there that for the first time sees her Gerald Staples, whom we know a few moments later as the inventor of an auriphone that allows the deaf to hear.

Arathea conceals her affliction from her mother and from Arthur Endicott whom it has been understood for years she is to marry. But she soon finds that Arthur is bored because he continually has to shout and his brief visits which always end by his going to see another girl convince her that happiness is not there for her.

But with another visit to her physician she is sent to the young inventor, who gives her the first auriphone that he has completed—a sort of telephone arrangement with a receiving box that transmits the voice to her ear. Then she returns to her school. It is after she has told the children a fairy story—which is really her own story—of the girl whose ears were turned to stone—that the bad little girl, angered because she does not learn what happens to the princess and her royal suitor, dashes the auriphone to pieces.

ARATHEA is unwilling to make another appeal to the young inventor whom she had found living in squalid quarters and devoting all his time and money to his invention and so she endures her infliction until she receives a letter from him addressed to "The Big Little Person—small in size, but big in ideas"—telling her that a company has been formed to market the invention and inviting her to become the secretary because he knows that her sympathy for the afflicted will work aid in the organization.

Here Endicott comes calling and his jealousy is aroused by the understanding that seems to exist between the young inventor and Arathea and so he asks her whether she has told her employer of their engagement. There follows an impressive scene in which Staples accused Endicott of being responsible for the girl's deafness because he had not married and prevented her from teaching school. Endicott agrees that he is right and though the girl's faith is waning more and more she believes that he still loves her.

Her prosperity has permitted Arathea and her mother to take more pretentious quarters and there Staples, as a guardian, is a frequent caller and he often plays the piano, which sounds to the girl only "as the rumble of the distant surf." But he tells her, "some day you will hear my music, and then you will understand."

YET with all his apparent good intentions Endicott is fast losing his love for the girl under her affliction and one evening as he stops by on his way to call on Daisy—the other girl—he becomes angered and bursts out with: "Do I have to shout into that damned thing all my life?" Then Arathea is completely disillusioned and she tells him that her deafness has been pronounced incurable and hands him back his ring which he has described as "a very pretty ring—the best they had in the shop" and then as a parting insult he grinds it under his heel.

As Endicott leaves the girl swoons and falls, her head hitting the corner of the casing. There with the gash over her ear Staples finds her. While she is recovering Staples calls and plays and she gets a faint trace of the music, pictures herself wandering in dreamland and picturing Gerald now as her prince. Then as he plays, and the words go "As the dawn flames in the sky, I love You," she realizes that her hearing has been restored by the fall—and there is happiness with the man who loved her through her affliction and in spite of everything.

So we have a story here without a fight, without a real villain and without a problem and one with the happy ending. Yet at the same time it is a rather tense story, though the magnetism of the star keeps it away from emotional type of drama.

NOW because of the recent successes that she has scored you are certainly going to play up the name of the star as the big thing in your advertising. The title is very attractive and this should be used in connection with one of the appealing pictures of Miss Murray. This is a case where we believe that it is better to use a cut of the star alone in the role that she has rather than a scene. We have illustrated three of these among the reproductions and we believe that they will appeal.

We have also shown a couple of the scenes of the fanciful stuff, but care should be taken with the use of these lest the impression left that this is something of the fairy story or costume character when, as a matter of fact that is a mere incident which serves for the relief of the drama. And at the same time while the child interest is strong we would be careful not to leave an impression that this is a picture especially for the children. Let's try a selling talk like this:

"She was the prettiest thing in town, and Endicott was mighty proud that she was to be his wife. But then there came an affliction—she had to go to work and in the course of her duties she lost her hearing. It was the price of the devotion that she gave to the little children—her wards.

"But then his love began to fade. He declared that he did not intend to 'yell at her' all his life. Then she understood, but her heart hurt a whole lot when he crushed the engagement ring under his foot and left. But that event made room for a real love—a love that swept everything before it—for a man who played love songs for the little girl who could not hear—with the confidence that she would understand. And she did—heard the music in her heart and with her ears.

"Yes, it ends just right. There are heart grips in it and some tears, but you'll like it all the better for that."

THEN here is one that is built more around the personality of the star, and its use should depend largely on whether your patrons are familiar with the work of Miss Murray:

"You have seen Mae Murray as a hoyden of the hills, as a captivating cabaret queen, in daring and dazzling roles, but here you have her as the daintiest sort of a little girl of real life—just the sort of a character that all of you will love.

"Here she is just the sort of a little girl that you or your neighbor might be—an unspoiled lovable person that will win your sympathy from the start. You'll sympathize mightily with her, but in her troubles you'll be mighty glad that she didn't marry the man who turned from her in the time of her affliction and that there came into her life one who loved her—in spite of everything—and you'll be mightily pleased when he takes her in his arms—everything that he—and you—want in a woman."

And then this one:

"Most any one can fall in love with a girl who is beautiful, radiant, the real sunshine of life. Even though her wealth may be lost, when she has the riches of fairness and the full bloom of personality, who would refuse?

"Such was Arathea, until she lost her hearing. The man who thought that he loved her found that his love wasn't deep enough to 'holler at her' all his life. But she found that there were other—and real men in the world—and one of them especially for her.

"It's one of those happily ending little love stories that you'll really like. There's not a fight in it or a villain—not a suggestion of problem or the 'other woman'—just sheer delight with Miss Murray as her captivating, charming best."

OUR reason for recommending the longer selling talks here and telling as much of the story as we have done in them is to carry the humanness of the picture over strong, but here are some shorter ones that can be well used with a striking picture of the star:

"It was a mighty good thing for Arathea that she lost her hearing—for a little while—for then she heard the truth more plainly than she ever did before—knew the real man that she was supposed to marry. She was saved from a life with a man who had only imagined that he had loved her—that she might have one who really knew the heart of a woman."

"Little Arathea lost her voice because of her love for children—and then after weeks of silence she heard voices—those of children, melting into the single voice of the man who loved her better than all the world."

"She gathered the children about her and told her a fairy story of a beautiful princess. It was really her own story and it stopped when the ears of the princess were turned to stone by the wicked witch—for Arathea was deaf. But there are things like fairies in real life, too, and it was not long before she heard again—and the first sound was the voice of the man of men for her singing of his love."

Element of Charm Should Be Played to the Limit

THIS is the sort of a picture with which you should try to make the setting, both musical and mechanical in keeping with the simplicity and sweetness of the plot. Everything of the freakish and the slightest trace of the stunt should be absolutely avoided. There shouldn't even be anything of the sensational, but an effort to get the people into the theatre on the charm of the story and the star and to send them away word of mouth advertisers by the way you put the picture over.

For those who find that the personal letter angle pays we should suggest building the announcement right around these points, getting the spirit of the advertisement that we have suggested with Miss Murray as the big point. Let it run something like this:

"From time to time we have been telling you about big, sensational stories that we have shown. There have been others with a plentitude of action and quantities of thrills. Some times we have told you of all star casts and lavish scenic investitures.

"Now here is a case where we are going to tell you that none of these things guide us in urging you to come to the Majestic theatre Thursday and Friday to see Mae Murray in 'The Big Little Person.' But we have to offer to you the charming star at her most convincing best on a story that is simple and appealing.

"You don't have to wonder whether the events in this story could possibly happen. They are true to everyday life. There are no exaggerated emotions, no stressed situations, but events that might easily occur in your life or your neighbors'. It's realism because it is so true to life—realism with a delightfully happy ending."

YOUR lobby display should be largely a Mae Murray one. Use as many attractive pictures of her as you can get, artistically mounted. If you followed the suggestions that were made with the first of these sections and have preserved the pictures of Miss Murray as she has appeared in her offerings of the past year you have a chance for a most interesting layout by using these as cutouts and then lettering on each set that she appeared as "a girl burglar in boy's attire" in "Danger, Go Slow" etc.

FOR THE WOMEN

Just a Little Hint to Get Extra Attention

WE have already said that we would not use anything of the stunt stuff in advertising this picture, but there is a perfectly legitimate plan that can be employed in small space advertising on the woman's or society page of your newspaper for several days in advance of the showing of "The Big Little Person" and during its run. Use single column space for this and then use a display something like this:

The Story of a Wonderful Love:
Mae Murray in
"The Big Little Person"
At the Empire
3 Days, starting Sunday.

If you haven't done this play all the pictures of Miss Murray that you can get. She has a particularly appealing face and if you will arrange these in a shadow box effect they will stand out all the more.

To the average exhibitor the suggestion of flowers in the lobby mean little especially when they are suggested to reflect some portion of the picture, but here is a case where they will give charm and add the touch of daintiness. A trellis of artificial roses and real blooming shrubs about will convince more people that this is something that they want to see than will the limit in sensational announcements.

There is something about the psychology of pictures that makes certain productions suitable for particular seasons. This is distinctly a summer time offering because it carries through it the perfume and beauty of growing flowers.

IN the presentation of this picture we would supply as much of a comedy theme as possible for the rest of the programme. There should be in one of those scenics used that gives the fragrance of life outdoors, and if you are showing it right away there should be one of those with the snow clad mountains and the slashing waters.

In presenting the picture itself, avoid anything of the mysterioso, agitato. There should be lighter love music played for a greater part of the scenes with an easily recognized and convincing air for the love theme.

It is very evident that the theme should be "At Dawning," for this is introduced during the time that Staples is seen at the piano playing and the words flash on the screen:

"When the dawn flames in the sky, I love you."

This is suitable for either voice, but we would prefer a woman here. There can be a variety of settings used, but a most effective one can be employed with the veranda of a southern home with the field and a river showing in the background and the girl's voice first heard from the wings. Then let her appear on the stage, or rather veranda, as the dawn effect is given in the lighting. Never make the change too rapidly, but bring it up to gold for the end.

This theme then should be carried through the picture. Introduce it first as Staples first sees the girl and for the incident of the flowers and then bring it back next as she goes to his workshop, returning with her in his employ.

It should be played as a piano solo only where the screen shows. Staples at the piano and then after the second piano effect it should be taken up with full orchestra or organ to the end.

With this change, and one other, we recommend the score that is supplied. Where the ring is thrown on the floor and Endicott crushed it under the heel have the orchestra dim down from the suggested "Song of the Soul" and remain tacet during the scene.

Goldwyn Buys Triangle Studios

Company Preparing for Production Intended to Surpass Every Mark Previously Set, It Is Declared

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in preparation for production intended to surpass every mark previously set, it is declared, has purchased the largest motion picture studios in America.

The Goldwyn Company has had the Triangle Studios at Culver City, California, under lease since November, 1918. Their purchase was announced today. The transaction, which is said to have been an outright cash transfer, is stated to be one of the largest of its kind ever put on record in the motion picture industry.

The Triangle studios are said to cover a forty-acre tract of hills, valleys, plains and woodland, giving every known variety of scenic background to picture directors. The buildings and equipment include two complete miniature theatres and six production stages.

"The new studios will give us a splendid equipment for the great productions we are planning to make," said Samuel Goldwyn. "Our plans have broadened to such an extent that it is absolutely essential for us to have the increased scope of the new studios to carry them out successfully. California is a wonderful place. It is with a good deal of satisfaction that we announce our permanent residence there as a producing organization."

The Goldwyn studios are more than a producing center for motion pictures. They are actually a large city, with parks, libraries, theatres, and long, striking highways. The glint of the sun on the huge steel and glass production stages can be seen for miles around.

The store houses and wardrobes, housed in separate buildings, are complete in every detail and surpass those in the production centers of Italy, Germany and France. A chemical laboratory in a building set apart, to eliminate danger from fire, is fitted out to the last detail with all the refinements of modern photography. Among the other buildings are a complete portrait studio, a garage with room for thirty-five cars, an extensive swimming pool, and a massive steel and concrete vault to assure the safety of the costly equipment used in producing.

To give authoritative historical value to Goldwyn productions, Mr. Goldwyn has been steadily acquiring a library which now numbers many hundreds of volumes, and is ideal for research work.

A complete hospital and relaxation ground for the employees complete the equipment.

Sydney Chaplin Signs With Famous Players

SYDNEY CHAPLIN, comedian of the stage and screen, has signed a contract it is said to appear in motion pictures to be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Chaplin's arrangement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation calls for four pictures to present comedies running five reels each, it is said. It is also stipulated that these super-comedies will be allowed six months for production so that more than ample time is given to make each photoplay as nearly perfect in every detail as it is possible to make them.

Mr. Chaplin will form his own producing organization immediately, it is declared, and will personally direct the production of his pictures. It is understood that he will stage his films at his brother's studio in California. The films will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as Paramount-Artcraft Super-Comedies.

In speaking of his new affiliation, Mr. Chaplin said: "For some time past there have been rumors of my returning to the screen and at last I am able to say that this is definitely so. My activities as business manager for my brother have been particularly pleasant but the call of the screen proved resistless."

It is understood that Mr. Chaplin will not adopt a standardized character.

Exhibitors Comment on United Features

Commenting upon the opening of their new Modjeska Theatre, the Modjeska Theatre Company, Augusta, Ga., have written J. A. Berst as follows: "We opened our new Modjeska, with Dustin Farnum in "The Light of Western Stars," which was proclaimed by all who saw it to be one of the greatest productions released in years."

W. W. Cutter, Manager of the Verdi, St. Paul, Minn., writes: "I ran the 'Light of Western Stars' two days and exceeded the mark I had set for myself, and I want to assure you that the mark I set was far from low. On the two succeeding days after I ran 'Adele' and again I exceeded my hopes, in spite of the big crowds that had attended the two previous nights."

H. M. Crandall, telegraphed J. A. Berst from Washington, D. C.: "Florence Reed in 'Her Code of Honor' at Metropolitan played to capacity."

Mary MacLaren's Newest Is "Woman's Place"

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Co., announces the completion of the newest Mary MacLaren screen drama "Woman's Place." This new Special attraction is said to be powerful in its appeal, contains tragedy tinged with humor and is a pictured modernistic argument against many old time beliefs.

The cast includes Thurston Hall, Johnnie Cook, John Mackay, and Ethel Ritchie. The picture is in six reels and was directed by Paul Powell and written by Elmer Ellsworth.

New Alma Rubens Feature

"Annie Marnet," a domestic story with a theme, is the first photoplay in which Alma Rubens will appear as the head of her own organization, the Alma Rubens Productions. It is being made under the personal direction of Daniel Carson Goodman, the author, at the Paragon Studios, Fort Lee.

Enlarges Its Laboratory on West Coast

In order to care for the constantly increasing business of the company, particularly in the foreign field, the capacity of the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood will be increased to double the present output, it is stated, with the result that it will be in a position to handle approximately a million feet of film a week. Milton E. Hoffman, Studio General Manager, states that it will not be necessary to erect a new building to care for the increasing business but that by rearranging the interior of the present laboratory the work can be satisfactorily handled.

With these changes and the additional new buildings now practically completed, some idea of the production capacity of the big plant may be gained from the fact that within a few days seven productions will be simultaneously under way, it is said.

"Virtuous Men" Has Novel Accessories

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have added three distinctive novel exploitation aids to the already complete list of advertising supplies prepared to assist the state-right buyer in booking "Virtuous Men" to the exhibitor. In order to give added strength to the novel moving picture announcement trailer the S-L producers have had motion pictures taken of the crowds which have attended the opening performances of "Virtuous Men." Prints of these movies will be joined to the announcement trailer.

Another useful advertising aid has been prepared in the shape of a blotter which carries on its reverse side an exact reproduction of the striking twenty-four sheet used to advertise "Virtuous Men."

As the third addition to the explotiation service, albums of 8 x 10 still pictures have been made up for the use of salesmen in talking to the exhibitor.

Metro Busy in Western Studios

Four New Productions Completed Last Week in Hollywood Studios and Five New Ones Launched in Following Two Days

May Allison as the French dancer in "Almost Married," a new Metro production

PHOTOGRAPHING of four productions was completed last week at Metro studios in Hollywood. Five new productions were launched in two days, with scarcely a lull for stars or directors, it is stated. This is the first time in the history of the Metro Western Studios, it is said, that so many productions have been started simultaneously.

Hale Hamilton finished "Full of Pep," the Robert F. Hill story of adventure, picturized by A. S. Le Vino. Alice Lake is his leading lady. The cast included Victor Potel, Eugenia Ford, R. D. MacLean, Charles Hill Mailes and Fred Malatesta.

Hamilton's next picture will start Monday under the tentative title of "In His Brother's Place." Hamilton wrote the story.

Emmy Wehlen has completed "Fools and Their Money." It is an original satire by E. Forst, scenarioized by Finis Fox. Jack Mulhall played the leading role and in the cast were Emmett King, Molly McConnell, Betty Peterson, William V. Mong, Gerard Grassby, John Steppling, Bertram Grassby and Gordon Marr.

Miss Wehlen's next picture will be "A Favor For a Friend," an original story by Lieut. Adj. Luther A. Reed of the Metro scenario staff. She was scheduled to star in the new picture last Monday under the direction of John Ince.

Viola Dana has completed "Some Bride" under the direction of Henry Otto. Irving Cummings was Miss Dana's lead and in the cast were also Ruth Sinclair, "Smiling" Billy Mason, and Florence Carpenter.

Miss Dana will start her new story, "The Microbe," immediately. It is by Henry Altimus and was published in "Ainslee's Magazine" with Henry Otto as director.

Bert Lytell was scheduled to finish "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day" last week. George D. Baker wrote the continuity for the story, and John Ince directed. Eileen Percy was Lytell's lead. The rest of the cast included: Joseph Kilgour, Stanton Heck, William A. Carroll, Jules Hanft and John Hack.

Bert Lytell was scheduled to start Monday on the John H. Blackwood comedy, "It's Easy to Make Money," adapted for the scene by Finis Fox and directed by his brother, Edwin Carewe.

May Allison was scheduled to start last Tuesday or Wednesday on "Free," Wallace Irvin's story that has been picturized for Miss Allison by George D. Baker. Kathleen Kerrigan and Pel Trenton have already been selected for Miss Allison's support.

Miss Allison's latest picture, "Almost Married," finished recently is now in the cutting and titling stage.

Many Advertising Aids with H. B. Warner Film

AN elaborate exploitation campaign, and the extention of every possible aid to exhibitors, has been arranged by Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual on the first Superior pictures starring H. B. Warner, titled "The Man Who Turned White."

A pretentious exploitation book has been published, twelve pages in size, printed in two colors and containing a line of publicity in a newspaper form.

In addition a series of twelve cuts has been arranged, also special lobby display sets more elaborate, it is said, than those usually prepared .

Nearly a half million sets of postal cards, eight to a set, have been ordered, and many other advertising features will go out with the picture.

The first showing of "The Man Who Turned White" will be given in June. Several days ago it was screened for a number of first run exhibitors. Bookings are now being accepted by the various Exhibitor Mutual exchanges.

Pre-Release Showing for Talmadge Film

Contracts were signed this week by Fred C. Aitken, Branch Manager of Select Pictures Corporation's Chicago Exchange, for a pre pre-release showing of Constance Talmade's forthcoming Select Picture, "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Louis J. Selznick, at the Ziegfeld Theatre in Chicago, for the week of June 15.

By the terms of the contract, the booking on the feature is virtually a pre pre-release, the play dates being a week in advance of the regular pre-release booking at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream.

Polo to Feature in Big New Serial

Headed by Star, Laemmle to Send Company of Players Half Way Round the World to Produce "The Broken Idol"

TO send a company of players more than half-way round the world, and for the company to travel more than 10,000 miles in five different countries to produce the greatest serial picture ever contemplated by any producer is the project set forth to-day by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company.

Headed by Eddie Polo the entire group of persons who will make the trip left Universal City for New York on May 24, and will sail for London, England, according to the present plans, on June 7. The trip will be made on the steamship "Lapland."

Polo, who is to star in this serial, is known not only in the United States, but in foreign countries as well. He scored a success in "The Lure of the Circus," a Universal serial, and has recently proven a drawing card, it is stated, in his series of two-reel Western dramas.

This serial in which Polo will star will be international in scope, and will contain more exciting, different, varied, and foreign scenes, it is declared, than have ever been shown in any serial. The tentative title selected is "The Broken Idol," and the story is the outgrowth of an idea of Joe Brandt, in charge of Universal's serial department. Mr. Brandt is a co-author of the Universal serial, "Elmo, the Mighty," the Universal serial, which is scheduled for release in the near future.

The story will contain throughout an element of mystery, and Polo will be cast as a young and fearless detective who is sent all over the world to solve deep mysteries and capture dangerous criminals.

John P. McGowan, known as a successful director of serials, will direct this Polo serial as well as playing the leading heavy role. Mr. McGowan was formerly an actor, and after entering the screen industry made three trips to Ireland for the Kalem Company, directing the pictures made in that country. He directed Helen Holmes in the famous Railroad serial as well as the serials, "Girl and the Game," "Lass of the Lumberlands," "Diamond Runners" and the "Lost Express." Since having been associated with the Universal Company he has directed the serials, "The Lure of the Circus," "Lion's Claw" and the recently completed Marie Walcamp success, "The Red Glove."

The opening episodes of the serial were taken in the West, several of the scenes being taken at the mammoth cattle round-up at Kingman, Arizona, and other scenes have been taken on the Catalina Islands.

Upon their arrival in New York several scenes will be made, and Director McGowan is planning upon using many of the stage and screen stars of the East in the New York scenes.

The foreign scenes of the serial will be laid in Ireland, Scotland, England and France. It has been planned to obtain the services of many of the well-known European stage and screen stars in many of the scenes and the extras in the different episodes will be selected from the natives and people living in the country in which the episodes are filmed.

Peggy Hyland's Next

A genuinely novel story, with original turns of plot and spirited action, has been written by Charles Mortimer Peck and purchased by William Fox for production as a Peggy Hyland photoplay. The title is "The Bed She Made."

In this William Fox production Peggy Hyland plays the role of Patricia Hilton, daughter of a rich and aristocratic family.

In the cast are Harry Hilliard, Molly McConnell, Mrs. Jack Mulhall, William Elmer, Edwin Booth Tilton and Edward Jobson.

Salvation Head Commends "Fires of Faith"

A letter of commendation, expressing appreciation at the manner in which "Fires of Faith" was screened, has been received by Edward Jose, director of the production, from Commander Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army.

"A powerful and gripping narrative, rich in philosophy, history and inspiration," was the way the writer expressed her view of the production.

Mr. Jose is now directing Norma Talmadge in "By Right of Conquest."

Opens Projection Rooms to Wounded Soldiers

Vitagraph's half dozen private projection rooms at the Brooklyn producing plant are being thrown open daily, it is stated, to wounded soldiers able to make the trip there. All the latest Vitagraph productions are being screened for the benefit of the convalescents. Arrangements to this effect were made this week by Private F. R. Hirsch of the 5th Regiment, U. S. Marines, with Frank Loomis, studio manager. The arrangements provide for the transportation of parties daily, it is said, to the studio from the Red Cross convalescent house at the Pelham Bay naval hospital. Mr. Hirsch was formerly on the staff of the Motion Picture News.

Metro Will Feature Dana in "The Microbe"

Metro has purchased a new story for Viola Dana which promises to be the strongest dramatic role this actress has ever had on the screen.

"The Microbe" was a short story of human appeal published in Ainslee's by Henry Altimus.

Work has already commenced, it is stated on the adaptation of the story to the screen at the studios in Hollywood, where the production of the piece will be made in all the lavishness, it is said, of the author's vividly descriptive word-pictures of the settings of the interiors.

Special Service Section on

D. W. Griffith's "True Heart Susie"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show D. W. Griffith's newest picture, "True Heart Susie" will of course play up his name and the fact that this is his newest offering, but we would suggest going further than that here and getting into the exploitation a selling argument on the heart interest.

This picture is just what a sub-title labels it—"the story of a plain girl" and we would carry that line in every advertisement.

Now this is a simple little story with every scene laid in a country town and the nearest villain that we have is a sort of a amateur near-vampire and the only violence a rather comic fight between the hero and another of the boys at college. Simplicity is the point to stress the greatest at the same time telling your patrons that it is the art of Griffith that makes this so delightful.

Here you have one of the strongest casts of any of the shorter Griffith features, including Robert Harron, Lillian Gish, Clarine Seymour and Carrol Dempster, who appeared in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," George Fawcett, Kate Bruce, Loyola O'Connor, Raymond Cannoon and Walter Higby. By all means we would mention at least the first five names.

THIS is the story of the picture which is practically all laid in a little Indiana village. Susie May Treheart, an awkward little country girl, is in love with William Jenkins, her boy neighbor across the way. Her interest is shown at the "spelling match" at the country school, where it almost breaks her heart to "jump" her sweetheart. There are some amusing scenes where William is too bashful to kiss Susie, but is a "regular devil" with the other girls.

William's ambition is to go to college and become a preacher, but when he broaches the matter to his father he is told that it is out of the question for there is no money. But this barrier seems removed when "a stranger from the great outside world" passes through the village and in the course of his fourflushing for the benefit of the youngsters he declares that he has started out many great men in life and takes the name of William, promising that the boy shall hear from him. Both Susie and her sweetheart jump to the conclusion that the college question is as good as settled.

Susie is the one to come to the conclusion that the stranger never intended to write but she is determined that William shall have his college course, that the man she is going to marry must be educated. And she has already decided that William is the man and they have pledged their love by cutting their initial in the lovers' tree.

DESPITE the objections of the maiden aunt who lives with her, Susie decides to sell the cow, some of the poultry and the like to get the money for William's education, for the property has been left to Susie by her mother and none can interfere. Then they go to a neighboring town and mail the money to William, who immediately jumps to the conclusion that it came from the stranger.

And so with the money and through work as a waiter, William makes his way through college, while there are many scenes in the home town showing the faith with which Susie is waiting, cheered even with the brief message that says: "So far I haven't met anybody that I like better than the people at home." And so when he comes back, now an ordained preacher and the possessor of a moustache of which he is very proud, Susie confides to her diary that they are to be married in the spring and then sets the date up to August.

There is a scene at the village store where there are two flappers from the neighboring village seen, by William cheers her heart by saying: "You see those two painted and powdered girls. Men flirt with that sort, but they marry the plain kind." And this Susie again takes to heart as meaning her.

COMES the evening of the ice cream festival for the departing minister whose pulpit William is to take. But there has come to visit her aunt Betty Hopkins, a little milliner of the flapper type, and of course she meets the young minister. Susie's aunt doesn't like the attention that William pays her, but Susie recalled the remark at the store and sees that Betty is the same sort of a girl and replies "He doesn't like that sort." But her confidence is shaken when she sees the young minister escorting the flapper to her aunt's home.

Betty is tired of work and though she looks down on a country minister she changes her mind when he shows her a letter, accepting his stories she is determined to land him. And she does, Susie helping the bride dress and hiding her broken heart behind a pathetic smile.

Soon William is partly undeceived. He finds that his wife cannot cook and there is a contrast with the dinner that Susie serves, he sees curl papers take the place of curls and that there is a lot of difference when the rouge is not on the lips. Finally in a storm of rage she declares to him that she "hates the damned place." He realizes his mistake and when he sees Betty with some letters he advises her to marry, but to be sure she gets the right one.

At left, Susie is going to part with her cow; in the center, the wife in one of her escapades, and at the right, one of the gripping scenes with Susie and the young minister

Picture in the center shows Susie and the erring wife who has fled to her that she may hide her escapade. It is striking for newspaper advertising. Scenes at the right and left show the young minister with the two girls, and afford striking contrast in the types of the two women

THEN the minister is away and some of her flapper friends come to visit her and they are dancing when William returns. He sees Sporty Malone with Betty in his arms kissing her, but the girl is able to persuade him that he has seen wrong. But a little later under the plea of being ill and going to another room to sleep Betty meets her friends and they go to a dance which is not of the most conservative kind. Returning they are caught in a rainstorm and it is only after her friends have left that she discovers she has lost her key.

Her only hope is Susie and she goes to the latter's home and persuades her to lie for her and to tell William that she has spent the whole night there. Again William is foiled, but the wetting has fatal consequences, and as the girl is dying she tries to confess, but fails as she lived—a little unfaithful.

There William pledges himself never to marry again, but a while later Susie's aunt takes things in her own hands and tells William that it was Susie who supplied his education and one of Betty's chums gives the rest of the story with the confession of the party. Then the happy ending.

FOR those who design their own advertising we recommend strongly three of the series of scene pictures that we have shown here. One of them is of the boy and girl at the lover's tree, another of Susie and Betty in bed after the latter's escapade, and the third of Susie at the gate. The first and third of these are probably the most striking for heart appeal.

Then after the use of Griffith's name, the title and the line "The story of a plain girl" let us get into the selling argument. Here is one:

"Love meant everything to this little girl of the true heart. There was no questioning, no lack of faith, no thought of herself. She told her pet cow and her chickens that the youth she loved might have the education he yearned for, and she hid the act from him, sure that when he came home it would be to take her to his heart.

"He told her that the painted women were the sort that men flirted with, but that they married the plain ones—and this confirmed in her mind their initials that the boy had carved in lovers' tree. And so when she saw this man of her heart with one of the 'flappers' she was not worried, for this was the sort of a girl that he didn't like.

"But little Susie didn't know. Her heart was breaking when she helped the other girl dress for the wedding to the man that SHE loved, and hid her grief behind a smile. She even protected the girl wife when she deceived her husband—lied, not for the girl, but that the man SHE loved might not be pained.

"It's a wonderful story with lots of laughs, lots of grips at the heart and one of the endings you all like."

HERE is one especially suited for use with the picture of the two girls in bed:

"Susie loved William better than anything else in the world—so much that she had denied herself that he might have an education. But now this 'flapper' beside her had stolen him from her, and at this moment Susie was protecting her after her escapade. Tomorrow she was to go to William and lie for her—lie because she loved this man so much.

"Susie's was a heart of hearts. Every act in her life was guided by that wonderful love, one that will bring you now a laugh, then a big gulp in the throat and finally the delight in your heart that comes when all is well in the world."

Here is another one suited for any of the scenes:

"William Jenkins was now the village minister and a successful author and two women wanted him.

"One was a 'flapper' and she was tired of working in a milliner's shop. She wanted what she thought would be a life of ease, expecting to continue her pleasure, with little thought of really being a minister's wife.

"The other—because she loved him with a true heart—that tore her heart even when she won a prize in school over him—so great that she secretly sacrificed her choicest possessions that he might have the education that he craved.

"Now he was back in the village again—and the 'flapper' won him.

"Too late—and he was partially undeceived. She let other men take her in their arms and press kisses on her lips; she stole away from home to gay parties and then invoked the aid of Susie to shield her. And Susie did—

"For though she knew that this man was lost to her, though there never should be a hint of her love given—she still loved him better than all else in the world. And so she told her first lie—to shield HIM. Little did she know then—

"But in the end it's just as you would have it, after you've smiled a lot and felt a tear or two trickle down her cheek."

A coupe of shorter ones:

"She gave her choicest treasures that the man she loved might have an education and hid the deed from him, little knowing that she was making of him a man that another woman would win. And then she lied for this other one, now his wife, that he might be spared—her's a true heart, a wonderful love—and a love that won."

"Her love never wavered through the happy days in the village, through the sacrifices she made for him—even when he married another. Her heart was too true to ever be shaken. He was stolen away from her and yet above everything she wanted him to be happy, it's an amazing story of smiles and heart throbs with the ending you'll like."

We would omit reference to the flapper's death in any of the selling talks, for it may leave a wrong impression on a few.

Tone Counts in Exploitation and Presentation Here

PRESENTATION and exploitation of this picture should be kept on a very high plane. The appeal is distinctly to the heart, with the aid of the name of D. W. Griffith as the producer, and Lillian Gish and Robert Harron as the featured players. You will get far more people into your theatre if you play on the emotions with simple methods than by sensational policies.

If you use lobby displays we would suggest rustic settings here, but remember that this is a story of a village and not of the farm, and there should be a difference made. Vine or flower clad trellises will help to get this effect, and we would devote the rest of the display to cut-outs of Miss Gish, Harron and some of the other principal characters. We wouldn't get the church idea too strong in this street flash, for it is likely to mislead.

Keep away from the stunt and teaser, and add more space to your newspaper campaign. This is a sort of a picture that S. Barret McCormick would devote a lot of space to, using a variety of scene pictures in his displays together with changing selling talks and you have a good tip here.

FOR WEEK BEFORE

Chance to Make Announcement a Real Feature

HERE is a chance to get quite a feature out of the announcement of this picture during the week before the showing of this picture.

The current issue of the Photoplay Magazine Supplement contains pictures of Mr. Griffith on the studio lot at the Fine Arts studios and then shows a fade-in of scenes from "The Birth of a Nation." Then we see the "ruins" of the sets for "Intolerance" and there are other fade-ins of scenes from that picture.

Now by using the trailer on "True Heart Susie" you have the whole thing linked up to work for the following week's business and at the same time furnish interest while the combination matter is being shown. It's the very best sort of exploitation and it'll get a big hand where most mere announcements are passed over.

BY all means if you played "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" we would call attention to the fact that Clarine Seymour and Carrol Dempster, who had the principal male roles in that picture, also appear in this one. They attracted much attention in the former Griffith offering, and they are apt to increase the business with "True Heart Susie." Miss Seymour has the role of the little "flapper" who wins the minister, while Miss Dempster has less to do as one of her chums.

This should be mentioned in the letter that you send out, and if the lettter business has not been overdone in your section we would recommend it here. If you have an opportunity to see this in advance of the showing and can tell your public so, we would include that statement and then put the emphasis on the humanness and heart appeal:

> We have just seen D. W. Griffith's latest picture, "True Heart Susie," and we believe that it is our duty to tell you that we believe it one of the most remarkable love stories that we have ever seen. It centers about a boy and a girl in a country town and a "flapper" who comes from the city and wins him. But that just starts the revelation of the love of True Heart Susie.
> There is nothing massive or astounding or spectacular about it. It is simply the sort of a story that alternates a laugh with a little catch at the heart—the sort of a story that you know is true to real life. It was a wonderful treat to us; we believe it will be to you.
> Lillian Gish and Robert Harron head the cast which includes Clarine Seymour and Carrol Dempster who pleased so much in Mr. Griffith's "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

HIGH class music should be used through this. There is little occasion for anything of the agitato, mysterioso effect, and we would rather use straight selections with the theme coming back rather often. The very frothy stuff should be kept out of the score except for the moment where the girl is seen playing modern dance music in the minister's home. For the scenes in the school "Schooldays" might be used, played pp.

If you use an overture, try "Gems From Stephen Foster," or at least one of the old time airs, for there is something of the old-time spirit about the girl in this picture, though it is a story of today.

By all means there should be a love song for the prologue to this one, and there can be nothing better than the oft recommended rose garden setting. We would prefer to use a girl singer clad simply in white. Songs that are well suited to such an arrangement are "Mavis," "When You Are Truly Mine," "Then You'll Remember Me," "Mighty Lak a Rose," "Because I Love You Dear," and "Love Is Best of All." Even "Listen to the Mocking Bird" can be splendidly utilized here.

Carry this air as the theme past the first titles and then introduce it again as the boy and girl are seen together at the tree, again for the letter that she receives, then for his return for the scene where she is burying the lettters, at the bridal ceremony, and then when she goes to lie for the other girl and finally at the end.

There can be a lighter theme used for the other girl up to the time of her illness, such as "A Little Love," "Any Time Is Kissing Time," or "Smiles." This should come first for the scene in the store, where he sees the "painted women," and then as the girl displays her ankle going up the steps and for the lighter scenes that are evident

For the rest of the score use such selections as "Woodland Whispers," "Valley of the Poppies," "Dream Kisses" and the like.

This picture will stand any sort of an accompanying program, but we would include a comedy and a news reel will get to today stronger in the presentation.

It Seems a Pity Ruth Roland Sees Fit to Hide Even Partially Behind the Parasol

Ruth Roland Escapes to Gotham

and Tom Hamlin Gets News of Her New Plans

AFTER fifteen thrilling innings of strenuous travel along "The Tiger's Trail," the heroine successfully eluded the villain and all his accomplices and journeyed to New York from the West Coast for a "rest."

Only a serial star like Ruth Roland would be able to appreciate the peace and quiet of this isle of Manhattan after the intensive filming of thirty reels of hairbreadth escapes.

But the Pathe artist heeded the recently adopted slogan of "Give a Thought to Broadway," and she is now taking her first glimpse of that thoroughfare in two years. No band was at the station to greet her but she received an impromptu ovation from a bunch of urchins who were quick to recognize their screen favorite who appeared unheralded before their eyes.

"Der's Ruth, Hello Ruth!" etc., were samples of the vociferous greetings of her little admirers. She confessed afterwards at the Claridge that the whole-souled plaudits of such a gathering was worth more to her ears than a hundred brass bands.

Miss Roland is unaffected, and a bit of California sunshine. After a ten days' visit around New York she will complete the organization of her own company which she will head in all her future serial productions for Pathe distribution.

The interviewer found that two serials a year can be made by a serial star and her company. This means sixty reels every twelve months; equal in length to one five-reel feature a month. But a five-reel feature is another story from five reels of any modern serial.

Miss Roland avers that every two-reel episode in a serial has to be filled with punches with a knockout at the end of each episode which will bring them back. Whereas a five-reel feature is generally only expected to provide possibly one anti-climax and one grand climax at the end of five long reels.

"A two-reel episode in a serial is a five-reel feature shorn of the superfluous padding," declared Miss Roland. "The story is there the same as the steel is there as the real essential in a modern building before the concrete is put on. As a practical cane back chair is to an upholstered settee so is the serial episode to the five-reel feature."

The interviewer determined then and there that if he wanted to laze away five reels of comfort he would see a five reel picture, but that if he wanted real live wire entertainment served right off the griddle he would invariably choose the two-reel episode of a modern serial;—especially one starring Ruth Roland.

We remember the Ruth Roland serials in the order they appeared for the last few years. The first was "The Price of Folly" and the one just completed was "The Tiger's Trail." The intervening serials headed by Miss Roland were "Who Pays?" "The Red Circle," "The Neglected Wife," and "Hands Up."

"Would you rather star in serials than in the longer feature productions," queried the interviewer brazenly.

"I'd rather be just where I am," responded the little athletic star. "In the very small group of female serial-stars I am not lost. There is a regular army of female stars in the lengthy productions. Competition is not so great in my line.

"Besides this I always enjoy myself thoroughly in the rapid series of events so essential in the production of a serial that will thrill. You know there is more excitement and absolutely no monotony. I have the glowing pride of something really accomplished if through my efforts many thousands are brought back into thousands of theatres for fifteen straight visits.

"And you would be surprised to know of the class of patrons the modern serials draw now. The melodramatic effects are generally calculated to attract the masses rather than the classes, but somehow of late the so-called better class of patrons are attending which goes to show that the serial has a positive appeal for all.

"Of course, the children are the more enthralled. And if you want a real army of boosters for a theatre, give me the boys every time. They bring their parents to the

"Westerners" has Locale in Dakota Black Hills

"All the world loves American Western pictures," says Benjamin B. Hampton, producer of "The Westerners" from Stewart Edward White's famous novel of the Black Hills, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution. "From the days of Broncho Bill's one reelers to the time of William S. Hart, more net profits have been made by the producers of 'Westerns' than have come to any other group of picture makers."

"The Westerners," as produced by Mr. Hampton for Great Authors Pictures, Inc., is the Western picture in a de luxe edition. Its locale is the Dakota Black Hills in the days of the gold rush, when the white man broke his treaties and forced his way into Pah-sep-pah, the Valhalla of the Sioux.

"The picture is historically correct in every detail." The cast includes Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Wilfred Lucas, Robert McKim, Graham Pettie and little Mary Jane Irving. Edward Sloman directed.

Approaching Fight Turns Interest to Willard Picture

Sharp bidding for rights to the "Challenge of Chance" in which Jess Willard, heavyweight champion, appears, is reported by Fred L. Wilke, president of the Continental Pictures Corporation. As interest in the forthcoming heavyweight fight increases, the public appears more desirous of seeing the champion, in film form at least.

Practically all work is now complete on the feature, the company having finished the California scenes and returned to Chicago. Mr. Wilke last week conferred with the champion regarding exploitation of the picture.

"All Wrong" Is Next Washburn Picture

Ninth in the list of Pathe's Extra Selected Star Photoplays, comes Bryant Washburn, in "All Wrong," a comedy in five acts by Mildred Considine, which will be released June 1st. It was produced by the Anderson-Brunton Company from a scenario by Jack Cunningham, and directed by William Worthington and Raymond B. West.

There are many farcical situations, it is said, contained in the comedy, while at the same time there is said to be a certain amount of pathos.

Magazine Inserts Given As Exhibitor Aid

To aid the exhibitors of the S-L picture "Virtuous Men," the distinctive two and four page advertising inserts used in the trade magazines have been converted for use by the theatre owner. Reprints in the original colors have been made of the inserts, with space left for the imprint of the theatre and the playing date, and these will be furnished at nominal cost to the exhibitor.

circus and the parents attend with the stereotyped joke excuse that they merely want to see the children have a good time. But the older folk wouldn't miss the show for the world. It's the same way with a serial. It grows on them. I consider it a great tribute to myself and company if we can bring them back, old and young, rich and poor, for fifteen consecutive times.

"Did you ever notice when riding on trains," continued Miss Roland, "that the persons with the most serious mien are reading the magazines containing stories of stirring adventure. Occasionally they are reading such a melodramatic publication that they camouflage it by concealing the magazine within the folds of the Literary Digest.

"The people of today are living through strenuous times. No milk and water literary diet for them. When they want real thrills on the screen they pick a serial night. And the exhibitors pay the serials the highest tribute by invariably booking them on what had previously been the poorest night of the week. And the serial always delivers the goods—and that's the answer."

Miss Roland considers that a serial on the screen is like the stock company playing a repertoire of plays before practically the same audience week after week. The stock company and the serial company get in closer touch with the people than the one-night stand company or the five-reel feature company. They acquire a larger and more loyal following.

The Pathe star is not quite ready to announce who will be her leading man in the newly organized Ruth Roland Serial Productions Company, but she will soon announce her cast. She feels that by personal supervision over all her own stories, continuity and directing, she will be able to produce bigger and better pictures. We agreed that this would be very probable if it were possible to make them any better.

And Miss Roland is to use a story written by herself for her next serial production.—Tom Hamlin.

Much Expected of Madge Kennedy's New One

Goldwyn officials, at the first private showing of Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential," expressed the belief it is the best work yet done by the comedienne.

This picture was originally written in play form by Jerome K. Jerome, and was produced on Broadway and in England. Clarance G. Badger directed it. Herbert Standing plays opposite the star.

Earle Williams in First Vita Release of June

The June Vitagraph schedule is inaugurated by Earle Williams in "A Rogue's Romance." Katherine Adams is the leading woman, and other players include Brinsley Shaw, Harry Van Meter, Maude George and Herbert Standing. James Young directed the production.

To Exploit Brentwood Features

Robertson-Cole Enters Into a Contract with Brentwood Company to Handle Its Entire Product for Ensuing Year

William Desmond, Now a Robertson-Cole Star

EXULTANT it is said over the great success won by "The Turn in the Road," through its judicious exploitation by Robertson-Cole, the Brentwood Film Corporation, through its president, L. C. Haynes, has just entered into a contract whereby its entire product for the ensuing year will be assigned to Robertson-Cole. This contract, it is declared, calls for the same rigid code of acceptance governing all productions made by the various Robertson-Cole Units, which gives Robertson-Cole the power to decide when a photoplay comes up to its standard before releasing it through Exhibitors Mutual. All Robertson-Cole pictures are released through Exhibitors Mutual.

The Brentwood Corporation has decided upon no definite number of productions for the year, but will devote as much time as is necessary to make every one of its attractions the best possible.

Under the terms of the contract with Brentwood, Robertson-Cole will release "Better Times," the second King W. Vidor production, as successor to "The Turn in the Road," and Vidors initial effort with Brentwood.

"Better Times" has just been completed.

"The Brentwood-Robertson-Cole alliance undoubtedly will be received as a radical step by the entire film industry, said an official of Robertson-Cole, inasmuch as Brentwood is probably the only big producing organization in the field which does not employ high salaried stars. It depends upon clean, wholesome, entertaining stories, well fitting types of all around competent players and upon the keeness of the ability of its director, King W. Vidor. Vidor has proved his ability, "The Turn in the Road" is evidence enough. The young director apparently has grasped the big idea of his profession to give the public pictures that will entertain them. He certainly did this with "The Turn in the Road," and from all reports his work on "Better Times" is just as effective.

"However, since the story must, in the last analysis, be relied upon to hold the public, it is the story which should receive the first consideration, in the Brentwood theory. Next should come the director, Brentwood assumed, and then the players who should be cast purely on the basis of their fitness and without any reference whatever to the drawing powers of their names.

Plans Supplementary Campaigns on Features

"COMMON CLAY," starring Fannie Ward, has proved in still increasing figures, it is said, to be the biggest money-getting feature ever issued by Pathe Exchange, Inc. Not content with merely exceeding previous records, Pathe has planned a second campaign for "Common Clay," with new advertising, new publicity and some entirely fresh ideas for exploitation.

The revival of interest in "Common Clay" is begun with the purpose of making it as near 100 per cent as possible. And the same action will be taken with "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys.

Warm praise of the feature has come, it is reported, from all of the high class houses that have shown it, including the Rialto, New York, where it was first shown to overflowing attendances, it is declared, and the Strand, Birmingham, Ala.; Rialto, Atlanta, Ga.; Washington, Dallas, Liberty, Houston and Grand Opera House, San Antonio, Tex.; Riviera, Chicago; Reuben & Finkelstein, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.; Gordon's Olympia, Boston; Kopler Circuit, St. Louis; Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles, T. & D. Tivoli, San Francisco, and Kinema, Oakland, Cal.; Clinton Square, Albany, N. Y.; Olympic, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Walnut, Louisville, Ky.; Walnut, Cincinnati, Alhambra, Toledo, and Orpheum-Strand, Cleveland, Ohio; Strand, New Orleans, La.; Moore's Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Newman, Kansas City, Mo.; Rivoli, Denver, Colo.; Strand, Omaha, Neb.; Rex, Seattle; Broadway, Salt Lake City, and Orpheum, Ogden, Utah; Colonial, Indianapolis, and American, Terre Haute, Ind.; Adams, Detroit, Mich.; Garden, Des Moines, Ia.; Strand, Newark, N. J., and Garden, Paterson, N. J.; Ottowa, Charlotte, N. C.; Regent, Rochester, and Olympic, Buffalo, N. Y.; Liberty, Spokane, Wash.; Merrill, Milwaukee, Wisc.

Vekroff to Direct Newest World Picture Star

Perry N. Vekroff has been engaged by World Pictures to direct the production of "The Dust of Desire," a photoplay in which Rubye de Remer will have the stellar honors.

The mechanical work on the production has already been begun so that no time will be lost in making the picture.

Exhibitors Book First Fairbanks

Constant Stream of Foremost Theatre Men Are Said to Be Booking First United Artists Production

THE announcement of United Artists Corporation opening its campaign for the release of its first production, a Douglas Fairbanks picture, on September first, has brought a constant stream of the foremost picture theatre men of the country to its offices, it is declared.

During the last week, for example, Eugene H. Roth of the California and Portola Theatres in San Francisco, who came East solely, it is said, to arrange in person for the Fairbanks picture, wired his Board of Directors that he had successfully completed negotiations with United Artists Corporation and that he had secured the Fairbanks production for an extended run beginning early in September for the California Theatre.

Among the many other visitors of note was F. Ealand, Managing Director of the Majestic Theatre of Detroit, Mich. Mr. Ealand has secured United Artists first release for his house.

Hiram Abrams, General Manager of United Artists Corporation, has personally negotiated, it is said, with almost all of the exhibitors who have come to the company's offices, and he has expressed himself as more firmly convinced than ever of the equity and sound business foundation of the sales policy on which the pictures of the United Artists are to be released.

"Our single picture policy," said Mr. Abrams, "was inaugurated by exhibitor demand. In my investigation all over the country I found that picture theatre men had come to the point of exasperation with program and star series methods. They wanted to have the best in productions, but they wanted these pictures on a basis of freedom that would allow them to make as much profit out of each big release as was possible.

"I got this demand direct from exhibitors themselves, face to face, man to man. And that this demand was not idle talk, that it was sincere, is proved by the unanimity with which these self-same exhibitors are signing up for our first release on exactly this basis. To have theories about methods of release is one thing; we can argue without end and get nowhere. The proof of what exhibitors want is in what way they buy, and not a single exhibitor who has come to our office—and we have been in touch with hundreds—has suggested the slightest change in our open booking, single picture plan.

"The pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith stand alone as box-office attractions. They are thoroughly sold to the public; an exhibitor's campaign in their behalf amounts almost entirely to calling the attention of the public that he has these pictures at the house.

"I don't want to be premature in announcements regarding our first release which is scheduled for September, but I will say that the lengths of the runs for which exhibitors are taking the picture is the most satisfying demonstration of their new sense of freedom under our sales policy. These men are taking the picture for runs that will be absolutely revolutionary. They are going to play the picture for every penny profit that they can get out of it."

Gets Broad Experience With First National

"WHEN an exhibitor rises to the point that he is a business power in his state," said an official of First National, "and owns and operates seven of its leading theatres, as is the case with E. H. Hulsey, of Texas, the public, and especially other exhibitors, begin to wonder how he did it.

"Mr. Hulsey has an exceptionally strong corner on the motion picture business in Texas. He owns the Old Mill, the Queen and the Hippodrome Theatres in Dallas; the Zoe and the Queen in Houston; the Queen in Galveston, and the Hippodrome in Waco. This places him at the point where he stands a strong candidate to be elected the biggest exhibitor in Texas.

"Mr. Hulsey has been a careful student of the business. He watches the work of every star and every director. Before the picture business came to its present great tendency toward open bookings, Mr. Hulsay had decided that this was the system for him, and when the First National Exhibitors' Circuit was organized he was one of the first to affiliate himself with it.

"He took the First National franchise for each of the cities in which he has theatres. In this way he assured himself of getting pictures, which he considered necessary to meet his needs. In taking the franchise, he at once became a booking agent as well, for each franchise holder has the right to book to other exhibitors in the territory for which he holds the franchise.

"It will be seen that the man who buys a franchise of this sort must be sure that the picture is especially good for not only is he selecting it for his personal use, but for booking in the houses of other exhibitors to whom he may hope to rent it."

"The greatest advantage which has come to me in my dual role of exhibitor and agent," said Mr. Hulsey recently, "is the broadening experience of being both in the position of the man who shows a picture, and the man who goes out to sell it.

"Through the eyes of other exhibitors, who rent the films from me I learn things which even the owner of seven theatres has not known before. I get the film business from even a broader angle, and the more I know about it the greater will be my success."

No Films in War Area

Al E. Christie announces that he will positively not make any film productions in Europe on the site of the late lamented war.

McClure Starts Work on the "Yellow Eel"

Production has been started on "The Yellow Eel," the three-part serial picture, which is being made by McClure Productions with the co-operation of the Government, it is said. The director, cast, and members of the McClure staff left recently for Connecticut, where they are now at work upon the opening scenes of the picture, which is to be released under the subtitle of the "Silver Chevron Series."

"The Yellow Eel" is being directed by Charles H. France, who has done notable work with Selig, Edison and Keystone productions. The scenario is by Marguerite Aspinwall, a member of the McClure editorial staff.

Alice Mann takes the leading part in the serial. She will be remembered for her appearance in many Paramount, Pathe and Vitagraph pictures and in support of Taylor Holmes in "A Pair of Sixes."

Supporting her sister, Frances Mann plays the part of a woman secret service agent who assists in the fight against the mysterious "Yellow Eel," a character typical of the under-handed Bolshevistic forces at large in America.

The Government is said to be lending full co-operation in the production and through its representatives at Bridgeport is assisting in the filming of the opening scenes there. The picture necessitates the services of hundreds of extras and in several of the scenes war secrets are revealed, it is stated, that were never before generally known.

Neilan Shortly to Commence Work for First National

Production in film form of a "best seller" the name of which is withheld will be the first work done by Marshall A. Neilan for the First National. The director's arrangement provides he start work for this concern June 1.

At present Mr. Neilan is directing the new Anita Stewart picture called "Kingdom of Dreams." This will be completed by the end of the month.

The names of the star, or any of the cast who will appear in his First National picture, are at present withheld.

Says "Heads Win" Meets Big Success

Filmdon's first five-reel educational drama, "Heads Win!", produced under the supervision of Harry Levey, manager of Universal's Educational Department, is meeting with unlooked for success in its tour of the country, during which, it is said, it is to be booked in 8,000 theatres.

This unique production has already been booked in nearly 100 theatres in New York and vicinity, it is stated, and will start on its westward tour within a few weeks. It was reported by the Universal exchange in Chicago that there had already been scores of demands for it by exhibitors in that section.

Says Goldwynner Reaches 17,000 Exhibitors

A DeLuxe Catalog Edition of The Goldwynner, is now in circulation among more than 17,000 exhibitors of the United States and Canada, it is said.

The Catalog Edition, designed and edited to give the trade concise facts and news on the entire Goldwyn output made and released to June 1st, inclusive, embodies the titles, authorship, direction, cast, reelage and descriptive stories on Goldwyn Star Series Productions, "twenty-six" Goldwyn Pictures, Louis Bennison Star Series of Western dramas, Capitol Comedies starring "Smiling Bill" Parsons and Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven, the Ford Educational Weekly and the Goldwyn Extra releases.

Production in East Planned By Triangle

Erection of studios and early production in the East, was announced this week by the Triangle Film and Distributing Corporations following the disposition of the Culver City studios to Goldwyn.

Advantages of climate and locations, together with the expressed desire of many film players to work in the East, are factors which weighed in the decision to abandon the Western for the Atlantic coast, according to P. L. Waters, president of the concerns.

Studios and locations have already been provided in the East he declared. Specific announcement of production activities is withheld until plans under way have matured.

May Allison's Next is "Almost Married"

May Allison's next starring subject which Metro released on June 2nd, is "Almost Married."

Many of the scenes of this comedy of stage life feature the musical attractions of the theatre and the roof-garden jazz, with Miss Allison as the prima donna surrounded, it is said, by Broadway and Midnight Follies show girls.

Miss Allison is said to do her best and most natural work in clear, clean, straight comedy, and it is said that she is even more sparkling than ever before in this tale of a little Swiss Nightingale who comes to America to seek fame and fortune via the musical comedy stage.

Live Topics Depicted in Current Kinograms

Sergeant York, heralded as the greatest single hero of the war will be seen in the current issues of Kinograms, together with views of his mountain home in Tennessee.

Among the ten other features depicted are the first views of the landing of the N.C.-4, the naval plane, at Ponta Delgada, and the last pictures taken of Hawker the English aviator, prior to his attempt to make an Atlantic flight.

Releases "A Star Over Night"

Laemmle Announces First of Two-Reel Productions of Stage Women's War Relief Series in David Belasco Will Star

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Company, announces the release of the first of the two-reel productions of the Stage Women's War Relief Series pictures. The first of the series to be released is the one in which David Belasco is starred. The picture is now ready for distribution through the Universal exchanges and has been given the title of "A Star Over Night."

All of the money raised through the distribution of the dozen photoplays is to be used by the Stage Women's organization for the maintenance of a theatre in the Grand Central Palace Debarkation Hospital No. 5, New York City. It was for this purpose and this alone that the pictures were produced and it was for that reason only perhaps that many of the stars who appear in the various casts offered their services to the Stage Women's War Relief organization. The writers of the plays also volunteered their services and the authors are among the best known in the country.

David Belasco, who heads the cast of "A Star Over Night," is one of America's greatest showmen. In this story of the stage he is assisted by the many celebrities, all of whose names are well known among the theatrical profession. They are Bruce McRae, the Indian, English-American actor who has played opposite Effie Shannon, William Gillette, Julia Marlowe, Ethel Barrymore and many others; Hamilton Revelle, who has been in many Klaw and Erlanger and Belasco successes; Elizabeth Risdon, a well known Broadway star; Mrs. Nate Rothschild, Hilda Spong, Edward Martindel, Gladys Morris, and Kathleen Nesbitt.

"A Star Over Night" was written by Ann Irish, and depicts the efforts of a young actress to become successful on the stage and also the efforts of an author and dramatist to secure the staging of his plays.

In the series of twelve pictures to be released many notable stars are to be seen Many of them, it is said, have never posed before the motion picture camera before. Among the more famous of the stars are: Maclyn Arbuckle, Percy Haswell, Cyril Maude and Violet Hemming, David Bispham, Nance O'Neill, Alfred Hickman, Yvette Gilbert, Edmund Breese, Shelley Hull, Robert Edeson, Lucia Moore, Ralph Morgan, Mabel Talieferro, William Courteney, Jane Grey, Gail Kane, Conrad Nagle, Ethel Standard, Enid Markey, Montagu Love, Adele Rolland, Galli Curci, Holbrook Blinn, Jeanne Eagels, Helen MacKellar, Ethel Intropidi, Constance Binney, Otis Skinner, Henry Miller, Blanche Bates, William Jefferson, Daniel Frohman, Henry Hull, Lucia Moore, Florenz Ziegfeld, Julia Arthur, little Ben Grauer, and DeWitt Jennings.

The authors of the series are: Ann Irish, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Katherine Kavanaugh, Howard E. Miller, Frederick A. Kummer, Rachel Crothers, Wallace Clifton, Calder Johnstone, Jack Larric, Jessie Bonstelle, Mrs. Otis Skinner and Ethellyn Brewer DeFoe.

Among the most prominent members of the Stage Women's War Relief organization who were instrumental in the successful arranging of the pictures were: Rachel Crothers, president of the national board of directors, Louise Closser Hale, Margaret Mayo, Minnie DuPree, Rachel Crothers, Esther Lyons Eagle, Mrs. William Farnum and Daisy Humphreys.

Talbot of Denver Closes Vitagraph Contracts

A. G. Talbot, manager of the big American theatre in Denver, during his visit in New York recently, closed contracts, it is said, for all six of Vitagraph's star series, the Larry Semon comedies and the "Big V" Special comedies. This action was taken by Mr. Talbot after investigation and comparisons of service units and features made on the ground.

Mr. Talbot says, declares a Vitagraph official, "that 'The Lion and the Mouse,' Vitagraph's wonderfully successful adaptation of the Charles Klein play, with Alice Joyce in the leading role, attracted a business entirely beyond the capacious size of the American, even though several extra shows were squeezed into the schedule." This floodtide of patronage has forewarned him and he will use the next Alice Joyce-Charles Klein picture for a greater period.

Other unusual business reported declares the official by Mr. Talbot concerns "Beating the Odds," of which, according to arrangement with Vitagraph, he made a pre-release showing to such business that the aisles were choked, and further states that Corinne Griffith is always sure to cause the S. R. O. signs to appear.

An interesting incident in connection with Mr. Talbot's visit was his meeting with his old friend, Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady. The theatrical man averred that the doctor has been successful and energetic in later years as a writer of fiction and still more recently as a co-writer with Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's president, of Vitagraph serials, which, he added, "are immensely popular in Denver."

Marion Davies' Latest Nears Completion

Work on Marion Davies' latest starring vehicle, "April Folly," is well under way in the Biograph studio, where the star and a large company are working on the screened version of Cynthia Stockley's novel of the same name. Conway Tearle appears opposite Miss Davies in this feature, and Esther Marshall is seen to advantage in the early part of the story.

"April Folly" is said to give Miss Davies a chance to do something new.

"Dearth of Plots a Vital Menace"

Perry N. Vekroff Hits from the Shoulder on Screen Plots of the Day, and Suggests Convincing Remedy

TOUCHING on the "sore spot" with ungentle pen, Perry N. Vekroff, director, author and publicity man, predicts stagnation of the photoplay if strenuous effort is not made to obtain stories worthy of the advances made in photography, setting, direction, acting and presentation of latter day pictures.

"Shallow," "hackneyed," "perennial" are a few of the apt words used in his article concerning the increasing lack of strong plot offerings. Mr. Vekroff, as have others, finds the remedy in a " Screen literature," but not stopping at the mere suggestion, defines it clearly.

He writes:

" With the advent of the open market and other equally important developments in the exploitation of motion pictures, it can be safely predicted that a strenuous effort will be made to better the story. And it is about time such effort were made, if stagnation and decadence are to be avoided.

" Even a superficial study of the average screen offerings will reveal the deplorable fact that, in the matter of stories, the feature of today is hardly any better than the one and two-reeler of years gone by. In fact, sometimes, it is not as good. Stories have grown in length and breadth, but little in depth. While every effort and expense are made to secure the best photography, direction, acting and settings, the story itself continues to be as shallow of theme as ever, full of hackneyed situations, old fashioned traditions and the perennial heroes, heroines, villains and villainnesses. Usually the by-product of some novel, magazine or stage play, the feature of today has little to justify its length outside of the problematical value attached to a popular author's name. Such stories, written for specific media other than the screen, have at times been satisfactorily adapted to the requirements of the screen; as a rule, however, they prove most disappointing when shorn of their principal charm: their original descriptiveness in writing, or the spoken word.

" The alarming dearth of good stories upon which many important ventures must henceforth be based, will continue to prevail as long as producers ignore the fact that the screen has become too important a medium of expression to depend for its material on borrowed, worn-out, cast-offs. It demands a literature of its own. It is big enough, remunerative enough, cosmopolitan enough to be worthy of the best efforts of the greatest thinkers of the age. Its hypnotic influence upon the public has already been demonstrated. Unlike the novel, magazine, or stage play, which can carry an author's message only to those who understand the language in which he writes, the motion picture reaches an infinitely greater number of people, in much less time, and in a manner which impresses the memory regardless of age, sex, race and education.

" Just why authors have heretofore overlooked the possibilities of the screen and made little if any effort to study its requirements, is a question which the producers themselves can best answer. Possibly too much importance has been attached to the advertising value of a popular author's name. And the author, after squeezing all the remuneration he can possibly expect from the particular field for which his work is intended, is naturally glad to collect any additional " velvet " from th[illegible] of rights to what would otherwise be de[illegible] to the discard. He should worry what becomes of his book, play, or magazine story in the hands of the 'continuity man!' So long as the author gets his, what difference does it make that the public is made to pay twice—once for the original, and the second time for the distorted, misfit imitation?

" The motion picture art needs the authors—the best of them are none too good. It needs their ideas; their fertile imaginations; their broad scope on matters pertaining to our social, political and economical life. It needs their analytical powers; their wonderful sense of the fitness of things; their ability to dissect human character; their knack of pointing at cause and effect and of exposing the inside clock-works of things without insulting the intelligence of the public.

" The authors alone can revitalize the screen and raise it to a higher level of real usefulness. It is men of their culture and creative genius only, who can best select suitable themes and conceive plots and situations that will impress, amuse, thrill and edify the countless devotees of the screen. BUT—while the motion picture art needs all the authors it can enlist—it does not need their old novels, magazine stories or stage plays. What the motion picture art needs above everything else is: their complete scenarios, worked out in detail with all matter unsuitable to the camera cut out. Even synopses, written expressly for the screen, should not be considered. To pay large sums of money for a worthwhile idea and then some one else, other than the author, treat it, is about as logical a process as hiring a famous surgeon to diagnose a case and letting a nurse perform the actual operation.

" Of all the freak expressions in studio parlance, there is no misnomer so silly as that of 'continuity man.' He and the director are the official goats, upon whom authors delight laying the blame for the many faults and incongruities inherent to works conceived for media with which the screen has little in common.

" So far as the photoplay and the devotee of the screen are concerned, there is no difference between author and continuity writer. The continuity is the photoplay. If the ultimate thing we see on the screen is good, it is because the continuity is good; because the action has been treated in a well-balanced, well-motivated, well-timed manner. If, on the other hand, what we see on the screen is bad, it is because there is no continuity; because the plot is inorganic; because the original dramatic idea is either insignificant or insufficiently digested and developed through faulty treatment. Treatment of action without words—there is a statement that weighs many tons in pictures, but which, alas, is Greek to many of even the best authors.

" Therefore, I say: put the authors to work; stop buying synopses, magazine contributions, novels, and stage plays; consider only complete, detailed scenarios—and the right step toward establishing an indigenous photoplay literature shall be taken.

" Undoubtedly, it will be necessary to offer proper inducements to authors. But then, why not? There is no alternative, no compromise left. After all, 'the play is the thing' and that, in motion pictures, means the complete scenario.

" At all costs, let authors be made to study the posibilities and limitations of the camera, and see how many of their own ideas they will discard as unavailable—ideas, for which they now unhesitatingly accept remuneration, knowing, as they do, that they can always pass the buck to the director or continuity man.

" Many authors will have much to learn and much to unlearn before they can grasp the art of thinking in action in order to be able to treat action. It will mean studying the screen from new angles, and spending many an hour at the studio or locations in close communion with directors and artists. But the experience will be worth the time and trouble—not only to the author, but the director and everybody concerned; for they are always looking forward to better things in the way of inspiring themes, absorbing plots and masterful characterizations.

" When producers shall adopt the above method of selecting material, the screen will indeed come unto its own and the public—the long suffering and much abused public—will enjoy as much, if not more, a photoplay by Rupert Hughes and the rest of the fraternity, as they do reading one of their books or listening to one of their plays."

Will Rogers for Goldwyn

Will Rogers, of Ziegfeld Follies fame, will leave New York in a few weeks to work for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in a series of pictures that will give the Broadway lariat thrower, it is said, a chance to register his adeptness at western stunts as well as at coining quip and gag to put the audience in a good humor. The pictures are being arranged so that the titles will be samples of Roger's humor.

Burton Holmes Travelogue

The May 25 release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, "From Cocoon to Kimono," presented a marked contrast to the previous release, as it carries the spectator from sunny France to far-away Japan, where some of the wonders and entertaining features of the silk industry of that nation are revealed.

Prepares Theme-Sheet for Read's " Sahara "

The musical genius of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York, is still further revealed, it is said, in the beautiful theme-sheet prepared by him for J. Parker Read, Jr's., production " Sahara " starring Louise Glaum in a C. Gardner Sullivan story personally supervised by Allan Dwan and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

For days before a superb mounting of " Sahara " at a special trade showing at the Rialto Theatre, Dr. Reisenfeld is said to have worked on the scoring of this production and he confessed, it is declared, that rarely had there ever been a picture that so challenged his musical interest.

Lavner to Exploit Films for Hodkinson

Announcement is made from the sales organization of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that Harry S. Lavner has been appointed exploitation and publicity manager for the company's productions.

Mr. Lavnor for many years has been a threatrical advance man ahead of such shows as " Within the Law," " Fair and Warmer," " Twin Beds," and other theatrical companies. For the past eighteen months he has produced, it is said, each of the exhibitor press sheets with all of the releases of the Goldwyn Company.

In the Hodkinson organization, it is declared he will have fuller opportunity to develop exploitation and publicity aids.

New Pioneer Offering for State Right

Within a short time the Pioneer Film Company announces it will place before state right buyers " The Girl From Nowhere," featuring Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas.

The scenes are laid in the wilds of the northwest gold country, and the story deals with the experiences of a beautiful young woman found wandering helplessly in the woods bereft of memory.

A press book is being prepared and a selection of advertising material for lobby use will also be at the service of exhibitors booking this picture.

Blackton Buys Rights to " Phantoms "

J. Stewart Blackton has acquired, it is said, the screen rights for the world to "Phantoms," the magazine story by Wallace Irwin, which appeared serially in Hearst's Magazine.

"Phantoms" is the third of the collection of stories scheduled for filming by Blackton Productions, Inc., under the plans of the producer. The first is an original and yet unnamed story writen by himself. This is now in production. The second is "Dawn," by Eleanor H. Porter, author of "Pollyanna." Commodore Blackton now plans to record "Dawn" on the screen as soon as he finishes his current production, and follow it with "Phantoms."

Dazey and Hampton Join Selznick Forces

Myron Selznick announced two important appointments in the Selznick organization. Frank M. Dazey, well known photoplaywright, has been placed in charge of the scenaric department for Selznick, and Frank J. Hampton, who joined the organization a few months ago has been made Business Manager of the Selznick Pictures Corp.

Frank M. Dazey is numbered among the country's most successful scenario writers. He will be particularly remembered as the author of "Manhattan Madness," one of Douglas Fairbanks popular productions and of many of the famous Sidney Drew comedies.

Mr. Hampton has had a long experience in the picture game and has been with many of the big companies.

Forthcoming Russell Play Set in East

A comedy-drama from the pen of Stephen Fox, "A Sporting Chance," presented by the American, will follow "Some Liar" in the list of William Russell Productions.

The star will doff his usual Western atmosphere, and appear in this feature as a young New York millionaire. A woman of beauty and mystery, and a priceless emerald lend to adventures and complications in the story, leading to what is said to be an unusually strong climax.

Fritzi Brunette plays opposite Russell. Others in the cast are George Periolat, J. Farrell MacDonald, Lee Hill, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks. Henry King is the director. The release date is June 29.

Juvenile Court Incidents Will Be Pictured

A series of twelve two reel featurettes, based on the incidents and experiences of Judge Willis Brown, of Juvenile Court fame, is announced by World Pictures. During 25 years of reclamation work with children, Judge Brown has had many humorous and serious experiences and these will, form the themes of the pictures.

It is expected that admirers of Mark Twain, in particular those who have enjoyed reading the adventures of Tom Sawyer, will find these screen stories particularly entertaining.

Tells Exhibitors Stories of White's Drama

The members of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League, one of the largest showmen's organizations in the West, were regaled with stories of Stewart Edward White's Black Hills drama, "The Westerners," the Benjamin B. Hampton-Great Authors production, at their annual gathering in Deadwood recently by H. O. Bartels, Denver representative of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributor of the big special, many of the important scenes of which were taken within a stone's throw of the league's meeting place.

Exciting Events at Moore's Rialto Theatre

A PANIC among depositors in the Security Savings Bank of Washington, D. C., and a narrow escape from mob violence by the fire department of the Capital City were two of the series of unusual events caused, it is said, by the first run presentations of "Daddy Long Legs," first of the Mary Pickford special attractions to be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, at Moore's Rialto Theatre.

"The most unusual incident," declared Mr. Moore, "happened on Friday evening, May 23, when a slight fire was discovered in the second floor of Fisher's Dyeing and Cleaning establishment, just below the Rialto Theatre building. There was a line four deep, extending to the corner, more than half a block away, and around the corner for a considerable distance. In addition, there were hundreds of people packed in front of the theatre with tickets purchased during the morning and afternoon, waiting to get in.

"Someone sent in a fire alarm, and when the fire engines, hook and ladder trucks and the marshall reached the corner nearest the scene of the blaze they found the street absolutely blocked by the crowds. None in the packed mass of humanity had seen the blaze from the street, and someone shouted that the management had called out the department to break up the crowds and get them away from the theatre. The results was an outburst of protest when the police attempted to clear a way for the firemen. By nosing the big trucks so close people had to move or be run over, they finally succeeded in breaking through.

"On Saturday morning there was a repetition of the Thursday night mob situation, with results that were even more serious.

"As early as 9:30 on Saturday morning," continued Mr. Moore, "there was a big crowd in line waiting for the box office to open. An hour before the Rialto opened the crowd had become so great that it reached down Ninth Street to G and turied over G to Eighth Street, completely encircling the Security Savings Bank building. Within thirty minutes after the line had reached these proportions officials of the bank telephoned the city Commissioners to send police aid to disperse the crowds. They explained that depositors passing had seen the line and started the report that there was a run on the bank.

Goldwyn to Plan Exploitation for Exhibitor

COINCIDENT with the growth and expansion of Goldwyn Picture Service and Promotion Department comes the announcement of a new plan for lobby displays and exterior exploitation.

Hunt Stromberg, director of service for Goldwyn, announces improvements that are planned to minimize the investment of time, effort and money by the exhibitors.

"Plans for lobby displays have been more theoretical than practical," says Mr. Stromberg. "Exhibitors have been urged to do all sorts of things with their lobbies and, in the majority of instances, the ideas set forth involved too large an expenditure for the average theatre or were incapable of fulfillment by showmen in the smaller communities.

"With each Goldwyn Press and Service Book, there will be pages or a section devoted to illustrated descriptions of lobby displays and stage settings. We will suggest displays and back them up with a sketch that will prove their practicability and timeliness. This naturally means that the busy exhibitor will not be required to call a meeting of employees and figure out just how and why the lobby plan can be used. The pen and ink chart will do the thinking for him and save valuable time and energy.

"We shall incorporate ideas and plans for making cutouts of poster material. These suggestions will be guided by the advice of prominent show men and lobby decorators who know what they're talking about.

"Lobby displays, properly arranged, are of priceless value to the theatre-owner. The psychological effect of a stand or exhibit is a foregone conclusion. Whether that effect will be good, bad or indifferent is up to Goldwyn.

"To co-operate efficiently in outdoor promotion, the Service Department has arranged to distribute new star twenty-four sheets to all exhibitors who agree to post one or more.

Norma Talmadge Ably Supported in New Subject

"The Way of a Woman," originally announced under the title of "Nancy Lee," and adapted from Eugene Walters' stage play of that name, will be Norma Talmadge's next Select Picture.

Robert Z. Leonard, who is director for this production, made a special trip from the Western Coast for the one subject. A supporting cast which is considered exceptionally strong by Select, includes Conway Tearle in the leading male role; Hassard Short, now in a New York stage production; Jobyna Howland, George La Guerre, Gertrude Berkley, Stuart Holmes and Joe Humphrey.

Industry's Progress Credited to Exhibitors

TO the exhibitor rather than to the producer goes the credit and the laurels for the advance in the motion picture industry the past seven years, according to the opinion expressed last week by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company.

"No one producer or even one group of producers can claim to have made the motion picture industry what it is today," said Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company, when asked to what he attributed Universal's success in the past seven years.

"In my opinion," Mr. Laemmle said, "the producer has of course done a great deal to advance the industry, but the man who has contributed more to it than any other is the exhibitor. To the industry as a whole the exhibitor is the backbone, he is the one to count upon for new and novel ideas, and to whom the producer looks for suggestions. The exhibitor has been the mainstay of the industry for years and beyond a doubt the credit for the success of Universal or any other company is due to the many exhibitors of the country. The exhibitor has been the man to deal with the hardest group of all—the public—and he who somehow manages to please the public all the time is the best man of all. And the successful exhibitor of today is that man. He has worked hard for his success and has earned it through the patience of years and trials which have been many.

"The producer," Mr. Laemmle continued, "of course has had his knocks and trials also. But the producer in many cases has held the whip hand over the exhibitor. And some producers in the past have taken advantage of this. But the successful producer has not done this, he will not do it in the future. If he does he will eventually fail.

As president of the oldest company I can truthfully say that Universal never took advantage of the exhibitor and in my opinion that is why Universal is the oldest company. Universal has always been the friend and helper to the exhibitor."

Mr. Laemmle pointed to scores of messages received from exhibitors during Universal's first week of celebration in its anniversary months, in confirmation of the latter statement. One and all, he stated, expressed satisfaction at the treatment received from the Universal Company.

Cash Prizes Offered to the United Branches

AS an expression of appreciation of the splendid efforts put forth by Branch Managers and their sales forces during the current membership drive for United, and as a concrete and tangible inducement to intensified effort during the remaining four weeks of the drive, J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has announced that $1,000 in cash prizes will be awarded the seven United branches making the best record for sales during the four weeks' period began May the 18th and ending Saturday, June the 14th. In order that the smallest exchange may have equal opportunity in the contest with the largest exchange to capture the first prize, a quota for each competitor has been laid down and this percentage is based on fixed factors including number of theatres in each particular district.

In the award of prizes three factors will be taken into consideration, namely, the gross rentals on new contracts made during the four weeks of the contest period, the greatest number of stock days signed during that period and finally the established quota of each exchange.

In his announcement Mr. Berst makes it clear that these prizes will be awarded to the exchanges and not to the managers individually. By this provision the whole field force, salesmen, etc., of the successful exchanges will participate in the awards in each exchange territory.

Mr. Berst has called attention to the fact that this expenditure by United in the prize contest is calculated to be productive of immediate benefit to all United stockholders in that it will expedite the already rapid growth of United's membership and will doubtless add many hundred theatres during the contest period.

Thomas' Latest Deals With World Problems

"AUGUSTUS THOMAS has sounded the depth of human striving," says an official of W. W. Hodkinson, "in his new sociological screen drama produced by the Four Star Pictures Corporation, for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, with the author's personal supervision.

"The play is an extraordinary analysis of that huge problem which now grips the world, finding its main manifestations in the setting up of experimental governments, and the overturning of established order.

"There are some interesting high lights in the new Thomas play. It deals with the efforts of a foreign clique, financed and directed from a European revolutionary centre, to fan the spark of discontent among the poor of New York into a flame of destructive madness akin to that lighted by Lenine and Trotzky which has resulted in the chaos of Petrograd and Moscow, the terror of Bucharest and the later crises of Seattle and Winnipeg.

"The specious and incessant activities of foreign propagandists in the very heart of America's chief city are revealed in all their startling reality. The paid agents of foreign anarchistic juntas are visualized at their work among the underpaid and overworked among New York's population.

"Mr. Thomas' latest play is declared by Producer Harry Raver to be a 'stimulant to American patriotism.' George Irving, director; and Leah Baird, star of the production, are enthusiastic with regard to it. Mr. Thomas alone is as usual non-committal.

"I think we've got something worth while," he remarked, "let's hear what the public has to say, then perhaps I'll talk."

Wide Range in Sets Shown in "Peg O' My Heart"

"It has been said that all the world can be seen in a modern moving picture studio and that the customs and different circumstances which mark time from the beginning to the present day are all there presented," said an official of Famous players.

"The truth of this statement could be better appreciated if one could see two sets which have been constructed for the Paramount-Artcraft Special production, "Peg O' My Heart," which is being produced at the Lasky Studio under the direction of William C. DeMille.

The one is the elaborate drawing room of the English home of the wealthy Mrs. Chichester, a familiar character in the famous play.

The other setting represents the lowly dwelling of a humble Irish peasant, and represents the home of Peg and her father.

Bennison's Heart and Pocket Favors Film Career

Louis Bennison is one screen star who is perfectly frank as to why he deserted the legitimate stage. He admits the larger salary checks accruing to the successful picture player was his guiding motive in trading a promising career in the drama.

He now feels he made no mistake, for the characteristics he found retarded him on the stage—notably his inability to take seriously any melodramas—have aided him under the Cooper-Hewitts.

In the short time he has been in pictures, critics have stated he is a success. Bennison appreciates the compliment, but says nothing, hoping to bettter his work as he goes along.

Cuneo of Kansas Praises "Turn in the Road"

One of the greatest of the many tributes paid "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood picture which Robertson-Cole is releasing through Exhibitors Mutual, was given production recently by Roscoe C. Cuneo, proprietor of the Isis theatre, Russell, Kansas. Mr. Cuneo is rated one of the most conservative exhibitors in the Middle West. He says in a letter to the manager of the Kansas City branch of Exhibitors Mutual:

"I want to tell you that 'The Turn in the Road' was the best buy ever. I have used quite a number of big features during the past eight years, and this one certainly got me the money."

S-L Players to Stage

Two of the leading figures in "Virtuous Men," the S-L state right production, have returned to the legitimate drama for the summer season. Robert Cummings, who played Brummon, is now appearing in a prominent character in "Dark Rosaleen," a Belasco production, and Clara Joel, who made her screen debut in "Virtuous Men," in the character of Marcia Fontaine, will open on June 1st at the head of her own stock company in Cleveland, Ohio.

Louise Glaum is presented in "Sahara," through Hodkinson Corp.

Famous Players Purchase "White Heather"

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased Maurice Tourneur's spectacular production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "The White Heather," and will release it the latter part of June as a Paramount-Artcraft Special.

"The White Heather" was presented at the Rialto Theatre, New York, the week of May 4, and the big success scored by the production at that time, it is said, coupled with the wide popularity attained throughout the country by Tourneur's previous Drury Lane production, "Sporting Life," which was released in December as a Paramount-Artcraft Special, was the factor which led to its purchase, according to Walter E. Green. The transaction was consummated through Jacob Wilk, representative of Maurice Tourneur Productions, Inc.

Renames "Signet of Sheba" "A Sporting Chance"

The American Film Company, Inc., announces that "A Sporting Chance" supplants "The Signet of Sheba" as the title of the next William Russell release.

It was written by Stephen Fox, Henry King directing. Fritzi Brunnette plays opposite the star in the role of "Gilberte Bonheur." Others prominent in the cast are J. Farrell MacDonald, George Periolat, Lee Hill, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks.

"A Sporting Chance" will be released June 29.

Bryant Washburn's Next

In his latest Paramount starring vehicle, "Putting It Over," which is released June 1, Bryant Washburn is said to prove that the country boy is as clever and ingenious as the city man. In fact, in this case, it is said, he is even more so.

Mr. Washburn plays the role of Buddy Marsh, a young rube who "gets off" all kinds of jokes on his townspeople.

Coming Program Offerings

Lions Feature Four Fox Comedies

Kings of the Forest Furnish Comedy Thrills in Four of the re-issued "Lucky Thirteen" Series

A GROUP of lions, going through comedy antics, rather than habits more in keeping with their disposition in their native heaths are the mainsprings of action in four of the group of two-reel Fox Sunshine comedies being reissued under the title of "The Lucky Thirteen." These four are "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," "Hungry Lions in a Hospital," "Wild Women and Tame Lions," and "Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express."

Three of these comedies now being released in the list of "The Lucky Thirteen" were shown at the Globe theatre on Broadway as curtain raisers to "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and "The Spy." These three were "A Mild-Fed Vamp," "His Smashing Career" and "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells."

The first of "The Lucky Thirteen" to be given presentation and endorsement in New York was "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells," shown by Manager Edel of the Strand theatre. A reviewer for one of the metropolitan papers quoted Mr. Fox as saying: "It is needless to cite the tremendous cost of these comedies. The expense in making them is almost incredible. A laugh is one of the most precious things in the film world, and we use as much celluloid in getting them as we do for the longer dramatic subjects."

The lions in the four Fox Sunshine Comedies referred to are made to perform most unusual stunts. In "Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express" one of the lions is made to stand on top of a railroad engine glaring at a negro lad in the funnel of the engine. This animal pursues a party of passengers, who flee in ludicrous terror. In another of the scenes the lions invade a sleeping car in which a number of colored porters are slumbering. The sleepers awake in terror as a lion begins to lick the ear of one of their number and the wild flight of these is carried throughout the train and over the roofs of the cars.

Ford Sterling plays the hero in "Wild Women and Tame Lions" and is given ample opportunity to show his talents as a tailor and a lover—making a much greater success as the latter despite irate husbands. The lions are used in bedroom and parlor to upset the equanimity of beautiful ladies and gallant gentlemen. A fighting kangaroo is one of the features of the comedy of mock terrors.

Re-edited and reprinted, as are each of "The Lucky Thirteen" it is the belief of the Fox Film Corporation that the comedies are even better than in the original prints, and that they will go far toward solving the shortage in broad comedy which some exhibitors have been facing.

"Spark Divine" Soon Comes to the Screen

"The Spark Divine," a play especially constructed for Alice Joyce, will soon be seen on the screen,. Vitagraph, it is said, declares that in its opinion it will furnish Miss Joyce with prime dramatic opportunities. It is melodramatic in character, but kept within the verities, Vitagraph says, by sound psychology, both of story and in characterization.

William Carlton, Jr., will be seen as Miss Joyce's leading man. Eulalie Jensen, Frank Norcross and Mary Carr complete the cast. Tom Terriss directs this one.

Strand Manager Eulogizes Universal Comedies

The Strand Theatre on Broadway, New York, showed the first of the series of Universal animal comedies during the week of May 18. The audiences, it is said, were pleased, and Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett, of the Strand, was so pleased with the showing, it is stated, that he congratulated Universal on the production. He considered it a "sure-fire success."

"Wild Women and Tame Lions" Is One of the William Fox Lucky Thirteen which Have Been Announced for Reissuing

Trio of Select Stars Presented in June List

THREE features will be released by Select Pictures Corporation in June, including Olive Thomas' first Selznick subject "Upstairs and Down." Constance Talmadge will be seen in "Happiness a la Mode" and Alice Brady, newly a bride, in "His Bridal Night."

In the distribution by Select Pictures of "Upstairs and Down" Miss Thomas makes her official debut as a Selznick star, the pre-release showing of this attraction in Providence, Rhode Island, having been by special arrangement in connection with the Motion Picture Ball in the First Providence Armory, at which Miss Thomas and Governor Beeckman were the guests of honor. "Upstairs and Down" is a screen adaptation of the stage comedy of the same name by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. It was directed by Charles Giblyn. The story concerns the flirtatious career of a "baby vamp" society girl who plays both ends toward the middle. Miss Thomas' leading man is Robert Ellis. Other members of the cast are Rosemary Theby, Mary Charleson, David Butler and Andrew Robson.

Constance Talmadge and Harrison Ford in "Happiness a la Mode" portray a young married couple who, finding many rifts in the lute of connubial bliss, get divorced, only to learn they didn't wish a separation after all. Walter Edwards is the director. Betty Schade, Myrtle Richelle, Paul Weigel, Thomas D. Persee and A. Fremont are prominent in the supporting cast.

Norma Talmadge, star of the Select picture, "The Way of a Woman"

A dual role is enacted by Alice Brady in "His Bridal Night," she appearing as Tiny and Vi, twin sisters. The story is frankly an amusing farce, the resemblance of the sisters so deceiving the bridegroom that he is never certain which twin is his wife.

Edward Earl and James L. Crane play the male leads. Others in the cast are Daniel Pennell, Daisy Belmore and Mrs. Stuart Robson. Kenneth Webb directed the production.

Says "Woman Thou Gavest Me" is Triumph

"THE Woman Thou Gavest Me" has been produced for the screen by Hugh Ford and was released as a Paramount-Artcraft Special May 25. The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix and the cast is headed by Katherine MacDonald, Theodore Roberts, Jack Holt, Milton Sills and Fritzi Brunette.

Hugh Ford is credited with many fine screen productions, but in producing "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" he is said to have made secure for himself a position in motion pictures fully as eminent as the place he attained in the spoken drama. Not only scenically and dramatically is much promised, it is said, in this special production, but in the skillful handling of a most difficult subject Mr. Ford is said to have accomplished with success what many believed impossible.

In the leading role of Mary MacNeill, Katherine MacDonald is said also to merit highest praise as an actress of real power. Miss MacDonald was last seen as Lady Diana in Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft production, "The Squaw Man." Theodore Roberts, who has spent years on both stage and screen and is recognized as a remarkable artist, plays the role of Daniel MacNeill, father of Mary.

A number of unusual and elaborate sets, it is said, were utilized in the production, among them one representing the library of Castle Raa with its walls hung with genuine old tapestries and paintings, a faithful reproduction of the famous Shepheard's Hotel in Cairo, an African desert oasis with a wealth of tropical foliage, and the interior of a Norman church said to be an exact reproduction in every detail of one of Europe's historic structures.

Advertises "Red Lantern" in Unique Manner

ANOTHER opportunity offered in the direction of advertising and publicity for the Nazimova drama-spectacular "The Red Lantern," was described in the following account of the booking activities of the Metro offices.

As distributors of the Nazimova superfeatures, Metro published a valuable press sheet for the exhibitor with many ideas for lobby displays and advertising, but every day, it is said, discloses new ideas put into practice by some enterprising publicity manager or theatre owner.

John Kunsky, who owns a big moving picture theatre on City Hall Square in Detroit in showing "The Red Lantern" executed a plan to attract the interest of the fans which, besides securing the desired results, is said to have made a very beautiful display of the square.

Purchasing several small signal balloons, he sent them up from the roof of his theatre which faces on the square. At intervals on the tie-ropes, Mr. Kunsky fastened great red Chinese lanterns lighted by electricity from cables hooked to his house wires. This was done every night and the effect created by the lighted lanterns suspended above the city brought thousands of sight-seers to the square, it is said, and incidentally to the box-office of the theatre.

First Run Bookings for Robertson-Cole

"Six first-run bookings on Robertson-Cole pictures in Howe's theatre, one of Pittsburgh's favorite downtown houses, during the month of June, is the record which the Pittsburgh exchange of Exhibitors Mutual prides itself on this week," says an official of Robertson-Cole. "In this list are 'The Courageous Coward,' Sessue Hayakawa; 'The Mints of Hell,' William Desmond; 'Josselyn's Wife,' Bessie Barriscale, and 'Just Squaw,' Beatriz Michelena.

"The Pittsburgh exchange of Exhibitors Mutual is setting a pace for bookings which many of its associates in other sections are finding difficult to follow."

Thomas Feature for June 8

"Love's Prisoner," featuring Olive Thomas, is announced as Triangle's release for June 8th. This is the third in their series of Olive Thomas special presentations. While the success of the entire series seems assured from reports which Triangle has received on "Toton" and "The Follies Girl," unquestionably proving their value as box-office attractions, those who have seen "Love's Prisoner" at a private showing believe it to be even more meritorious than its predecessors.

"Love's Prisoner" was produced last fall at the Triangle Culver City studios under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Big Sales on Henry Story

Completing its initial run in the larger theatres of the country, "The Unknown Quantity," a Vitagraph production based on the story of O. Henry, with Corinne Griffith in a starring role, is reported to be rapidly enlarging its territory to include hundreds of theatres heretofore not served. "The Unknown Quantity" is said to be a typically trenchant depiction of an economic problem in life.

Adolphe Osso Returns from France

Adolphe Osso returned to New York last week after an extended stay in France, where it is said he effected arrangements with a chain of exchanges in the principal European cities to distribute American-made motion pictures. Mr. Osso will maintain his headquarters in New York, but plans to divide most of his time in carrying out the work of his new organization between his London and Paris offices

Mr. Osso whose organization is international in scope and who as the exclusive American representation for the Ch. Delac Vandal & Co., has already negotiated, it is said, the acquisition of the entire Goldwyn output for distribution in France, is now negotiating, it is declared, with several large producers for the foreign distributing rights to independent productions made in this country. Inasmuch as Mr. Osso is still affiliated with the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., his organization will also handle the foreign distribution of this concern's entire output.

More "Westerns" to Be Made for Capital Film

Three producing companies now being organized, will begin the making of two-reel subjects for release through the exchanges of the Capital Film Co., Inc., within the next two weeks, as the result of negotiations completed by General Manager S. L. Barnhard and C. E. Eckles of the Capital Company, who have been in Los Angeles for the past week.

The three units will make only two -reel subjects, all of a western type, and will be produced at the studio conducted by the Capital Pictures Corporation. E. N. Griffin will be producing manager and is to remain in Los Angeles and supervise the three companies. Neil Hart is to head one company.

Stars Violet Mersereau

Violet Mersereau has signed a contract through her representative, John J. Livingston, to star in a feature picture to be produced by the H. & H. Picture Company. The production is to be directed by Herbert E. Hancock.

Zion Films to Exploit Many Foreign Works

PLEASED with the critics' reception of "Khavah," claimed to be the first Sholom Aleichem story screened, Solomon Adler, president of Zion Films, Inc., is preparing for the production of further of the Jewish Mark Twain's works, and by other Russian and Hebrew writers. Plans for the release of "Khavah" are now being completed.

In regard to his productions Mr. Adler had this to say:

"I have watched the developments in the film industry for the last six years and in all that time have seen remarkable changes in direction, lighting effects and acting, as well as improvements in technical departments, but the most important factor essential to a successful screen production, that of the story itself, has remained practically where it began. Time and time again have the "movie" fants and exhibitors raised their voices in behalf of better stories and time and time again have the big producers promised reforms along these lines. But with the possible exception of a few stories here and there, the majority of the big producers have forgotten all their promises and continue making expensive pictures aided and abetted by high salaried stars but the stories are as conventional as ever.

"It is this reason, more than any other, that has prompted the Zion Films to enter the producing field. We realize that the average person throughout the civilized world gets his chief source of amusement through the medium of the silent drama. And if the stories do not come up to the mark set by the high class magazines and the theatre, then the motion picture will undoubtedly suffer."

Wide Foreign Exploitation for S-L Feature

SALES to many foreign buyers have been consummated of the S-L production, "Virtuous Men," through J. Frank Brockliss, purchasers of the entire foreign rights of the picture, and it is planned to shortly close sales and exploit the production in many countries outside of the United States and Canada. This was announced by Sydney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, during the week. The latest sale was the territory of Scandinavia, which embraces Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

J. Frank Brockliss sailed for Europe recently, and upon his arrival in London will at once make arrangements for a trade showing of "Virtuous Men." He is negotiating for one of the biggest theatres in London for this production. The showing will be given in conjunction with a large symphony orchestra and considerable advance advertising. Mr. Brockliss plans to have simultaneous presentations of "Virtuous Men" in London and Paris. The inaugural showing of the S-L production in France will be held under the auspices of the Mundus Film Company of Paris at an early date.

It is expected that the production will be given its European premiere within the next fortnight, and Mr. Garrett announced that the exploitation and advertising which has featured the picture on this side of the water will be carried out in detail in the United Kingdom and on the continent. "Virtuous Men" is expected to prove a big summer attraction in London and Paris, and will probably be given a run at prominent theatres in both of these European cities.

Capital Executives Prepare for Production

IN their brief visit to the Western Coast, S. L. Barnhard and C. Eddy Eckels are said to have hustled to such an extent that they obtained many scenarios, signed players, and arranged for studios, directors and all other essentials necessary to production.

In an interview Mr. Barnhard said, "the splendid co-operation accorded to both Mr. Eckels and myself while in the West has made it possible for us to accomplish a great amount of work in a short time."

"I am decidedly pleased about the future prospects of Capital, because I am doubly sure now, that we are going to be able to turn out a class of short subjects that will equal the best on the market today, and I hope may be even a little better. There is no denying the fact that the public has learned to place a high regard on the screen and consequently has developed a taste for better screen productions."

"This means that the producers will have to turn out a new brand of pictures, something original, plausible, interesting and absorbing. To me it also means this—that the unnecessarily long feature is becoming boresome. Good stories, good actors, and proper settings equals a satisfied public. The Capital policy of 'foremost stars in short features' fits in well with the trend of the times. Our progress has been steady and consistent and we hope to not only maintain the past high grade of achievement but to set it at a still higher standard."

Lives of Bandit and Author to Be Pictured

Al Jennings, former bandit and who has lately appeared in a number of film productions, is to be seen on the screen again in a version of the story sold to the Hearst Syndicate, dealing with incidents in his life, and in the life of O. Henry. Jennings most recent venture was the filming of "The Lady of the Dugout."

The Capital Film Co. will control the new Jennings output.

Sydney L. Cohen Plans Some Big Productions

AMBITIOUS plans have been prepared by Louis Gasnier and Sydney L. Cohen, formerly manager for Kitty Gordon, aimed toward extending their enterprise and branch out into extensive production. According to a statement recently issued by Mr. Cohen, the Astra studios in California have been taken over and will be the main scene of their activities.

"We will produce pictures with all star combination casts," said Mr. Cohen, who has recently arrived from the Coast, "and Mr. Gasnier and myself have already entered into arrangements to take over the Astra studios. We have in such as Owen Moore, Lewis J. Cody and William Russell, under contract to us, a splendid basis for the all star casts that will be a special feature of our productions.

"Work will be started forthwith on the physical improvements to be carried out in the studios, which will be altered and enlarged to provide facilities and accommodations for six companies working simultaneously.

"Our productions will be released purely on the merit system, that is to say, there will be no "tying up" in our contract arrangements, for we are confident that our productions will be of a quality and calibre to stand on their own merits.

"On this basis we are arranging to produce six all-star features for United Picture Theatres Of America, Inc., and these pictures will be the first to occupy our studios and casts.

"Mr. Gasnier, accompanied by 'Lew' Cody are now en route to New York from Los Angeles, and on their arrival contracts for the enlargement and improvement of the studios will be closed together with additional impending contracts for releases."

Bulls Eye Sells Territory on Selig Comedies

MILTON L. COHEN, president of Bulls Eye Film Corporation, announces that territory is selling rapidly on the series of ten "Napoleon and Sally" one-reel comedies, featuring the Selig monkeys.

Announcement was made last week of the purchase from Col. Wm. N. Selig of this set of hitherto unreleased attractions, and from the outset, it is said, applications for territory have been coming in, with the result that half a dozen allotments have been made.

Among the exchanges purchasing these rights are the following:

Standard Film Service, Cleveland, Ohio.

Fontenelle Feature Film Co., of Omaha, Neb.

Liberty Film Renting Co., of Pittsburgh.

Capital Film Service Co., of Washington, D. C., for that territory.

Interstate Film Corp., No. 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. City.

Further announcement along these lines will be made during the next week.

"These little gold nuggets are precisely what I described them to be at the very outset," said President Cohen. "They are clean, straightforward comedies, in which Napoleon and Sally accomplish almost impossible results in the comedy line. I wouldn't hesitate a moment to book them in the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand if I were managing any of these houses. These films have a universal appeal, and will make money for the exhibitor. We were most fortunate to obtain these new films from Col. Selig, and I am putting all my energy back of them."

Big Promises Made for McManus Picture

NAMES that are most prominent in world doings will, according to announcement of the MacManus Corporation, be found in the cast of the film soon to be released by that concern. The picture will also make a bid for lasting popularity, it is said, through the fact that its story is drawn from big episodes of world history.

The cost of the production, it is declared by Mr. MacManus closely approaches that of the biggest productions the screen has seen.

"The greatest achievement of the picture," he added, "is the fact that it combines the bigness of the players with the bigness of the story they portray. The story, in fact, is the actual story of vital events in which these characters figured in real life."

Mr. MacManus has been known in the film industry for some years and was one of the first to take up the serial film idea. His first feat of this character was the serial "What Happened to Mary," which featured Mary Fuller. Following success of this picture, several concerns adopted production of the chaptered subjects. Mr. MacManus later placed "The Perils of Pauline" and "Patria" on the market.

The production of the MacManus Corporation will, according to promises, be released within the next three weeks.

Author Edits His Own Story for Screen Showing

Cosmos Hamilton, author of many popular novels, in association with the members of the Pioneer Film Corporation's editorial staff, is preparing "The Sins of the Children" for its first showing.

It is said to be probable this production will be offered at a Broadway theatre for a run during the summer.

"Virtuous Sinners" Books Well Through Country

J. J. Bellman, exchange manager of the New York district of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has arrived in town from a tour covering over two weeks.

During his trip he got in touch with the principal exhibitors in his territory and reports that he met with great success in booking the latest Pioneer offering, "Virtuous Sinners."

Gaumont Features Flyers in Next Issue

This week's issues of the Gaumont News and Graphic shows the departure of the three N-C's from Newfoundland. Of prime interest are the views showing the N-C 4 and her commander just before starting on the successful flight which landed her at the Azores fifteen hours later, the warming up of the plane from the steampipes of the U. S. S. "Prairie," and a view of Ponte Delgada, Azores, from which point the "hop" to the European continent on the last leg of the journey will be made.

Other flying pictures in the News and Graphic show the flight of King Albert of Belgium, who returned to Brussels from the Peace Conference by airplane, and the last fight of the famous French "ace" Jules Védrines, who was killed in an attempted flight from Paris to Rome.

Other subjects show many surrent pictorial news items from many parts of the word.

Books "Unpardonable Sin" in South

Charles F. Schwerin who bought, recently, the Southern territory on Harry Garson's production, "The Unpardonable Sin," has returned from a trip covering the important cities in this territory and reports that he has closed for the following bookings:

Six days at the Savannah Theatre, Savannah, Ga.; three days at the Grand, Augusta; three days at Opera House, Columbus, Ga.; four days at the Strand, Birmingham, Ala.; twelve days at the Criterion, Alabama; five days at the Crown, Mobile, Ala.; five days at the Colonial, Richmond, and five days at the Wells Theatre, Norfolk.

Buys for Mid-West

Two reel Christie Specials and the Craig Kennedy serial, "The Carter Case," have been purchased by the Crescent Film Company for Kansas and Western Missouri.

Bacon Starts Work on His First Production

Gerald F. Bacon commenced work this week on the first of the series of eighteen productions to be released by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation. Mr. Bacon is using the Bacon-Backer studio, 230 West 38th Street, leased recently by Mr. Hall for his various produsing activities.

The first of the Bacon series will be a screen version of Max Marcin's play, "Substitute Prisoner," retitled "Sun-Up," with Lucy Cotton. George LeGuerre is leading man. In the supporting roles are Thurlow Bergen, Frank O'Connor, Morgan Coman, Charles Butler and Edouarde Durand. Oliver D. Bailey is directing.

Exhibitors Buy Rights for Pioneer Films

May 20 the Pioneer Film Corporation sold the rights of "Wives of Men" for Louisiana and Mississippi to the Saenger Amusement Co., of New Orleans, who also control the First National for that territory. W. H. Gueringer, Asst. General Manager of the Saenger Enterprises made the purchase for his concern.

T. L. Talley of San Francisco also bought the rights to the same picture for his territory.

The sale of "The Still Alarm" to Phil Goldstone for Iowa and Nebraska, is said to have "cleaned up" the entire world on this picture.

Big Deal in Reissues By Exclusive Films

A deal for re-issue negatives and old positive prints says an official of Film Market, has just been consummated, it is said, by The Film Market, Inc., between The Selig Polyscope Co, Inc., and Exclusive Features, whereby Exclusive Features acquires the world's rights to over one million feet of Colonel William N. Selig's old negatives, and approximately four million feet of positive's prints.

Many of the negatives are said to be classics.

A plan has been devised, it is declared, whereby Messrs Goldstein and Weinberg of Exclusive, will re-edit each subject.

Victor Eubank Joins Bech, Van Siclen

Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc. announces the engagement of Captain Victor Eubank to edit and re-title their productions which they are purchasing for the foreign market.

Captain Eubank formerly was supervising director of the Essanay Co., and has a number of excellent productions to his credit. Since the Essanay's retirement from the production field he has been busy editing and revising features for Bech, Van Siclen & Co., Inc. Captain Eubank will be busily engaged for some time to come, it is said, with a number of other productions which he has contracted to handle.

George LeGuere, signed by Gerald Bacon to appear with Lucy Cotton in a film through Independent Sales Corp.

Macauley Production Booked in Larger Cities

First run contracts for "Whom the Gods Would Destroy," the Macauley Photoplays production distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, were closed this week for Chicago, Minneapolis, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Richmond, and other important key cities throughout the country.

This attraction will have its premier in Chicago at the Randolph theatre, starting there on June 1 for an indefinite run.

Its first New York presentation will be at the Strand theatre for the week beginning June 22.

The Saenger interests have booked it through the South.

Tyrad Picture Reported Very Successful

That "Your Wife and Mine," Tyrad's six-reel production, is exceeding all expectations as a box office attraction wherever it is now being played, is the statement made by Matthias Radin, President and General Manager of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, distributors in the United States and Canada.

"While we felt from the beginning that in 'Your Wife and Mine' we had a rare money maker we are more enthusiastic than ever with it now that we can see what it is actually doing," said President Radin.

Warner Bros. to Market "Open Your Eyes"

A rumor to the effect that a big distributing organization would handle the Warner Brothers latest production "Open Your Eyes" is denied by the producers.

As previously announced Warner Brothers will personally supervise the distribution of this as well as all future productions.

Goldberg Congratulates Rothacker

Leo L. Goldberg, secretary of the Big Feature Rights Corporation, in a letter to Watterson Rothacker after screening "The Unpardonable Sin," congratulates Mr. Rothacker on the good work he has done, which he says is not limited, in printing and developing First National productions. He says:

"With all due credit to Harry Garson, Marshall Neilan and other associates responsible for the magnificent production of 'The Unpardonable Sin,' we feel that a little tribute is due your organization for the well-nigh perfect manner in which you developed and printed this film."

"Never before have we noted a picture with such wonderful clear photography and truly artistic lighting.

"Col. Levy joins the writer in extending you our sincere appreciation of your good work in connection with 'The Unpardonable Sin.'

Wm. Fox Puts Over South American Deal

Another big South American deal with William Fox productions has been consummated, it is said, in the purchase by Hester Gareia of the entire Fox output for Peru, Chili and Ecuador. This deal is of great importance, inasmuch as it adds a vast territory to the already world-wide scope of picture distribution of the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Gareia is one of the largest exhibitors and renters of films in South America, with headquarters in Lima, Peru. The Fox officials cite a statement by him that he had made a complete round of the New York picture company offices, and after a thorough inspection of product decided to close a deal with the Fox organization for its whole output.

Truex in New Two-Reel Comedy Series

A series of two reel comedies starring Ernest Truex will shortly be placed in production by Amedee J. Van Beuren. The player is now appearing in a New York stage production.

Several stories, considered to have many laugh possibilities, have been procured, and it is thought the first production will be from a comedy by Albert Payson Terhune. The plays will probably be made at the Vitagraph studios.

Advance Bookings on Virginia Pearson Picture

A private showing of Virginia Pearson in "The Bishop's Emeralds," was given last week at Wurlitzer Hall to a selected audience of invited guests, by Louis Meyer, president of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays Co. Inc.

Mr. Meyer expresses himself as pleased with the way that contracts are coming in through Pathe, thus early, as the date of the release of the picture, "The Bishop's Emeralds" is set for June 8.

Arrow Film Reports Many Sales on Features

The Arrow Film Corporation had an unusually busy week, and report many sales on their big features. "The Masked Rider," the latest Western fifteen episode serial, featuring Ruth Stonehouse, Paul Panzer and Harry Myers, has been selling rapidly and over half the territory it is said has been disposed of. These sales were reported during the week:

For the North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, The Southeastern Pictures Corp., 61 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga. For Delaware, Maryland, District of Columlumbia and Virginia, The Liberty Film Exchange, Washington, D. C. For Northern New Jersey, Frank Gersten, Inc., New York City. For Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, K. B. Film Co., Philadelphia, Pa. For Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburg, Pa. For Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, W. J. Lytle, San Antonio, Texas. Masked Rider Film Co., 48 Piedmont St., Boston, Mass. For New York City and New York State, Modern Feature Photo Plays Co., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

The Arrow Photo Plays Co., of Denver, Col., have purchased "The Woman's Law," starring Florence Reed, and "The Perfect Model," starring Audrey Munson.

Fontenelle Feature Film Co., Omaha, Nebraska, has purchased "The Sunset Princess," starring Marjorie Daw, and the twelve Anna Little two-reel re-issues.

L. A. Sheridan Film Exchange, of Des Moines, Iowa, have purchased "Miss Arizona" for Iowa and Nebraska.

Gertrude Bondhill, star of "Miss Arizona," has purchased this picture for Utah. Miss Bondhill is now playing in stock in Salt Lake, Utah and will book this picture throughout the state of Utah.

Great Eastern Film Co., have purchased "The Mysterious Mr. Browning," starring Walter Miller, Paul Panzer and Edna Maison for Northern New Jersey.

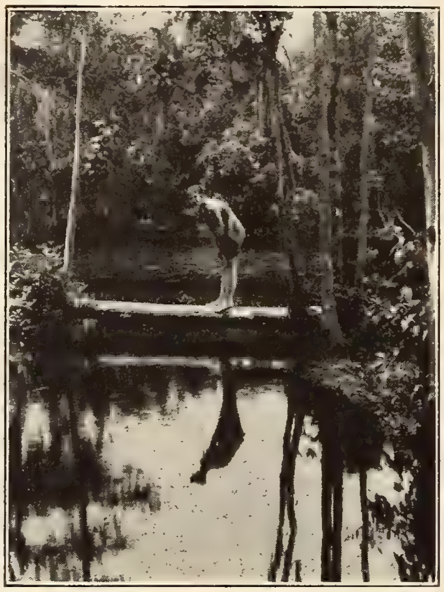
Announces Strong Cast for "The Perfect Lover"

Myron Selznick announces an impressive array of players to support Eugene O'Brien in his first Selznick Starring production, "The Perfect Lover." The story of the production is most unique in that it calls for no less than four leading women to play opposite Mr. O'Brien, each part being a distinctly different type to whom the word love has a different meaning. Four of the screen's talented actresses have been engaged to play the parts. They are Mary Boland, Marguerite Courtot, Lucille Lee Stewart and Martha Mansfield.

Mr. O'Brien is seen as a struggling young artist who is besieged with the love of these various women, and with it in his own ingenious manner. Edmund Goulding adapted the story to the screen. Work has already been started on the feature, with Ralph Ince as director.

Houdini Serial Placed in Many Foreign Lands

With thirteen independent exchanges and nine branches of the World Film Corporation handling the domestic distribution, with Regal Films, Ltd., looking after the Canadian bookings and with Export and Import Film Company placing it in every open foreign country on the globe, B. A. Rolfe's serial, "The Mastery Mystery," starring Houdini, the handcuff king, is now, it is announced, sold in all the markets of the world.



One of the Sunbeams in the Sunbeam Comedies Being Produced at the Klutho Plant in Jacksonville, Fla.

Klutho Studios Produces "Sunshine Comedies"

Announcement of the forthcoming release of a series of comedies which have been in preparation for three months, is made by H. J. Klutho, president of the Florida Film Corporation. Word of these productions was withheld until a series had been completed.

The pictures will be branded "Sunshine Comedies." They have been prepared at the Klutho studio, Jacksonville, Florida.

The subjects, it is announced, will not be of the knock-down, slap stick variety. Rather they will depend on a real story value, salted with touches of pathos, and peppered in portions with lighter slap-stick action. Beauty in scenic effects has also been aimed at by the producer.

Glen Lambert and Bert Tracy have directed the pictures. The company includes George Marks, "Fatty" Filbert, James Renfroe, Gertrude Garretson, Veda Renfroe and Melba Johnson.

Ruth Clifford to Be Seen in Six Part Drama

The Lloyd Carleton productions are filming a six-reel feature with Ruth Clifford as the star. The story, said to be a dramatic emotional drama, is from the pen of Henry Christeen Warnack.

John T. Carleton, general manager of the Carleton Productions, is in New York, with headquarters at the Biltmore, and is selecting new stories for Miss Clifford.

Shows "Unpardonable Sin"

Messrs. L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, who acquired the rights in New York State and all foreign countries to Harry Garson's big feature production of "The Unpardonable Sin," are showing the popular Rupert Hughes story in the Broadway Theatre, New York, the Majestic Theatre, Brooklyn, and have announced its presentation at the Majestic Theatre, Buffalo, for Sunday, June 1st.

Card Announces Additions to Sales Forces

Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, Independent Sales and Film Clearing Houses, announces the appointment of Joseph L. Marentette, pioneer exchange man and exhibitor in the South, as branch manager of the Film Clearing House exchange in Atlanta, succeeding Carl de Seay. Mr. Card also announces the appointment of C. C. McKibbin, branch manager at the Pittsburg office, succeeding W. J. Russell.

La Rose Books Educational

Educational announces that Production Manager Joseph La Rose, of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, booked the recent scenic picture, "A Day and Night at Coney Island" for use on a "Comedy Week" program at the Rialto.

Lang Becomes Associated with Natural Color

C. Lang Cobb, until recently Special Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has given up Black and White to identify himself with Natural Color. Natural Color, it is claimed, can't be rubbed off, and it will run on any standard projection machine. It is also claimed that it has the same properties as Black and White without fringing.

C. Lang says: "I have seen the Kinemacolor and other color companies go down in defeat on account of mismanagement and lack of ability to do with color all that can be done with Black and White.

"In the past, attempts were made to foster on the public an unfinished product that fringed, flickered, and needed specially constructed projectors, but all these defects and shortcomings have been eliminated and Natural Color is about to come into its own in Motion Pictures."

Joining the forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in 1917, he installed the Short Subject Department in the majority of their exchanges, and was appointed assistant sales manager January 1, 1918, and special representative the following April, which position he filled until his entrance into Natural Color.

Equipment Service

NOW IS THE TIME

There are more Motion Picture Theatres being erected to-day than at any other time in the history of the industry.

There is hardly a city of any size where a house costing up to half a million dollars is not going up or being planned.

This does not include the innumerable smaller houses seating from 500 to 900.

These houses are worth advertising to.

They are buying thousands of dollars worth of equipment, organs, chairs, screens, vacuum cleaners, curtains, heaters, interior telephones, etc., every day.

Advertised goods are the ones which should be bought. They have a reputation to be upheld

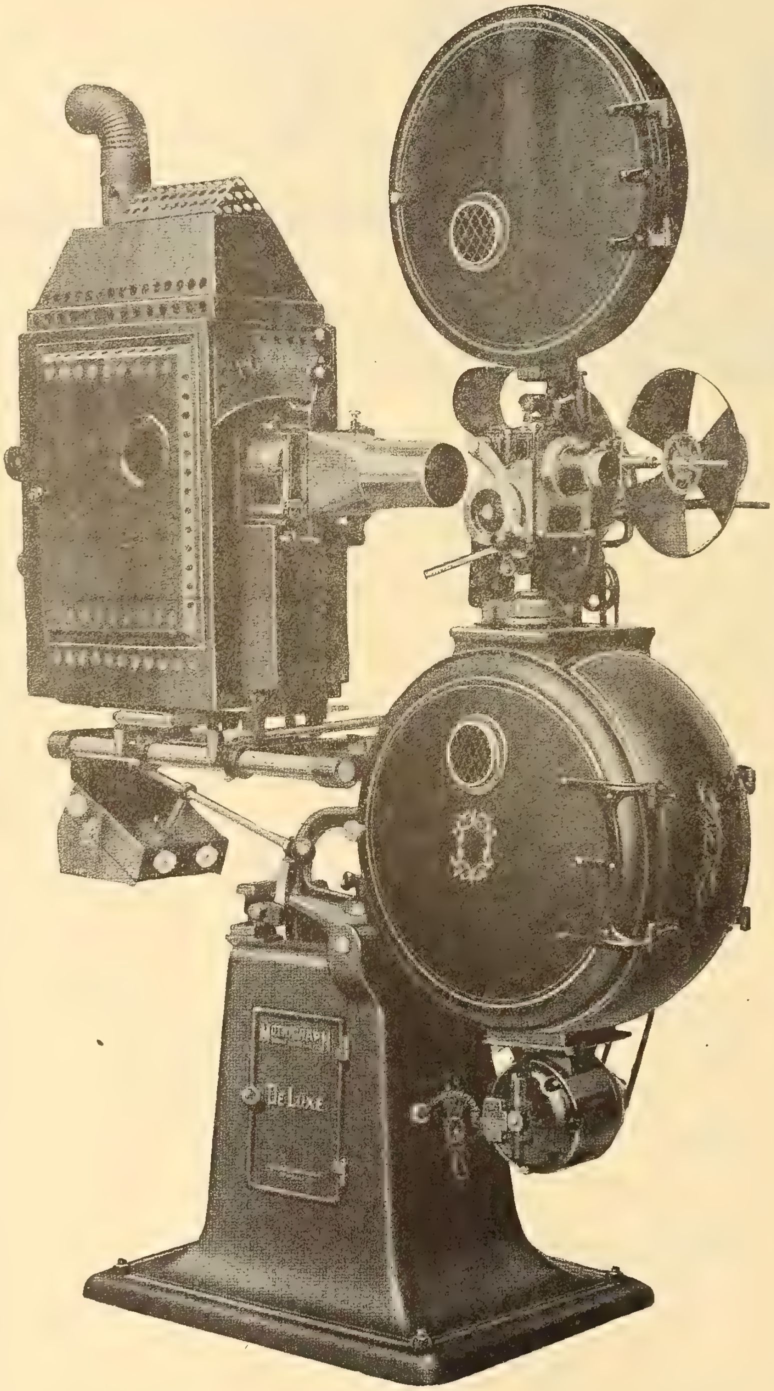
A DIFFERENCE—and a SUPERIORITY



The superior difference in the "MOTIOGRAPH" appearance is as pronounced as the superior difference in the quality of its performances.

Your impulse will be to accept the "MOTIOGRAPH" De LUXE without reservation the first time you see it demonstrated.

Hundreds have done that and have found their satisfaction deepened with every added day's experience.

If you could talk with the "MOTIOGRAPH" users, in addition to your inspection of the "MOTIOGRAPH" De LUXE, there would be no doubt of your decision.

They would corroborate in most conclusive terms what Chas. Kimball of the Pope and America Theatres, McKinney, Texas, says:—

"I have recently purchased four new MOTIOGRAPHS for my theatres, and am highly pleased with them."

I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. O. Convention

We have just received from our Toronto Correspondent the following report of the opening of the annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators. This report will be of interest to every union operator in the country, as the statements of President Shay are most significant at the present time.

Toronto, May 26, 1919.—The general annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators was held in the Horticultural Building of the Central Canada Exposition at Ottawa, the Canadian capital, during the whole week of May 26. Approximately three hundred and fifty delegates from all sections of the United States and Canada were in attendance on the first day, when the convention was called to order by President Charles C. Shay, who has been the executive head of the alliance for the past eight years. President Shay gave out the information that his organization now has a membership of nearly 25,000 and that a solid chain of local unions in every centre of any importance across the continent has been established.

The executive of the Alliance had been at work all during the previous week at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, to consider minor grievances and to arrange various plans for the convention sessions. A number of deputations had been heard and many communications were read. This arrangement had been followed so that the time of the convention would not be consumed with trivial matters.

F. G. Lemaster of New York, general secretary of the Alliance, arrived in Ottawa on May 22 and established his headquarters at the Chateau Laurier.

In an interview President Shay declared that undoubtedly the present situation appeared ominous and the world seemed to be on an uneven keel, yet he was convinced that the organized workers would supply the ballast necessary to carry through the trying times. The general unrest was a natural sequence of the war, but he was strongly opposed to any movement that was related to Bolshevism. Capital should realize that only through organized labor could stability be maintained, he said.

Revolutionary methods had been started in a number of cities by dishonest aliens, and the force they attempted to use was opposed to the honest efforts of the national leaders of labor. The organized movement is exceptionally free of the undesirable element, he declared; thus he looked forward to the future with optimism. The trade union movement is the logical route by which the workers can make progress, he believed.

During his stay in Canada he had noticed with pleasure the work that was being done for returned soldiers, he said, and the assistance held out to the wounded heroes was particularly commendable.

Announcement was made that the International Alliance now has more than five hundred local unions on its roll. One of the most active of these locals is the Ottawa Moving Picture Operators' Union, whose members took a prominent part in arranging for the reception and entertainment of visiting delegates. At a meeting of the Ottawa local, held just previous to the big show, the members voted unanimously to dig down deep into their pockets for a special assessment as their share of endeavor to make the delegates remember the Canadian capital. The chief operator of each local theatre was delegated to request that the courtesies of the theatre be extended to all visiting delegates. Manager Hanitch of the Dominion Theatre, Ottawa, invited all delegates to attend a performance at the theatre in a body, reserving a large block of seats for the purpose.

On the motion of James McGuire, the date for the regular monthly meeting of the Ottawa local was changed from the second Sunday to the second Friday of each month.

In the next issue we will carry a full account of the convention, prepared especially for Motion Picture News by our representative.

E. K. Gillett.

Complete in Every Way

The Equipment Service Section as conducted by Motion Picture News each week is recognized as the most complete of any at the command and service of the industry and those who have occasion to use it.

But we are making it better all the time.

No better proof of this fact can be obtained than a close association with this section for the next several weeks, when a marked improvement will be noted and several innovations added.

Then, as now, it will dominate the field.

Control Equipment for Mazda Motion Picture Lamps

By L. C. Porter

(Edison Lamp Works, Harrison, N. J.)

In order to obtain a light source of the very high brilliancy required for motion picture work, it is necessary to use a low voltage high amperage MAZDA lamp. Such a lamp has a filament of very heavy wire and can be burned close to the melting point, thus giving a brilliancy of about 22,000 candle-power per square inch.

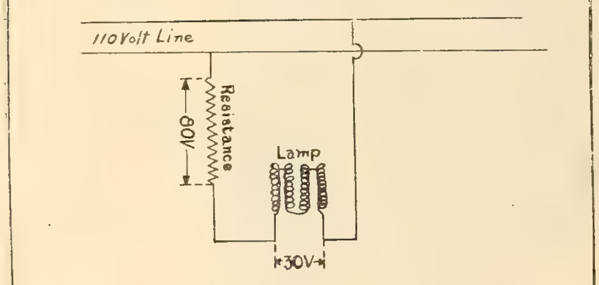
The new 900 watt motion picture lamp operates at 30 volts 30 amperes and the question at once arises as to how a 30 volt lamp may be operated from the ordinary lighting circuit of 110 volts. There are three ways in which this may be accomplished: (1) by the use of resistance in series with the lamp; (2) by the use of a motor generator set; (3) by the use of a transformer or auto-transformer.

It is the purpose of this article to describe the general principles of these three types of control and point out where each may be used to best advantage.

(1) Resistance may be used to lower the voltage on either alternating or direct current circuits. It generally consists of some form of wire, such as iron or German silver, that offers considerable opposition to the passage of the electric current, causing a lowering of the voltage by converting a portion of the electricity into heat.

If, for example, it is desired to operate a 900 watt (30 volt 30 ampere) lamp on a 110 volt circuit, sufficient resistance must be connected in series with the lamp to take up the difference between 30 and 110 volts, i. e., 80 volts. We then have an arrangement which may be diagramatically illustrated as in Fig. I.

Fig. I

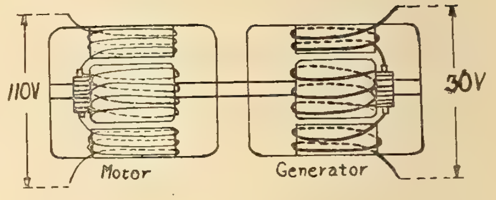


The copper wires connecting the resistance to the line and lamp are so proportioned that the loss in them is very slight and for our purpose may be called negligible. It can be seen from the sketch that the circuit from the line through the resistance, through the lamp and back to the line is continuous, hence, the 30 amperes flowing through the lamp also flows through the resistance. As the resistance takes up 80 volts, the total amount of energy consumed by the resistance, i. e., the wattage, is the product of the current and the voltage, i. e., 30 x 80 = 2400 watts. This amount of energy is converted into heat (often very objectionable in the confined space of a motion picture booth), and to all intents and purposes wasted. The energy consumed in the lamp is 30 volt x 30 amperes, i. e., 900 watts, which is converted into both heat and light. The total energy consumed therefore, is 2400 + 900 or 3300 watts.

If the current sells for 10c. per kilowatt hour, it will cost 33c. per hour plus the renewal cost of the lamps to operate a 900 watt motion picture lamp with a resistance, generally called rheostat control. That is pretty expensive, especially as only 27 per cent of the power consumed is useful, the rest being wasted in the rheostat. The chief advantage of the rheostat being its relatively low initial cost. If the lamp is to be used for any length of time, the additional cost of power will soon wipe out the saving in initial cost of a rheostat over other more efficient forms of control.

(2) A motor generator set may be used to lower the voltage, with very little lost or wasted energy, on either alternating or direct current circuits. Such a set, consists in general, of a motor wound with fine wire so that it will operate directly from a 110 volt circuit, and a generator driven by the motor and wound with heavy wire so that it will generate current at the proper voltage for the lamp, i. e. 30 (Fig. II). The action of the set may be likened to that of a water wheel operated by a small stream of rapidly flowing water, i. e., having a high head or pressure, say, for example, a stream having an area of 1 square inch and at such a pressure as to cause it to flow at a speed of 12 ft. per second. The water wheel then consumes 1 x 12 or 12 units of power per second. Let us suppose this water wheel operates a pump acting at low head and delivering water at a low rate of flow but having a large piston. If this pump forces a stream of water of 4 square inch area at a head sufficient to cause it to flow 3 ft. per second, the total amount of water delivered per second will be 4 x 3 or 12 units. The pressure with which the water flows may be likened to the voltage of the electric circuit and the size of the stream of water to the amperage of the circuit. We have, therefore, an analogy between our water wheel pump and our motor generator set.

Fig. II



As a matter of fact, the water wheel and the motor will each take a little more water or electricity, i. e. power, than the pump or generator will deliver, because there are losses to overcome, such as the friction of the bearings, the resistance of the air to the rapidly revolving parts, and a few other inherent losses. With the motor generator set, the sum of all these losses will amount to about 15%, so that to have the generator deliver 900 watts to one motion picture lamp will require approximately 1059 watts in the motor. The loss of 159 watts in the set, however, is very small compared to the loss of 2400 watts in the resistance form of control. The cost of operation with current at 10 cents per kilowatt hour will then be 10½ cents per hour plus the renewal cost of the lamps—a saving of 22½ cents per hour over the rheostat form of control.

The chief disadvantages of the motor generator set are that, it is a rotating device and therefore must be kept well oiled, the commutator or collector rings must be kept clean and the brushes renewed occasionally. In other words, it requires maintenance attention. Having rapidly rotating parts, it must be mechanically rather complicated, and hence inherently expensive. It is, however, vastly superior to the resistance form of contral and the saving in current effected by the motor generator will soon offset its initial cost.

Motor generator sets are, therefore, the best form of control where Mazda motion picture lamps are to be used on direct current circuits of the ordinary central station voltage. Where alternating current is available, however, there is another type of voltage reducer which is even more efficient than the motor generator; and having no rotating parts, is inherently less expensive and simpler to maintain. This type of control is known as a transformer or compensator.

Like the motor generator set, it has two coils of wire, one long and fine to operate directly on the 110 volt circuit, and the other short and heavy to deliver 30 amperes at 30 volts for the lamp (Fig. III). The peculiarities of the alternating current make it possible to use a transformer, while such a device cannot be used on direct current. The reason for that is this: whenever a coil of wire is passed through a magnetic field, i. e. past a magnet, electricity is generated in the wire and conversely, when electricity passes through a coil of wire it will create a magnetic field in and around any iron in the near vicinity. It is immaterial whether the coil of wire passes through the lines of magnetism or whether they pass the coil of wire. In either case the effect is the same.

In the motor generator set, the motor forces coils of wire in the generator to revolve rapidly past magnets, thus generating the current required to operate the lamp. In the case of A C current, however, this actual movement of the coils is not necessary for this reason: Alternating, as the word implies, means that the current flows first one way and then the other, i. e., it starts at zero, rises rapidly to its maximum value, then falls to zero and rises again in the reverse direction to maximum, falls again to zero and starts the cycle all over again. It may be represented as in Fig. IV.

The arrows indicate the direction of flow of current in the wire and the distance from the wire to the curve indicates the value of the voltage at any instant. If, therefore, such a current flows through a coil of wire wound on an iron core—Fig. III—magnetism will be created in the iron, starting at zero strength and increasing with the current to a maximum value, then decreasing to zero and increasing again in the opposite direction. In the ordinary A C lighting circuits these reversals occur 60 times a second, thus we will have a magnetic field in our iron rushing first one way and then the other.

We saw above that if magnetism rushes past a coil of wire, it will create electricity in it. If then we put another coil of wire around our iron, it will have current generated in it by the constantly changing magnetism created in the iron by the 110 volt A C circuit. If this second coil is short and of heavy wire, the current will be at low voltage and we then transform the 110 volt circuit into another at 30 volts for our motion picture lamp.

There is about 10% loss in this transformation due to the reluctancy of the iron to be magnetized and to certain other small losses. Hence, to get 30 volts 30 amperes out of one coil, it will be necessary to put 1000 watts into the other coil. The loss of 100 watts being even smaller than occurs with the motor generator set. The operating cost of this device, with current at 10 cents per kilowatt hour will then be 10 cents per hour. This is a saving of half cent per hour over the motor generator set. In addition to this, the initial cost of the device is materially lower and its maintenance less troublesome.

Unfortunately, a transformer cannot be used on D C because the current, as the word direct indicates, flows continually in one direction and we, therefore, do not have the changing magnetism necessary to create current in our second coil. To obtain this change it becomes necessary to mechanically move either the coil or the iron core on both, as is done in the motor generator.

As a matter of fact, the greatest field for Mazda motion picture lamps is on A C current. A high percentage of the motion picture theatres are supplied by A C lines and also the A C arc gives less satisfactory screen illumination than the D C.

The remainder of this article will describe the two most common types of transformer control devices, i. e., the hand control and the automatic.

On Lenses and Light Rays

W. B. ALLEN, President of Local 360, says:

I wrote you a letter on the tenth of February giving a detailed description of the projection room and equipment for publication in the Projection Department. You then notified me that you would publish same providing that I would send photographs which I promised to do. My friend, Bro. Stuckey made the photographs all right, but after they were developed we didn't think they flattered the place at all so we decided that we would try again. So far we haven't tried again but I assure you the photographs will come along yet. (Don't think we've forgotten those promises of yours. Just as soon as you send us the photographs you'll see them in this Department.)

Our Local received your letter regarding the forming of a new department in the News for the use of the Union. We think this is an excellent idea and we don't see why the trade papers have not done something along this line long ago. The Union page will certainly be of interest to Union men and beneficial to the entire profession. Our press secretary, Brother C. S. Stuckey, has been instructed to keep in touch with this department at all times and no doubt other Locals will have their Secretaries do likewise. If they don't, it won't be because they are progressive.

I noticed in a recent issue of the News that the prize contest started in October had come to a close. The contest was announced during the time the "flu" was raging up in this section of the country and everything was closed. As a result, the boys up here forgot all about it or I'll wager that you would have received a wagon load of articles from Edmonton. However, if you start another one, we will be in on it, and moreover, we will get the prizes. Now what do think of that. (Yes, that contest was started at the worst possible time. The results proved it. But perhaps next time the News runs a contest the Fates will be with us instead of ag'in us. However, the fact that this particular contest is closed does not debar any of you men in Edmonton from writing in and telling the rest of us what a projection room should be. The money incentive, to be sure, is not there, but even in the regular contest, only a few could win. Better get in practice for the next contest by writing up some of your accomplishments, NOW.)

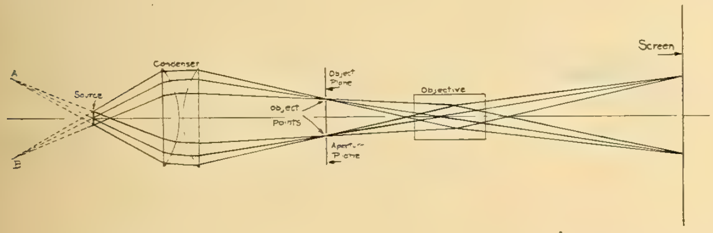
I am thinking of getting some new projection lenses and I would like to get a little information from you on the subject before going any further. I am using 5¾" E. F. Gundlach lenses at the present time. They are 1 7-16" in diameter. My throw is 105 feet with a picture 16 feet 8 inches in width. I am using 60 amps., d. c., through a Transverter.

What I want is a larger diameter lens. Now what are the diameters of the different lenses manufactured by the Gundlach people? And what diameter would you recommend? I estimate my light loss at about 15 per cent., that is, the loss in the mechanism is considerably larger than the present lens is capable of cover- is considerably larger than the present lens is capable of recovering. What is the price of these lenses?

Now just one more. What is your opinion on the following: How many times do the light rays from the arc cross before they reach the objective. Or to be more clearer, do you consider that they cross at the first surface of the arc lens? Some say they do and some say they don't. I would appreciate it very much if you would put me right on this one point and then I won't bother you any more until next time.

(If you want a larger diameter lens you can get it by writing to the Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., for their 5¾" E. F. Lens in their No. 2 size. This particular lens has a diameter of 2½ inches instead of the 1¾-inch diameter of their No. 1 size. If your present optical line-up brings about a considerable waste as you say, we would suggest that you get one of the No. 2 size lenses and try it out. A little figuring will show that the change will mean an increase of over 200 per cent. in lens area which certainly ought to make a difference in the illumination on your screen. You will have to get the price of these lenses direct from the factory of the Gundlach Company.

After reading your question on the "crossing of light rays" we had a mind to give you our personal opinion on the subject but on second thought decided that we would see what others who were experts on the subject thought about it. Because we have a great amount of respect for Dr. Kellner who is one of the country's leaders in optical projection, we wrote to him and asked the same question that you asked. We agree thoroughly with what Dr. Kellner says and are very glad to reproduce his explanation and sketch.



"Each point of the object (meaning each point in the film at the aperture plate) has a corresponding image point on the screen. Through each one of these object points there passes a multitude of rays from different parts of the light source. These rays strike the condenser in a more or less diverging pencil and are then converged by the condenser upon the object point. After passing the object point the rays diverge again until they strike the objective which converges them into the image point on the screen. If the condenser is perfectly corrected the rays going from the different points of the source toward the point in the object plane seem to come from one point to the left of the source. (See dotted lines from source to A and B.) If the condenser is not corrected the foregoing statement is only true for a zone around the axis of the system. In the ordinary case of uncorrected condenser the rays which form the image of an object point on the screen cross only in the object plane and in the image plane.

Another point of the object plane is imaged in a similar way by a system of rays which leave the light source under a different angle from the first one. This system of rays crosses the optical axis, as well as the system of rays belonging to the first object point, in or near the objective.

Of course, it all depends on what is meant by "rays from the arc." By drawing paths of light for a few more object points and counting all the intersections he can increase the number of crossings of the "rays" indefinitely. To simplify matters one can say that these rays imaging a point of the object plane cross in the object plane and in the screen and that the axes of the pencils formed by these rays which image all the points in the object plane cross at the source and near the objective."

Don't think you will have any trouble following Dr. Kellner's outline and sketch. From your question we infer that you mean the rays from a point in the source, in which event the answer is that such rays cross once, at a point in or near the objective.

Methods of "Change-over"

If on the other hand it is a two coil transformer either of the following sketches could be used.

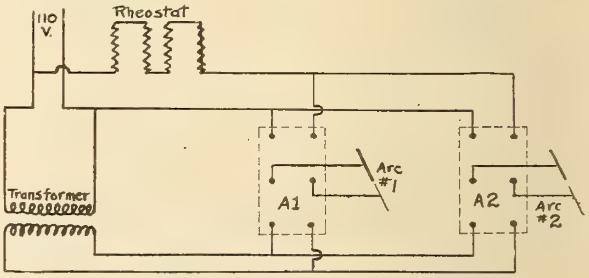

Diagram #5

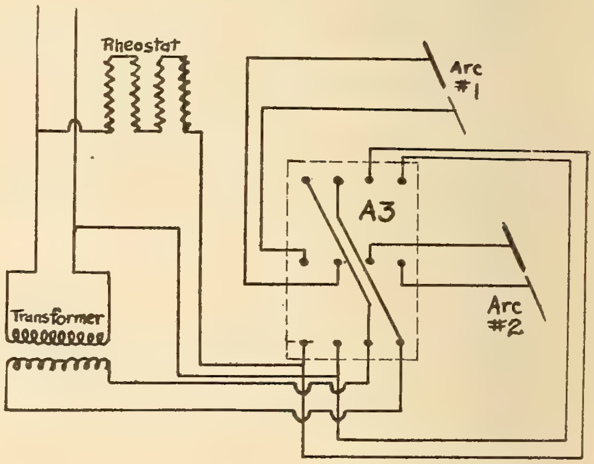

Diagram #6

In sketch (C) A1 and A2 are switches the same as (3) in sketch (A). A3 is a 4 pole double throw switch also constructed for quick throwing (See sketch D)

In all three of these sketches the transformers can be used for running and the rheostats for warming up, switching to the transformer as soon as the change-over is made. This also gives the rheostat for emergency in case the transformer breaks down.

In the March 15 issue, Tooch of Utah asks for the reason for the difference in light between his two projectors. In addition to the possible reasons you have mentioned I would like to add that the crater of one arc might not be so efficient as the other due to a difference in the angle of the crater in relation to the condenser, thus causing the difference in screen illumination between the two projectors.

In the March 8th issue a subscriber from Paris, Mo., says he has halo all around the screen. If this was caused by light from the condensers getting around the machine head there would be no halo at the top and bottom because it certainly could not get by the mechanism at these points. Also I can't see how this light could get so close to the screen (3 ft.) unless this man has a very short throw. His lens barrel or some other reflection along the optical train must be causing this halo.

In answer to James Porter in the issue of March 29th you say that the rheostat makes no difference in the cost of operation and that it converts into heat the current not used by the arc. Don't you mean it converts what voltage is not used by the arc into heat. My idea of current is amperage or quantity.

(That's one on us. Of course the current is not consumed by the rheostats. That was one of the statements that will creep in, no matter how closely a person scrutinizes the proof, but because everyone knew what was meant they merely passed it by. Many thanks for calling our attention to the error.)

As to the rheostat not making any difference in the cost of operation with D. C., I can't agree with you. At present he is using 220 volts and 50 amps, or 11.000 watts or 11 kw. which at a cost of 8c per kw-hr is costing him 88c per hour.

Whereas with an AC to DC or DC to DC Motion Picture Arc No-resistance motor generator set considering said set to have an efficiency of 50% (some makes should have a higher efficiency) he would be consuming 55 volts at the arc with an amperage of 50 making only 2,750 watts or 2.75 kw. Taking into account the efficiency of the set 50% the loss in the machine would be 1.375 kw. Adding to this the consumption of the arc it would amount to only 4.125 kw. to be taken from the line which at a cost of 8c per kw-hr would make the cost of his arc amount to but 25c an hr. This would mean a saving of 63c per hour.

(Just another case of insufficient information. His first question was plain enough but the one following could have been taken in several different ways. Did he mean how many kw. of energy were being consumed by his rheostats? which was the way I understood him? Or did he want to know how the losses in a rheostat system compared with those in a motor-generator system? Unless we have missed a point his question allows at least these two interpretations. This illustrates one of the greatest faults projectionists exhibit when writing in for information. Many times a week we receive questions which are so vague that they cannot be answered in any way. And then, because the Motion Picture News does not believe in withholding the information because of a mere matter of a three cent stamp, we write back and ask for more details. After enough information is received we answer his queries by letter or in the columns of the Projection Department. The News never has, and hopes it never finds it necessary, to "soak" projectionists for answers to questions.

But to skip back to our subject, we must again take exceptions to the computations of our Maple Leaf correspondent. We know he is good natured so here goes.

Figuring the efficiency of that Motor Generator set at 50% would mean not that the loss in the machine would be 1.375 kw, but rather that 2.75 perfectly good kilowatts would be seen no more. The efficiency is ratio of output to input. We know the output to be 2.75 and we know the efficiency to be 50%. Then

$$\frac{2.75}{\text{input}} = .50 \quad \text{or the input} = 5.50 \text{ kw.}$$

Therefore the total energy taken from the line would be 5.5 k.w. or at a cost of 8c per kw-hr, would mean a current cost of 44c. His saving then would be 44c or half of what he is now paying out.)

The installation of a motor generator set would probably also entitle the correspondent to a power rate for the motor which he is probably not getting with his rheostat system.

(But would it? In most of the larger cities and in a very large number of the smaller cities and towns, the user pays on a sliding scale. For instance, if he uses 100 kw-hrs. a month he pays at the rate of 8c a kw-hr. But if he uses 300 kw-hrs. monthly he pays but 6½c a kw-hr. These figures are taken merely as an example. It is true that some communities have a lighting rate and a power rate but we see no reason why a man's theatre projection room arc should come under the lighting rate. Whether the control equipment be a rheostat or a motor generator, the theatre should be given the power rate, except perhaps in instances where the current demand is extremely small.)

and "without compensation" is sure some joke. Five years practical experience couldn't make a projectionist of any man. Technical experience is absolutely necessary, combined of course with practice.

What puzzles me is where they are going to get a projectionist that is really capable of being an examiner to act "without compensation" unless he is expected to live on what either the exhibitor or others may slip him for seeing to it that there are 25 men for every two jobs.

Those "one man" rule boards are usually a joke. The rules and regulations should be right in the by-laws that is passed by the Council. However the law has many good points.

Now I don't agree with you that the Unions should classify the men as to their knowledge and ability. This must be done from the outside but preferably not by municipal authorities.

Due to their lack of knowledge the lower class projectionists would call it "class legislation" and that would be the beginning of dissatisfaction in the Unions which you must admit is very undesirable. On this last sentence I mean if the Union should try the classification.

Now Mr. Editor I'll admit this is some letter of kicks and disagreements but it's your own fault. You asked for projectionists to write in giving their ideas and conclusions so I just turned loose. The New Akeley Camera

The question of focusing when using masks has given cameramen considerable trouble. The masks in an Akeley Camera are in pairs, so that the field is viewed through a mask in the finder just as it is through the film lens. Such an arrangement makes for accuracy, and if, for instance, the position of the object changes during action, it is not necessary to stop the action and reframe. By looking through the finder the object can be kept at all times in its desired place on the film.

So much for the features of the camera itself. The magazine and film mechanism likewise incorporate many unusual developments all of them tending to more rapid and satisfactory work.

The film gate (I), Fig. 4, is simple, easily installed, withdrawn and cleaned. The gate is removed by withdrawing the mask which acts as a positive lock on the gate, after which the gate may be slid out. The film is moved by a finger-action in which a single needle is operated. This form of film movement is strong, positive and extremely simple.

The shutter is the focal-plane type, which is usually given the distinction of being the fastest shutter for camera use. The shutter consists of two metal arms, which are pivoted on their centers and around the three sides of which are stretched silk ribbons. The shutter is opened or closed by moving these two arms with respect to one another. Due to the speed at which the shutter operates between the outside walls of the camera, the centrifugal force holds the silk ribbons in space with a cushion of air completely surrounding them. This prevents the ribbons from wearing out, even though the camera is given constant use for a number of years.

The shutter opening (J) is changed through the end opening of the pivot bearing of the machine, Fig 5. On this same side is also found the small handle for moving the shutter to take single pictures. A dust cap covers this aperture, and effectively keeps out all foreign matter, while the small handle reverses and tucks away in a hole in the arm.

Now that the optical systems and the mechanical features have been covered, the description is complete with the exception of the film magazine and the method to be followed in threading up. The latter process has been so simplified that it requires but 10 to 15 seconds for the complete operation. Cameramen who have experienced the exasperating situation of having to spend several minutes in rethreading, while the most important part of the field was passing will appreciate this feature as found in the Akeley Camera.

With this quick reload the 400-foot reels are now not a necessity, as their advantage was mostly to eliminate the time wasted in reloading.

The film box is designed on the duplex principle, that is the roll of fresh film is carried in the upper half of the box, and after exposing returns to and is rewound in the lower half. There is but one film sprocket in the camera, and that is contained in the film box.

The film box is threaded in the dark room when loading. After placing film roll in box the loose end passes out of the magazine over the sprocket, and leaving a loop of about 8 inches it returns to the box passing over the lower half of the sprocket, and is then fastened to the take-up spool. The cover is placed on the box, and it is ready to carry for placing in the camera. One can now understand the quick reload as the threading is all completed. What remains to be done is the placing of the magazine in the camera and the loop in the gate. The sprocket then engages the transmission and becomes the feed sprocket which takes the film from, and returns it to, the magazine. Furthermore, since the drive in and out is positive there can be no drag on the film.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

Leading American Makers of Microscopes, Projection Apparatus (Balopticons), Photographic Lenses, Ophthalmic Lenses and Instruments, Range Finders and Gun Sights for Army and Navy, Searchlight Reflectors, Binoculars and Other High-Grade Optical Products

As pioneers in the manufacture of motion picture film—for it was Eastman Film that first made motion pictures practical—the Eastman Kodak Company has from the beginning been identified with the success of the motion picture industry. One could hardly have advanced to its present stage of development without the other.

Identifiable by the words "Eastman" and "Kodak" in the film margin in a case, properly blocked, which means when the cover is closed that it is ready for carrying or even shipping. The other unit is taken in the tripod bag, which has a padded top to protect the upper portion.

This gives the advantage of a very rapid "set-up" as the camera is carried loaded and ready for use, and these two units are very quickly put together.

The panoramic handle removes and goes in the camera case, while the drive handle merely reverses to a position out of the way, and is never taken off.

Should one have occasion to photograph from a window sill or rock, the camera, arm and ball and socket leave the tripod at L, Fig. 3. Having three-pointed pins on this base it stands firmly, while the operator has all its advantages of levelling and "panning," although it is without the tripod.

All these features for which the news and sport cameraman has been seeking for so long would have been impossible of accomplishment if it were not for the side pivot shown in Fig. 5. The side pivot plays the important role of allowing a 140 degree tilt. It gives the camera a range that no other method of support would provide.

The foregoing is a description of the camera in words, but to appreciate the value of its many new points and to understand the thoroughness with which the design has been carried out and the attention which has been given to details, it is necessary to see the instrument and to handle it. The machine work which has been put into the aluminum and brass parts will delight the heart of an accomplished mechanic. Its score or more of features for which the cameraman has been waiting, coupled with its low weight of but 43 pounds complete, and the small diameter of the camera proper of only 10½ inches will convince the hardened veteran of many fake battles that this camera will be the first to get there and the first to get into action.

Service Department for Universal

ACCORDING to an announcement by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational Department, that department will in the near future inaugurate a division which should prove of incalculable value to users of projection machines and supplementary apparatus, outside of the regular professional channels.

Hundreds of corporations and organizations throughout the country, according to Mr. Levey, have become motion picture exhibitors "on their own," and as such, are continually being confronted with problems of mechanism and technic which only expert consultation will solve. Universal's new division, it is believed, will serve as a means of meeting these problems and expeditiously offering their solutions.

Primarily, of course, Mr. Levey's foresight and progressive ideas will be for the benefit of Universal clients. However, it is hoped in time to widen the scope of the department's work until general questions of equipment and service can be handled.

The new department will also serve to aid organizations in the intelligent purchase of all projection and camera equipment, scores of Universal clients having already offered enough work along this line to keep such a department continually busy. This step, according to Universal officials, is merely in keeping with this department's progressive spirit and enterprise.

If Exchanges do not safe-guard their New Film by Treating and Curing it of its "Greenness," Prevent film from becoming Oil-Soaked and Renovation of Film from time to time, Removing all Corrosion, Dirt and Grime, Films are not in proper condition to Operate. There is no reason why Operators should be accused of Scratching, Ripping and Tearing Sprocket Holes when Films are not properly cared for by Exchanges.

Exchanges who neglect the life of Film trying to save a mere expense are really at fault for destruction of Film Stock.

Something New Under the Picture Sun

THE "First Rothapfel Unit Program," has had its premier, and the old proverb, "There is nothing new under the sun," has ceased to exist. Mr. Rothapfel, the wizard exhibitor and creator of unimaginable things, is responsible for this atrocity. He has again proven that he can see and produce things which are beyond the confines of present-day film productions and exhibitions.

We confess ourselves of absolute ignorance of being able to technically analyze Mr. Rothapfel's excellent program, but as a musical arranger for the foremost film companies, we have in the past three years viewed over 600 productions, and I commit myself to the statement that Mr. Rothapfel's "First Unit Program" is the most original series of single subjects we have ever seen combined in a unit.

In our enthusiasm over this masterpiece, we have nearly forgotten the purpose of this page (music was the supposed subject). The entire Unit Program is provided with an excellent music score from the overture to the last scene of the comedy. This music score has been prepared by Mr. Rothapfel personally, assisted by Dr. Roesenfeld, the musical director and manager of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York City. There is no question that such talents jointly united have produced a musical masterpiece in the strictest sense of the word. Notwithstanding this fact, Mr. Rothapfel has engaged M. Winkler, of Belwin, Inc., to prepare a "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet," which is to serve those exhibitors who find the original score too difficult or fail to get it in time. We suggest that every exhibitor who intends showing this Unit Program, file the music cue appearing on this page as invaluable in case of failure to receive the original score in time for rehearsals or performance.

MUSICAL SUGGESTIONS
S. L. Rothapfel's
"FIRST UNIT PROGRAM"
Prepared by M. Winkler.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every musical requirement of the film. It is a continuity dividing the film into musical characters, thereby enabling the musician to use his own judgment in selecting the appropriate musical compositions from his library.

Musicians desiring to obtain any of the numbers listed on the cue sheet, will refer to Belwin, Inc. (701 Seventh Avenue, New York City, N. Y.), who are handling every one of the numbers in stock, at the lowest possible professional prices.

Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods
Gentlemen:
Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans and Houston, Texas, we want to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.
We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.
Yours very truly,

Michigan Man Dedicates Song to Pearl White

AGAIN Pearl White, star of the forthcoming Pathe serial, "In Secret" by Robert W. Chambers, and half a dozen former Pathe serial successes, has been honored in music. William Joseph Gary of Grand Rapids, Mich., has written the lyrics of a song which is to be dedicated to her.

In, a recent letter to Miss White, Mr. Gary says:

"I have composed a lyric about you as a famous star, having received the inspiration after seeing you act in your famous play, 'The Lightning Raider,' and am sure the song will meet with great public approval all over the country. I am now having the lyrics completely revised and melody written by Leo Freidman, the well-known composer of Chicago. The Chester Music Co., of Chicago is handling the publication.

"Now I am a common laboring man, working hard each day in a boiler shop for a living. I am not satisfied with my conditions and am therefore trying to better myself via the song route. I am investing my savings to have this song published and will do everything to make it a success. I have every confidence in it.

"Now, Miss White, it is needless to say that I admire your acting, otherwise I would not be writing this song. I am sure you will like it, as it has your name for a title and commends your good work very highly. I understand there have been other songs written about you, but I am sure this is the ace of them all."

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Flirty Flirts," by Sol P. Levy, a melodious Intermezzo, of exceptional musical charm and tonal beauty. Very practically arranged for orchestra, or as to make it adaptable for the smallest combination of instruments, as well as for grand orchestra. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

2—"Roses of Picardy," a melodious Waltz, arranged on melodies from Haydn Wood's phenomenal song hit. (Chappell & Co., 41 E. 34th street, N. Y.)

3—"Alabama Lullaby." This beautiful song is a very clever arrangement of the popular melody, "Swanee River." (Leo Feist.)

4—T. B. Harms have just published four dance numbers from the most popular musical comedy, "A New Girl," meeting with great success on New York's Broadway.

5—"Me-Ow," by Kaufman, a novelty number, which on its own musical merits has become an over-night hit throughout the world. It is published for orchestra, piano and band. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

6—"Sweet Siamese." The fact that this number was written by the composer of the famous "Beautiful Ohio," assures its musical merits in every respect. (Shapiro & Bernstein, N. Y.)

7—"Tumble In," a new musical comedy, composed by the great Friml, has just been issued by G. Schirmer, N. Y. The famous "Limbo-Land" one-step is an extract from this popular musical show.

8—"General Pershing's March," by M. L. Lake, a catchy and snappy composition, most appropriate for scenes showing the homecoming of our troops. (Carl Fischer, N. Y.)

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

" The Sleeping Lion "

(Universal—Five Reels)

MONROE SALISBURY contributes an Italian character study in "The Sleeping Lion." He manages to get a good lot of comedy and a nice portion of sentiment from the role and never permits himself to lapse out of character. In fact Mr. Salisbury always puts his heart and soul into his work and this sincerity is one of the chief reasons for his success. In "The Sleeping Lion" he is ably supported by Rhea Mitchell, little Pat Moore, Alfred Allen and Merschell Mayall. The boy renders a particularly cute characterization of a junior Italian.

The plot deals with Tony's adventures in the west, whither he goes after saving up his fortune in New York. The west treats him unkindly at first but he soon becomes master of its way and before the picture is over he is a figure to be reckoned with. The heart interest vein runs throughout the picture's duration and there are not a few thrills in the various encounters between Tony and the villain.

"The Sleeping Lion" is not the star's greatest picture but it offers fine, vibrant entertainment set in a series of beautiful backgrounds. Bernard McConville is author of the story while the direction was in charge of Rupert Julian.—Peter Milne.

" Rowdy Ann "

(Christie—Two-Reel)

THE latest Christie Special is "Rowdy Ann," featuring Fay Tincher. In this comedy Miss Tincher is seen in many amusing situations, a little rough at times. Miss Tincher's athletic abilities are well demonstrated through the comedy, by the number of stunts she performs, one in particular, a boxing match in which she knocks out her opponent, a man, being exciting as well as amusing.

The scenes are laid in a Western town and at a girl's College, where Fay is sent by her father to be "made a lady out of." In the first reel the part calls upon Fay to do a number of Western stunts such as riding, roping, shooting, etc. In the opening of the second reel Miss Tincher is seen taking a train for college. A number of comedy scenes are done in the Pullman car which are sure to have a pleasing effect upon an audience. These scenes are " followed by a chase in which Miss Tincher, the porter and the entire company indulge. It is very amusing and well done.

It is in the college scenes that Miss Tincher does her "prettiest work," knocking the professors and girls down with right hand punches, appearing at one of their springtime dances in the costume of half cowboy and half "Salome." When the girls object they are given the "slumber punch." This scene is one of the best in the feature and ought to go over very strong.

Mr. Christie has selected the usual number of pretty girls to support Miss Tincher and he certainly knows how to make the most out of them.

Mr. Christie's direction is good. He had many different situations to handle both in comedy and story, the comedy being developed in a funny strain, and free from the "overdone slapstick" that means nothing to a refined audience, or to any audience.

The cast includes Patricia Palmer, Eddie Barry, Harry Depp and Katherine Lewis, all of whom fit and play the parts.—Frank Leonard.

" The Final Close-Up "

(Paramount—Five Reels)

SHIRLEY MASON has topped off "The Rescuing Angel," which fitted her personality as if it was made for her, with another sparkling comedy in "The Final Close-Up." It exudes a fine flow of wit and humor which is always spontaneous so splendidly does it spring up from beneath the surface. There is no apparent labor in the composition and, when a comedy is free from this taint you can make up your mind that it is something out of the ordinary.

The picture gives a gentle dig into the ribs of the spectator because it anticipates his customary remarks based on the vernacular of the screen. An example of it is found in the concluding scene when the heroine tells the young man that they had better go into the final close-up like the way they do in the movies.

The plot hinges on the attempt of a working girl to break into society at a fashionable seaside resort. One of the boys of the inner circle has taken a fancy to her and this event doesn't please a certain bud who tries to injure the girl's reputation.

Some of the incidents might be called exaggerated but as it is pleasant fooling no one should take exception. It is wholesome humor that is generated and what wasn't found in the script, Director Edwards has supplied his own assortment of comedy high lights. Mention must be made of the subtitles which are full of quaint witticisms. Everyone is brief and to the point.

Miss Mason is going on apace as a comedienne of the first class. It is an ideal number for her. Francis McDonald plays the hero with plenty of dash. "The Final Close-Up" is an adaptation of Royal Brown's story of the same name.—Laurence Reid.

" Words and Music By "

(Fox—Five Reels)

MUSIC, or rather the composition of an opera, forms the foundation of the plot. Everybody knows that music cannot be seen; it can only be heard: with a slight reflection, therefore, it should be a foregone conclusion that no picture could be made that is based on such an element. The music strains that charm and enthrall when emitted by a piano cannot be conveyed in pictures by having some one sit at such an instrument and manipulate the keys. It is true that a love story is one of the features; but it is only of secondary importance, the composition of the opera and its production at the end being the predominating feature.—P. S. Harrison.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"A Bachelor's Wife"—American

FRESHNESS of theme and most artistic treatment make "A Batchelor's Wife," the latest American contribution with Mary Miles Minter in the leading role, a good entertainment.

Rather farce-comedy is the nature of the subject, its commanding feature being the heroine's claim to be the wife of a man she really never met before in her life, and also that the baby—someone else's child—is their own. Of course the spectator knows that the baby is the legitimate child of the heroine's cousin, a young lady, but not who its father is; in the course of the story, however, he learns that its father is the hero's cousin, a young man, who married the girl while still going to college: He, however, had kept his marriage a secret, and also staid away from his wife all this time, on account of certain provisions in his father's will, whereby he would have been disinherited had the secret become known. The mix up in identities is caused by the similarity of the two cousins' name.

The heroine is compelled to undertake the deception because the hero's mother, to whom she went to ask redress for the sake of the child and its mother, so cruelly abandoned by the father, supposedly to be her son, is an invalid and at the point of death; the invalid woman had taken a great fancy to her; she felt delighted that her son should be the husband of so charming a young lady, at the same time expressing regret that he should hold back from her the news of his marriage: so the heroine, fearing lest the disillusionment hasten the end of the sick woman, decides to carry through the deception.

The kindliness of the heroine's disposition and the promptness with which she ministers to the wants of the invalid woman, bring her immediate cheer, and with cheer comes health; while the reunion of husband and wife brings happiness to the household, in the end, a love-match resulting between the heroine and her innocent victim.

The picture is clean and should prove suitable for any audience. Released through Pathe June 1. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"A Fallen Idol"—With Evelyn Nesbit

IF you cater to crowds that love the sensational sort of photoplays, you have naturally not overlooked the Nesbit contributions. "A Fallen Idol" is no different than the rest of them as to the point it wishes to drive: it, like the rest of them, has a tinge of suggestiveness. Although that element, in this instance, is not rough and jarring to the fine sensibilities, yet it is unmistakably implied.

It is mostly a Hawaiian story. It starts in California, supposedly at Santa Barbara, where the heroine, a Hawaiian princes, spends the summer. A white young man falls in love with her, but his relatives object to any such union. The heroine becomes dspondent and attempts suicide, but the hero jumps into the ocean and saves her. Before her complete recovery, he is called away. During his absence, his aunt, by her machinations, makes the heroine believe that her nephew has no use for her. Giving credence to her tale, she leaves for Hawaii on board the yacht of the villain. When the hero returns and finds her gone, becomes despondent, but eventually gets information as to her whereabouts. He follows her to Hawaii, and after many incidents, such as his arrest as a smuggler, a fight with the villain, and many other, is finally reunited to the heroine.

The mixing of the races may not be a welcome feature to some people. The picture is highly artistic, but lacks emotional appeal. Released by Fox May 18. Length, 5 reels. P.S.H.

"Break the News to Mother"—Select

WOMEN, and those men that like the sentimental stuff, will undoubtedly enjoy this picture immensely; it is only those who seek the intellectual sort of entertainment, the kind that appeals to the understanding, that may find fault with it. For such as the latter, the picture contains too much emotional element. For instance, in a desire to touch the heartstrings of the spectator, the hero, quite often, is allowed to go to extremes. While the sight of a young man, not yet in his majority, abandoning himself to his emotions may be readily excused, such behavior on the part of a maturer man will undoubtedly be considered unbecoming.

The hero is depicted as being in love with the daughter of his employer, being loved in return. The superintendent of the works, however, has an eye upon her and her money. In order to clear the ground for himself, this villain, by misrepresentations, attempts to separate the lovers. This causes a fight between the two men, during which the villain's common law wife, who he is trying to get rid of, sneaks from behind, shoots him, and then disappears. As the gun the hero is trying to wrest from the hand of the villain had discharged at that time, he takes it for granted it is he who shot him. He is advised by friends to leave town and never write, they promising to break the news to his mother as gently as possible.

The hero is next shown in France as an American army officer under an assumed name, dying of pneumonia. The army's best doctor is called to attend him. He proves to be an old friend of the hero, from the same town Due to the doctor's untiring efforts, he recovers. He is then told that the man he shot did not die, but was able to pull through.

The villain is now engaged to the heroine. Just about the time the announcement of their coming marriage is to be made, the wronged girl goes to the heroine and exposes her past relations to the villain. This causes a break to the contemplated marriage. After the armistice, the hero returns to his mother. There now being no barrier between the hero and the heroine, they are happily united Length, 6 reels. P. S. H

"Love's Prisoner"—With Olive Thomas

PICTURE goers who enjoy the mystery melodrama of the serial sort, may derive enjoyment out of "Love's Prisoner." Those, however, who demand faithful portrayal of life in a picture of the serious sort, may be disappointed. From the point of view of the latter, besides the unreality of the story, there are other points to be criticised, the chief one being the fact that the main action does not commence until the middle of the fourth reel, all of the first three and a half reels being wasted in details that are tiresome, and which should have been interwoven in the main plot.

The story, in a few words, presents the heroine as a poor girl, whose father has been sent up the river for burglaries, apparently without fair trial. While window-shopping in front of a jewelry store, she became acquainted with a British Lord. A love affair starts then and there, resulting in marriage. But the husband soon dies, and as he had transferred all his property to England, she again remains poor.

She is now shown entertaining some guests in her home. During the evening, the valuable necklace of one of the guests disappears. The police authorities are called. They connect this burglary with several recent ones, but are unable to catch the burglar. A famous American detective, back from Paris, is given charge of the case, who eventually finds that the burglar is none other than the heroine herself. As love has awakened in the breast of both, however, he fails to deliver her to the police, preferring to marry her.

The one point that has been figured to bring the spectator surprise, and as a result of that surprise, pleasure, is the fact that the burglar is none other than the heroine herself. Her identity is revealed not until the end. The concealment, however, is accomplished by rather artificial means—long shots of her figure, dressed in male attire, are shown while running away from the detectives. Released by Triangle June 8. Length, 6 reels. P. S. H.

"The Home Town Girl"—With Vivian Martin

MISS MARTIN, in "The Home Town Girl," maintains well the reputation she has established for herself. While there is nothing big about the picture, it will entertain a weary mind, especially the one that enjoys the light stuff.

It is a small town story, showing a boy and a girl in love. The boy works in a grocery store, but, as he does not get enough money to support a future wife, goes to New York in search of fortune. He obtains a job at a small salary and makes success at it, but as a raise is slow in coming, he is easily led astray by a discharged employee. He is lured into a gambling place, gambles $300 of his employer's money, and, as it is expected, loses it. Instead of going back and making a clean breast of it, he prefers to disappear.

The news of his disappearance and its cause fail to shake the faith of the heroine. She determines to go to the city and find him. After a careful search, she locates him, but she is shocked when he informs her of the truth of the accusations. The sweetness of her manners, however, wins the love of the hero's employer, who, at her solicitations consents to give him another chance. The hero and heroine are now happy in each other's arms.

The picture is clean; it should be fit for any class of picture goers. Released through Paramount May 11. Length, 5 reels.

HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS

"Leave It to Susan"—with Madge Kennedy

YOU may safely call "Leave It to Susan" a good picture. It is true it could not be called a knockout, but there is enough good stuff in it to satisfy a picture goer, provided you do not over-stuff the papers with ads, thus making him expect more than he will actually get. Some comedy, some mystery, some suspense, a little romance, enough adventure, and one or two thrills; these are the elements that go to make up its different situations.

The train ,as the story has it, stops in the desert on account of a "hot box," and everybody gets out for fresh air; so does the heroine and her pet dog. The canine, having spied a nice fat rabbit, gives him a chase. While the heroine goes after the dog, the train starts, so she is left behind in the desert. Weary and footsore, she comes upon a cabin. Upon entering it she is amazed to be confronted by the very young man that travelled with her on the same train part of the way, and whom she thought to be a highwayman, owing to his likeness to a picture of such a one, published in a newspaper. She is now doubly sure he is a robber. Shortly, some real highwaymen appear and enter the cabin, seeking shelter from the driving rain. The supposed robber carries the heroine to a corner ,and they both hide, but the bark of the dog soon gives them away. The highwaymen make them come out. The young man pretends to be a notorious highwayman. He also tells them that the girl is the daughter of a millionaire; he intends to hold her for ransom, and asks them to join him in extracting the money from her father

The gang agree to send a note, and the hero is delegated to frame it. The note is written in code, and the receiver immediately starts with the sheriff and a posse. They capture the highwaymen and rescue the heroine. In the end, a love match results between the supposed robber and the heroine, as it becomes known that he is none other than an employee of her father's, sent West to investigate some mining properties. Released by Goldwin May 11. Length, 5 reels. P. S. H.

"Knickerbocker Buckaroo"—with Douglas Fairbanks

WHILE you will hardly notice any serious dissatisfaction among your patrons on this picture, yet you are going to be deprived of the "Conversational" advertising, such as is carried on by extra-satisfied patrons, because it possesses no extraordinary merits that are particularly striking. In fact, quite a few of the features incorporated in it will prove rather detrimental. For instance, the theme, first of all, is not the kind that appeals to the popular fancy right now It is not pure American, as it deals no little with Mexican brigands near the border. Again, it lacks the humor that characterizes the average Douglass Fairbanks picture; it specializes more in acrobatic stunts than in high-speed comedy. Further, while the hero is jailed, about the middle of the picture, he ceases to be the central figure; and on top of that, towards the end, he becomes an assisted hero, accepting help from a Mexican brigand to liberate himself and then the girl. This the fan will hardly excuse.

There are two parallel stories at the beginning of the picture, inter-mortised, that is, scenes of the two different stories are shown alternately, now of the one, then of the other, every few feet. The spectator is not let in to the secret where the two stories are to join, till near the junction point. This seems to destroy the interest in both. The suspense chopping process seems not to cease until the two stories are joined. Released by Artcraft May 18. Length, 5 reels. P. S. H.

"Pretty Smooth"—With Priscilla Dean

YOU may class "Pretty Smooth" among the very best Priscilla Dean contributions. It is, like the general run of them, a play of the clean crook sort, combining such elements as would afford excellent satisfaction and pleasure to a person seeking to be entertained. One of such elements is suspense; it is so intense at times, that it makes the heart beat fast. The story, besides being highly suspensive, also appeals successfully to the sympathetic feelings.

The picture opens introducing the star as a maid to a wealthy lady. She is given some valuable jewels to place in the safe At night, during the absence of her mistress, she tries to break open the safe, but outside of some light scars upon its hard surface, she is unable to accomplish any more.

In order to throw off suspicion, she telephones to the police, telling them some burglar tried to break open the safe. While waiting for the police to arrive, she hears a noise at the window. Shortly she sees a burglar enter, who, after locating the safe, proceeds to break it open. The heroine, who had hidden herself behind the curtain, pushes it slightly and secures the burglar's pistol, lying close by, and with it, she holds up the burglar, making him hand over to her the jewels.

The balance of the story deals with how the two become pals right on that spot, how the hero, in order to save the heroine from the police, volunteers to stay there and accept the consequences, and how later she helps him to escape, so as to become partners, and continue their profession. In the end, however, they both reform and marry, but not until they have led an extremely adventurous career. Released by Universal June 16. Length, 6 reels. P. S. H.

"The Busher"—With Charles Ray

THE theme of this picture is closer to the heart and to the understanding of an American than any yet that has formed the basis of a Charles Ray contribution. It will undoubtedly electrify a young heart and an old heart alike, sending thrills through the body.

It is about the hero, a player in a "Bush league," who has attracted the attention of a shrewd baseball team manager, that happened to be passing through town with his team. He is so struck with the country's boy's curve, that he determines to give him a trial. In a short time, the country boy rises to the fame of a great pitcher. His success has turned his head, and he forgets the town folks and his young sweetheart. His egotism loses him his position, and he returns to the home town broken-pursed as well as broken-spirited. He is ashamed to even put up an appearance in public, but when his team is about to lose the day to that from a rival town, he, although against his resolution, decides to take part. He saves it from defeat. The girl, whom he once slighted by ignoring her ,is there too, and when he finds that she still loves him, his happiness knows no bounds. He proposes and she accepts, at the same time a letter from the big leagues manager, who, through one of his men, is watching for the time when his egotism would be broken, is handed to him offering back to him his old place in the team, thus completing his happiness.

The story is a simple little human document. It reveals the weakness as well as the strength of the human character, and as Mr. Ray is endowed with particular aptitude in portraying the country boy who raises himself above his environment, the realism in it is more natural. Released through Paramount May 18. Length, 5 reels. P. S. H

"The Lady of the Red Butte"—With Dorothy Dalton

THERE can be not the least doubt in the mind of any one who has studied modern audiences that people will walk out on this picture; even the producers themselves could not very well contradict such an assertion were you to put it directly to them. There has been a long time since a picture such as this has been thrown upon the market to be shown to innocent and inoffensive picturegoers: it contains every distress producing feature, but not a single cheering one.

Religious craze is the basic element, but madness, pestilence, drink, murder, filth, crippled children, and a host more, have their full share in the production of the picture. At one time, on the one side is shown the hero, yet in his religious frenzy, praying to God to destroy the town and its inhabitants; while on the other, the heroine, praying that He may not listen to him, but change the direction of the wind so that her home may be saved from the fire. This fire was set by a shot fired by a man at the saloon keeper, killing him instantly, because the murdered would not allow him to have a bottle of whiskey. While the heroine is using up her time praying however, the children are in danger of being bruned to death, only the change of the direction of the wind saving them from such fate.

Of course everything comes out all right in the end, when the heroine, attacked by the crazy man hits him on the head with a stick, the blow restoring his unbalanced senses. It is hardly necessary to say that it takes many a good picture to offset the harm one of this nature can do. Released by Paramount May 11. Length, 6 reels. P. S. H.

"WHEN FATE DECIDES"—FOX

Butterfly Husband Has His Innings Again in Domestic Melodrama

WELL! Well! if here isn't our old acquaintance, the profligate, who has brought nothing but "sorrer" and misery to his wife. By golly he hasn't changed much during his score of years on the screen. He is as tempestuous as ever since he doesn't neglect to quarrel with his spouse upon the least occasion. And he continues to flaunt his paramour before the woman he has promised to honor and protect without any regard for her sensitive heart strings which, incidentally, have reached the breaking point.

The sponsors of the picture have succeeded in building up sympathy for the harassed wife since they have painted her as willing to forgive and forget. But this sympathy is given reluctantly because she is represented as "holier than thou." It almost seemed at times as if Mr. Husband should have been pitied for living with such a straight-laced person.

The drama travels its orb without shedding any illumination other than bringing out in clear and steady focus that somewhere in the progress of events the dissolute bread-winner is going to PAY. And he does with his life. At this point the picture develops into mysterious melodrama, and the spectator is puzzled to put his hands upon the murderer. But things shape up fine for the wife, and her former lover (a man of honor) and the guilt is placed upon the paramour's husband.

The redeeming feature of the play is found in the mystery element mentioned above. Madlaine Traverse has been intrusted with the leading role and she makes the most of her opportunities.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 1.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Vera Loudon	Madlaine Traverse

Story by Evelyn Campbell.
Scenario by Denison Clift.
Directed by Harry Millarde.

PRESS NOTICE

Madlaine Traverse's new picture which comes to the ——— screen on ——— of ——— week, will stand out among all her recent successes. She is the commanding figure in a vital and vivid tale based upon the eternal triangle, and because she has supreme poise and dignity, she is peculiarly fitted to portray this theme of marital entanglement. "When Fate Decides" is the title, and the story was written for the star by Evelyn Campbell.

Miss Traverse is seen as the innocent victim of an unhappy marriage. After three stormy years she is willing to forgive everything and begin all over again. But Herbert Loudon calmly takes her proffered forgiveness as a matter of course. He is more interested in Mrs. Alicia Carteret, and he nonchalantly informs his wife that she has lost her attractiveness for him. But a time comes when Herbert Loudon pays. And he gets his just deserts. How punishment is meted out is excitingly told in a series of smashing climaxes.

It is a powerful story this "When Fate Decides" and one that should by no means be missed. Moreover it is logically developed and unfolds a group of lifelike characters. Miss Traverse rises to the emergencies of her role and gives a performance marked for its emotional sweep. She is supported by a capital cast that includes William Conklin, Clyde Fillmore, Claire DuBrey, Henry J. Herbert and Genevieve Blinn. Denison Clift adapted the story to the screen. Harry Millarde gave the production his usual painstaking attention to detail and extracted from the scenario every essence of realism.

THE STORY

Vera Loudon was living a very unhappy life. There was no mistake about that. Yet after three years of unbounded misery she was willing to forgive her husband and start all over again. But Herbert Loudon, who was under the influence of liquor most of the time, told his wife that as long as she was in a forgiving mood she would have a chance to show her generosity toward him on the anniversary of their wedding when Alicia Carteret would be present. Loudon's conduct at the party was so outrageous that he was reprimanded by Donald Cavendish, who had been one of Vera's suitors. Carteret, too, has been grossly insulted by the boorish Loudon's attentions toward his wife. And the victims of these bad marriages were immensely relieved when the dinner was over.

The next night as Vera and Cavendish were motoring, a sudden rainstorm drove them to the shelter of Loudon's lodge. They were not there long before they saw the drunken beast and Mrs. Carteret drive up in a motor. Vera and Cavendish slipped out unseen, but when he returned to get his gauntlets, he encountered Loudon. A terrific fight followed and the unfaithful husband was floored. After Vera reached home she decided to return to the lodge and face her husband, but she was shocked to find him dead. Naturally she thought Cavendish killed him, but she was perplexed in the task of proving him innocent. However, he cleared himself of the crime. So the evidence pointed to Vera as the guilty person. But by clever detective work she forced Carteret to confess the murder. Thus she found her freedom and later married the right man.

CATCH LINES

"When Fate Decides" offers a graphic exposition of the eternal triangle. Does the wife pay? You must find out for yourself next ——— at the ——— theatre.

He was a brutal husband, but she was true to her marriage vows. Then Fate stepped in and decided whether she would have her freedom. See "When Fate Decides."

In which a woman's honor and bravery carry her through a bitter struggle for love and happiness. See the emotional star, Madlaine Traverse, in "When Fate Decides."

Her brutal husband was strangely murdered. Who committed the crime? Was the wife, the lover, or the other husband guilty? This we cannot answer. Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see "When Fate Decides."

PROGRAM READER

The ever present problem of marriage and divorce is unfolded in Madlaine Traverse's new Fox feature, "When Fate Decides," which comes to the ——— theatre in the near future. Vera Loudon, the character played by the star, has married the wrong man, and she realizes it after three long years of unhappiness. Still she is willing to forgive and forget and begin all over again. Which shows what a noble woman she is. But her husband will not have it that way. He offers her insult after insult which are visualized in his drunken cruelties and the flaunting of another woman in her presence. Things come to a climax at the anniversary dinner of their wedding. When Herbert Loudon dashes a glass of liquor in his wife's face, a former suitor, one Cavendish, who respects Vera, takes the husband to task. At this point the drama becomes intensely dramatic and builds to a powerful climax. The action of the central characters will grip you before the story comes to a happy conclusion. It is tragically developed up to its final scene, which is natural since a woman's love and honor are at stake. Suffice to state that the picture unfolds one of the best domestic themes that the management has ever seen. You are in for a full hour of entertainment when you look upon "When Fate Decides."

SUGGESTIONS

There are four points to remember in advertising this picture: (1) That the play is based upon a strong exposition of the eternal triangle that has any number of gripping climaxes and situations; (2) that Madlaine Traverse is the star and that she is an emotional actress of the first rank; (3) that she is one of the best dressed women on the screen and wears a number of stunning gowns in the picture; (4) that the play is remarkably true to life for a thing conceived solely for dramatic purposes. The latter point is a good one to dwell upon because it has been the habit of a lot of directors to pile on the fireworks. Here Harry Millarde has made it seem real. So concentrate upon the lifelike character of this play. You can bring out several situations that would

"MODERN HUSBANDS"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Walthall Stars in Plausible Story of Busy Husband and Neglected Wife

AFTER several attempts of late to find a suitable subject, Henry B. Walthall seems to have found in "Modern Husbands," a picture which not only brings his talents into good expression, but a picture that makes him appear reasonably lifelike. He has burst the bonds of artificial characterization which have tied him down recently, and, now unshackled, he shines as the Walthall of old. And you know what that means—that given a decent story he can show screen pantomime at its highest development.

The subject matter of his new offering can always be moulded into good entertainment by a resourceful writer. There is a sound logical idea behind it and artificialities are not needed to emphasize the dramatic high lights. So "Modern Husbands" is conceived with an adherence to truth. And it is developed as truthfully by the director who has arranged his scenes so that the realities are never submerged. Indeed you don't look upon the picture as so much dramatic entertainment but as something which is recognizably real in everyday life.

The busy husband, the neglected wife, and the idle philanderer. Surely a familiar triangle. Each one pays and before the payments are exacted an undercurrent of suspense is holding the spectator in a tight embrace. Which is noteworthy when one considers that the action is anticipated from the start. However the climaxes are big enough, and the dramatic values sound enough to keep the spectator interested if not always excited. The star's assistants are also lifelike so well have they caught the humanities.—Length, 5 reels.—Released through Exhibitors Mutual.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

In "Modern Husbands," which will appear at the ——— screen on ——— of ———week, Henry B. Walthall has a role which is ideally suited to his talents. He succeeds admirably in giving a vivid portrayal of a type that is the result of the high pressure of the social life among the vainglorious rich. Mr. Walthall appears to splendid advantage in the role of Stephen Duane, a wealthy stockbroker, who, when his home is broken up by a social parasite and his fortune swept away in a stock-market crash, is driven to the depths of despair. He is about to end it all by suicide when his mind reacts to a realization of the cowardice of self-destruction.

Fate deals kindly with him for a friend of his prosperous days rescues him from his sorrowful plight and gives him a helping hand. And he has a chance to reciprocate this gratitude when the same social parasite that had broken up his home attempts the same tactics with his friend. To save the wife from a compromising position he assumes the "pirate's" guilt. But the latter leaves enough evidence behind to completely vindicate Duane.

This brief outline doesn't give even an inkling of the dramatic situations that are unfolded in the picture. Suffice to state that it presents a vital story that is recognizably real. The regeneration of Duane and his return to happiness with his wife are developed through a series of dramatic episodes of tense character. The light and shade of social high life are exposed in a drama which sustains interest throughout. Mr. Walthall is supported by a competent cast that includes such players as Melbourne MacDowell, Ethel Fleming, Neil Hardin, Claire DuBrey and Olga Gray. The picture was produced under the direction of Francis J. Grandon.

THE STORY

Stephen Duane is a wealthy stock broker and he is so wrapped up in his business that he neglects his wife. He doesn't realize that he is denying her the love and attention that she naturally craves until he finds that Julia is fond of Bert Brockwell, a philanderer. The latter is unduly attentive although there is a mercenary motive behind his proffered advances. Events reach a crisis, however, when Duane finds Brockwell at his home when the parasite has been cautioned to keep away. A quarrel ensues between the husband and wife the result of which is that Stephen leaves her. Meantime the market has gone against him and he finds himself financially ruined. Months pass and utterly discouraged over his disappointment and failure, Steve is on the verge of suicide but his self-respect brings him a realization that such an act is cowardly.

Good fortune smiles upon him later when a former friend, Cosgrove, takes him to his home and gives him a fresh start in life. Julia meanwhile has become a mother and in order to support her child she has found employment in a millinery shop. As for Brockwell, he has transferred his attention to Mrs. Cosgrove. One night when he has forced his way into her bedroom, Steve comes to her rescue and throws the home-breaker out of the window. And Duane and the wife are seemingly compromised when Cosgrove finds them together. However the philanderer leaves sufficient evidence behind which not only clears Duane but leads to his own arrest for forgery. So Mrs. Cosgrove leads Stephen to another room where he is told that everything he sees belongs to him. And so he looks upon his wife and baby. A happy reconciliation follows:

PROGRAM READER

Do you have any idea of just what constitutes a modern husband? Is he a captain of industry or a man about town? Again do you think that he is a wealthy clubman or a successful merchant? You may have the idea that he is a Prince Charming who showers his wife with love and riches and who is living up to his marriage vows in all their sacredness. This picture that you paint is somewhat true. He is a clubman, a rich man, a man about town and he THINKS he is giving his wife every little attention, but then he is extremely BUSY and he sometimes neglects her. And so she becomes a modern wife and hastens to find sympathy with the first presentable man she meets. Most often her judgment is woefully bad. And then a tragedy looms up which may destroy the home. Mr. Modern Husband and Mrs. Modern Wife simply cannot understand each other and so they separate. When they have duly suffered they may find a happy communion together. Who knows? Around this theme is the rich material that supplies Henry B. Walthall with his newest picture. "Modern Husbands." Patrons of the ——— theatre will have a chance to see this celebrated star in a powerful offering in the near future. It is human and truthful. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

A good argument to use in the exploitation of this picture is to concentrate upon the theme. It brings out what idleness and too much money will do in breaking up a home. Of course a social parasite is chiefly responsible for the turn of affairs, but he is a figure that is easily recognized in social functions of this modern day. Use the idea that this story is strictly up to date as it applies to big cities. The husband who is

"THE KNICKERBOCKER BUCKAROO"—ARTCRAFT

Pleasant, But Somewhat Disappointing for Fairbanks

GET an enthusiastic audience, trained to expect the best from Fairbanks, and "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" will score with pleasant success. There is something of psychology about it. The crowds that the individual has to wade through to find a seat, the fact that Fairbanks has done such splendid work, and also the absence of the famous star from the screen in a new picture for such a long time, will work for this production's good. But withal "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" isn't the fine picture that the time and money spent on it would lead one to expect. It will be liked for the same reason that a smoker likes his favorite cigarette, even after the manufacturer has started putting inferior tobacco into it.

In the first place "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" is a while getting started, and in the second the fast and furious riding at the end is a meagre substitute for the usual fast and funny and original Fairbanks business. It's the middle part that is the best, the middle part that leaves the good impression.

The subtitles are written with an eye to their humorous effect and well serve their purpose. The western scenes have the stamp of newness on them and are well photographed. Marjorie Daw is an appealing heroine and Frank Campeau is a thoroughly adequate villain.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 18.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

It's the picture you have been waiting for for six months, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," Douglas Fairbanks' latest and best. Don't miss this one even if you forget your supper.

Douglas Fairbanks always makes the management wish the theatre had been three times its size. Don't be one of the few to miss "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo."

The story of a selfish young man who woke up to himself and cleaned house. It's all told in the brisk, snappy, style that is always to be associated with a Douglas Fairbanks picture. Don't miss "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo."

We all sprang from the ape but Teddy Drake agreed that he didn't spring as far as the rest of 'em did! That's a good bit of philosophy. You'll find more, and laughs and thrills and romance in Douglas Fairbanks' latest Artcraft photoplay, "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo."

PRESS NOTICE

Douglas Fairbanks, who has not been seen in a new picture for almost six months, at last returns to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his most recent Artcraft production entitled "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo." The long wait of Fairbanks fans will be amply rewarded in this picture for, according to advance report, it is one of the best of the many pictures in which the athletic star has appeared. The opening of the picture finds him a New York clubman, very much an idler. The club committee finally tells him to make himself scarce because some of the members have complained that Teddy (Mr. Fairbanks) shows little regard for their personal comfort and feelings when he vaults over lounges and spins around on the smooth tops of mahogany tables.

Teddy wakes up to the fact that he has led a very selfish life in New York and decides to go elsewhere to see whether he can not cure himself. And of course that is where the fun begins. Teddy selects the West as the section of the country in which to prove his mettle and in the particular town he lands in there is a villainous sheriff, a good-bad man, a pretty girl in distress and whatnot to occupy his attention.

The entire film is filled with the rapidest sort of action, the star uncovers some new stunts and gets a lot of humor from his role. Marjorie Daw is again the lucky leading lady while others are William Wellman, Frank Campeau, Edythe Chapman, Albert MacQuarrie and Ted Reed. The picture was produced under the direction of Albert Parker.

PROGRAM READER

We've waited long and impatiently for the next Douglas Fairbanks picture. The management has been no less eager to see it than has the great public that always flocks to see this star. And now at last we are able to announce its coming! Its "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," Douglas Fairbanks' latest and most elaborate production for Artcraft pictures. In many respects it is the best subject in which the unequaled star has appeared. It offers him a thoroughly congenial role, introduces new stunts and new comedy and provides a pleasing little romance in the enactment of which the star is ably assisted by Marjorie Daw. We will not attempt to relate the details of the plot in this brief space. For the details are its very vitals and the vitals can not be set down in cold type on cold paper. To see it is to enjoy it and any suggestion of the events which are to be seen in it can only tend to make this program suffer by comparison with a good picture. Others who appear in the star's support are William Wellman, late of the Lafayette Flying Corps; Al MacQuarrie, Frank Campeau and Edythe Chapman. The picture was produced under the direction of Albert Parker from a scenario on which the whole Fairbanks organization colloborated.

THE STORY

A series of rather uncomfortable circumstances force on Teddy Drake knowledge of the fact that he is an extremely selfish person and so he resolves to strike out in new quarters to see whether he can't make a man of himself. The new quarters by chance turn out to be Sonora, Mexico, where of course, Teddy finds himself precipitated into the midst of a situation of situations. On the train he had agreed to change clothes with one Lopez, who desired to go home and see his sick mother. It was stated that the villainous sheriff was on the lookout for Lopez at his station, bent on killing him for laying down on a crooked job the sheriff wanted pulled. This appealed to Teddy and so the change was made. He finds it rather difficult to break away from the sheriff and his gang but eventually he escapes and stays free long enough to make the acquaintance of Mercedes from the outside of the jail looking in. Mercedes had been made captive of the shsriff as had her brother, the aim of the villain being to discover where their fortune was hidden. When the sheriff discovers that Teddy is for allying himself with his victims he too lands in jail.

But it is not for long. Teddy, besides accumulating selfishness, had found out the correct manner in which to act and think quickly during his years of life and before he is through he has refuted the sheriff and all his vile bunch of aides, rescued the girl, her brother and the money and taken the girl unto himself as his wife. Quite a large order for a plain Knickerbocker Buckaroo to land but all actually accomplished.

SUGGESTIONS

Of course few suggestions are needed for the exploitation of a Fairbanks picture but if you want to make an unusually big splash with this one and cash in on it to its fullest extent you should increase your advertising space for the full announcement of the picture's dates at your theatre. To make the copy stand out make a lot of fuss over the fact that the star hasn't appeared in a new picture for six months and that this is the first appearance since "Arizona." Be sure to emphasize the fact that it is new also.

If teaser campaigns seem to bring results the title of this picture lends itself very well to this sort of exploitation. The title certainly is one which makes you guess and so if you repeat it a few times in the newspapers just by itself and then add "What is a——" in front of it for a few days you ought to be able to stir up considerable interest. The big announcement at the end should of course contain some reference to the teaser campaign if this course is followed out.

A good stunt for the children would be to pull the old one about combining the two big words of the title to see how many smaller words could be written from them. If you start doing this beforehand you can stir up a lot of interest by running results on your screen. The words contain so many vowels that the title is a fine one to use in this fashion.

Here's something that looks like a wedding from the stills of "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo"

"FULL OF PEP"—METRO

Breezy American Puts Down Rebellion in Lively Farce-Comedy

METRO'S comedian, Hale Hamilton, will have to travel some to equal the good thing that has come his way in "Full of Pep." In his previous pieces he wasn't always adaptable to the figures he represented, and naturally his personality has been submerged. In his new offering however, he fits the character of the peppery American to a dot with the result that he looks like a different fellow entirely. His comedy methods are broad and the picture has enough sweep to carry them nicely.

He is a traveling salesman, is Mr. Hamilton in this instance. And in his father's ammunition plant he is considered the fastest worker. So fast does he work that he is commissioned to accompany a cargo of "fireworks" to a country in Central America in order that it may not fall into the hands of the revolutionists. He is eager to go since it means that he will have an opportunity to develop the flirtation that he carried on with one of the country's charming daughters. To camouflage the cargo he covers it up with bottled goods labeled Pep and when the revolution is started he nips it in the bud by giving the rebels a sample or two of his "medicine."

While the picture is an old friend by this time since it introduces a breezy American and a comic opera country, yet it carries enough originality in the employment of humorous highlights to make it thoroughly enjoyable. The director and players have cooperated splendidly in developing the comic interludes, and there is not a slip in detail and action. The picture is richly endowed with the proper atmosphere. Mr. Hamilton receives excellent support. "Full of Pep" is a clever comedy. It has a wonderful kick.—Length, 5 reels.—Released May 26.—Laurence Reid.

The generalissimo of the revolutionists had nearly usurped the throne. His men were true to him until the breezy Americano disposed of his bottles of "Pep." Then what happened? See "Full of Pep."

A genuinely amusing comedy, full of sparkle, paprika and pep. Pep? Yes Pep, spelled with a capital P. Don't by any means call it a day until you've seen Hale Hamilton in his new Metro pot-pourri, "Full of Pep."

PRESS NOTICE

Hale Hamilton the Metro comedian will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest picture entitled "Full of Pep." This is an adaptation of a story by Robert F. Hill and it was produced under the direction of Harry L. Franklin. Mr. Hamilton has the role of a traveling salesman—the fastest worker in his father's ammunition plant. And being a salesman he is not averse to flirting with a pretty girl when she comes along. So when he notices a beauty from Central America he loses no time in giving her one of his wonderful smiles. She catches the train that is to carry her back to her own country and he misses it of course. But when father informs him to take a consignment of ammunition to her country he jumps at the opportunity. Why? Well the girl interests him.

But how to get the cargo in the Republic without the revolutionists seizing it? That is easy says Jimmy. Just cover it up with bottles. So he labels the bottles "Pep—Good for what ails you"—and the stuff gets by the rebels. When the revolution is about to meet with success Jimmy just unloads his "patent medicine" and the country is saved, The President gives his daughter to the breezy American. You may guess who she is.

The situations are developed for their full farcical value and unfold a rich assortment of humorous scenes. There are a number of deft touches that are highly original. Mr. Hamilton gets the most from his role. His mannerisms are a delight to the eye. Others who contribute a brace of good performances are Alice Lake, Fred Malatesta, Charles Hill Mailes, Victor Potel and R. D. MacLean.

PROGRAM READER

Hale Hamilton in "Full of Pep" will appear at the ———— theatre at an early date. He has had a varied assortment of fine comedies of late but probably his new offering excels the others in its entertaining values. It is just what its title indicates and more. So Manager ———— advises you not to miss it if you enjoy wholesome fun and laughter. The star is seen in the role of a salesman for his father's ammunition works. He is a fast worker is Jimmy Baxter, so fast in fact that he loses no time in hastening to a country in Central America in order to get the "fireworks" in the palace grounds of the Presidential palace before the rebels have a chance to stop him. His real reason for his haste is found in the President's charming daughter with whom he flirted back home just as she caught the Limited. Well he gets the ammunition into the country all right but he has had to camouflage it with bottles labelled "Pep." This liquid is nothing else than whiskey, and when jimmy gives it to the natives they forget all about revolutions. The picture unfolds a laugh—a big laugh all the way and you are bound to enjoy it. It also shows some picturesque scenery that is appropriate. We feel sure that you will vote Mr. Hamilton a genuine laugh provoker when you see him in 'Full of Pep."

THE STORY

Jimmy Baxter is the fastest working salesman in his father's ammunition plant. So fast does he work that father sends him all over the world. He has just come back from a successful trip when he spies a beautiful girl who is willing to flirt. Now Jimmy is a salesman, isn't he? And so he reciprocated her smiling glances. But he couldn't catch the train that was carrying her back to her Central American Republic. Fortunately daddy had just closed a deal with the Government of that country whereby Jimmy was to accompany a consignment of ammunition in order to keep it from the revolutionists. He is immensely happy to go since it means that he will see the girl again. To camouflage the cargo he covers the cases with bottles which are labeled "Pep." And the rebellious natives are completely fooled. However, the revolution is started and things are going against the authorities in power until Jimmy starts to orate upon the merits of his bottled goods. And he fills the rebellious soldiers up on the "patent medicine" so that they forget all about kicking the government out. As a reward President Bocas gives his daughter Felicia to the resourceful Americans. Is she the girl he had flirted with in his own home town? She is. And it doesn't take her long to accustom herself to American ways. She has been educated in the States.

He went down to the Central American Republic to dispose of a line of arms and ammunition. To hide the "fireworks" he covered them up with bottled goods labelled "Pep—Good for what ails you"—and when the natives drank the precious contents they forgot all about their revolutionary doctrines. This is told in a highly humorous way in Hale Hamilton's newest trifle, "Full of Pep."

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the title of this subject. It suggests all sorts of advertising in the shape of teasers, circular letters, catch lines and feature stunts. Use it as descriptive of the picture itself, for that is just what this latest Hamilton comedy is—full of pep. We have printed samples of catch lines that could be used to advantage. A man, a woman, a boy, a girl, a picture ,a book, a play, a bottle may be full of pep. A bottle? That is the definition in the picture. The hero takes several bottles to a Latin American country and they are all labeled "Pep." One drink of the stuff starts the natives on double-quick activities. They forget the siesta hour. Use your arguments around this central situation and while Americans have put down rebellions before in pictures, still it is worked out with enough novelty to call attention of the patrons. Worded properly, this central idea will attract considerable notice. You can make this picture stand out through the catch line angle, so play on that tack. It looks like the best one at that. It is strictly farce-comedy and advertise it as such. Play up the star. In the stellar role of Jimmy Baxter he gets the most from it and gives a breezy performance that it will delight your people. Mention that he has a great reputation on the speaking stage as one of the most accomplished farceurs of the day. And his supporting cast has an advertising value. Every player is known to the devotees of your theatre.

"THE DIVORCE TRAP"—FOX

Dramatic Exposition of the Divorce Problem Starring Gladys Brockwell

Of all the pictures which have been based upon the theme of marriage and divorce none perhaps have come closer to the truth than Gladys Brockell's new offering, "The Divorce Trap." It seems like a leaf from the back page of a newspaper that deals in human interest stories and because it bears this resemblance it is true to life. Indeed the author has not shown a bit of exaggeration but has drawn his plot and characterization with remarkable fidelity.

A story is presented on the screen that COULD HAPPEN and it probably is happening every day. And if you search for it you will find it. The picture is extremely simple and the director has been careful to maintain the human note that has been so deftly interwoven in the theme.

Here is a working girl who marries the dissolute son of a millionaire, although she is unaware of his character. Her happiness is brief because her husband attempts to frame her in order to obtain a divorce. Which is a difficult problem in New York State when there is no tangible evidence. She is enticed to a hotel under the belief that her husband is ill and needs her. And there she realizes she has been victimized.

The remainder of this gripping story is developed around her vindication. The plucky girl fights for her good name and succeeds in arresting the framers for conspiracy. There are no falsities visualized here. The hotel episode and the methods she employs to maintain her honor are genuine and true to life.

The picture develops a full quota of tense and absorbing situations and through them Gladys Brockwell sends forth an emotional appeal. Others who are conspicuous for their good work are Francis McDonald, William Scott, William Sheer, and John Steppling. Frank Beal was the director.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

"The Divorce Trap," the Gladys Brockwell picture which comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, is a powerful exposition of the evils of modern divorce, and it gives the charming Fox star what is unquestionably one of her most fascinating roles. The action is swift and it unfolds many dramatic scenes of great intensity, in which Miss Brockwell shows to special advantage.

The picture is from an original story by Jasper Ewing Brady and was directed by Frank Beal. In the supporting cast are such well known players as Francis Macdonald, William Sheer, John Steppling, Betty Shade, William Scott and Herschel Mayall. It is an excellently balanced company.

Miss Brockwell appears in the role of a telephone operator who marries the son of a millionaire because she is piqued over a quarrel she has had with her fiance, a lawyer. The marriage does not please Daniel Drake, her father-in-law, and he promptly disinherits his son. So the young couple find a home in a modest flat. The former "hello girl" seems to have inspired her husband in assuming his responsibilities until he meets a number of evil associates. They don't appreciate the fine qualities of his wife, and tell Jim Drake that he can come into his inheritance if he would divorce her. Consequently she is framed, and the "damning" evidence is a hotel register. She is brought to the place under the belief that her husband is ill and needs her. How the brave girl fights to maintain her good name, how she succeeds in bringing the conspirators to justice, how she picks up the broken threads of her old romance with the lawyer, are events that form fitting climaxes to situations of great strength. It is a powerful picture in every way and should satisfy the most discriminating picturegoer.

THE STORY

Eleanor Burton is a carefree operator in a big hotel, and being an attractive girl she excites a lot of curiosity by the men who frequent the place. She is betrothed to Frederick Lawson, a struggling young lawyer, but a lover's quarrel occurs and they go their separate ways. And each is too proud to pour oil on the troubled waters. The consequence is Eleanor becomes attracted to Jim Drake, who is busy sowing wild oats with his father's big check-book. When he offers marriage Eleanor is naturally elated since she finds that her troubles are over. But her father-in-law doesn't favor the working girl as an ideal wife for his son, and he casts him out.

The young couple are happy for a short period in their Harlem flat until Jim's money begins to give out. So he falls in with evil companions, who suggest he should get a divorce and so be reconciled with his father. But Eleanor is as square as a brick and it is a difficult task for the schemers to obtain evidence for a divorce in New York. However, the trusting wife, still believing in her husband, is enticed to a shady hotel because she is told that he is ill and wants to see her. And when she finds herself in a room alone with the plotter and her husband, who has come "unexpectedly" upon them, she realizes that she has been framed. But Eleanor comes from fighting stock, and with the aid of her former suitor, the lawyer, she succeeds in vindicating her honor. The plotters are arrested for conspiracy, and Eleanor picks up the broken threads of her romance and pieces them together for the ambitious Lawson. Thus she finds happiness at last.

CATCH LINES

She is a "hello girl" and she gives up the struggling lawyer to marry the profligate son of a millionaire. Her marriage comes to grief, because her husband is caught in the meshes of evil friends. He frames a case against her to obtain a divorce, and the odds seem to be all in his favor until—See "The Divorce Trap."

An answer to the divorce law question may be found in "The Divorce Trap" the newest Fox picture starring the clever Gladys Brockwell.

She was only a telephone operator and when a young millionaire came along she took him for better, for worse. She was happy for a time, but she soon found out that money doesn't make a man. And when evil friends whispered in his ear to get rid of her, he framed a divorce trap. Did the "hello girl" fall into it? See "The Divorce Trap."

See "The Divorce Trap"—a gripping story of the abuse of the law by unscrupulous men and women. Gladys Brockwell is the star.

PROGRAM READER

Eleanor Burton was a "hello girl" in a fashionable hotel. Therefore she had a chance to make a great many friends among the patrons. While she was betrothed to Frederick Lawson and fully intended to marry him, a quarrel took place and she became the wife of Jim Drake, the dissolute son of a millionaire. Now she was a working girl, wasn't she? Naturally the marriage didn't please father Drake, and the consequence was he disinherited Jim. Everything would have turned out happily in the little Harlem flat but for the fact that the young husband associated with evil companions. Eleanor had made him genuinely ambitious and had him on the road to regeneration until his vicious friends suggested that he should get a divorce and thus be reconciled with his father. So they engineered a frame-up to entice Eleanor to a hotel under the belief that her husband was ill.

Up to this point the picture has developed with sure-fire situations, and what takes place afterward leads up to a climax that is sweeping in its emotional power. How did Eleanor fare in her predicament? Did she keep her good name? These are questions that you will answer when you see this highly dramatic subject. It presents vivid revelations of the marriage and divorce problem and should by no means be overlooked by picture patrons. Gladys Brockwell, who plays the wife, gives a performance marked by emotional sweep and makes the character sincere and appealing. She receives capable support.

SUGGESTIONS

In publicizing this picture a good suggestion would be to start a teaser campaign upon the subject of divorce. Arouse the interest of your newspaper and get the special writers to play it up as one of the most vital topics of the day The Fox people issue a campaign book of the picture, and there is enough data concerning marriage and divorce that will attract the newspapers. The feature editors can assemble the spreads and make a special story of them. If this plan doesn't appeal to you, then start a teaser campaign of your own based upon the big situations in the story. "PLAYTHINGS OF PASSION"—UNITED

Kitty Gordon Star in Rather Artificial Society Picture

"PLAYTHINGS OF PASSION" in which Kitty Gordon is again starred is a picture of society life that, dramatically, has more flaws than can be swallowed with the usual grains of salt. The star's character is quite artificial in the opening reels. Helen Rowland is painted as an utterly selfish woman—more, one who is ignorant of any life outside of her own, the slums, for instance. If such women there were, the war certainly wiped them out. Thus the contrast striven for is not effective.

In the beginning we are treated to several scenes in which Rowland, after being refused by Helen, viciously attacks her. As there are witnesses to this proceeding his father forces a marriage. Thus when Rowland puts in a bid for sympathy at the end it falls flat. The slum stuff, mission scenes, flashes of the poor and needy, things which awaken in Helen her better self are conventionally done, while the star as a helper of these poor and needy never seems to strike a sincere note.

Really the title and Miss Gordon's gowns are the things that count in this feature. These gowns are bound to cause comment, particularly the extravagant affair (with hat to match) that she wears on her first visit of mercy to the settlement house. Mahlon Hamilton as Rowland and W. Lawson Butt as the minister create characters that are at times effective—Length, 4,760 feet.—Released June 8.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Kitty Gordon, the brilliant dramatic star of United Pictures, is presented in her latest production entitled "Playthings of Passion" at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is considered one of the most extravagant features in which the talented star has appeared as it affords her the particularly strong role of a selfish society woman whose better instincts are awakened through a series of dramatic and amazing circumstances. Miss Gordon is singularly well equipped to carry this role. Her bearing, her clothes and her ability as an actress fit her remarkably well for it and there is not a moment throughout the duration of the five reels that she once loses sight of the character she is portraying.

She carries the role of Helen Rowland, the shallow society wife of a capitalist. Henry Rowland, when approached by a minister, to contribute of his funds to mission work, signifies his willingness to do so, providing the minister open his wife's eyes to something else beside her vain pursuit of happiness through extravagant society. And the minister accomplishes this purpose after many days in which he shows Helen the seamy side of existence. And then, to his dismay, he is confronted with the accusation of stealing Helen's love!

How this situation is concluded forms a climax of striking power in which Miss Gordon and her supporting players move with skill. Mahlon Hamilton creates a strong figure as the husband while W. Lawson Butt gives a realistic and quite unconventional portrait of the minister. William Anthony McGuire is author of "Playthings of Passion" while it was produced under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

THE STORY

Henry Rowland, manager of his father's millions, makes a vicious attack on Helen, the Rowland ward and as guests in the house see the incident, Rowland insists that his son marry Helen. Through the years that follow there is no love lost between the two although Henry has had ample time to repent his passionate outburst and grieves over the fact that Helen does nothing but play the social game to the very limit. John Sterling, a minister, who manages a mission in the slums, comes to Henry for financial aid. He is promised an endowment that will nigh last forever providing he can influence Helen to take an interest in other things of life besides empty society.

So Sterling sets out on this mission and though he finds the road hard travelling he eventually wins Helen away from her selfish occupations and brings her around to a vital interest to his work among the needy. And it is not long before Helen falls very much in love with Sterling and this Henry discovers—and blames the minister. Shocked into a realization of what he has innocently brought about by this accusation Sterling completely disillusions Helen by feigning intoxication. She returns to her husband thoroughly disgusted. Then he tells her of his love and, seeing that now his whole aspect has changed, she is overjoyed.

But Henry is unable to accept Helen's love without telling her the truth about Sterling. This done Helen is able to see the bigness of both men and the mission work is caried on sponsored and assisted by the lavish donations of the Rowlands.

PROGRAM READER

Henry Rowland could not understand why Helen, his wife, devoted all her time to entertaining. She had become bored with even the most extravagant of social events, that was plain, and he wanted her to take some sort of an interest in the big world outside of her little one. When opportunity knocked at the door in the person of John Sterling, a minister, he readily grasped it. He would contribute generously to Sterling's mission, he said, providing that he (Sterling) would endeavor to awaken his wife's finer sensibilities. Would Sterling accept the proposition? He agreed to and then there developed a series of most amazing dramatic situations. These are skilfully set down in Kitty Gordon's latest picture, "Playthings of Passion," which comes to this theatre shortly. Without doubt it is one of the most extravagantly dramatic pictures in which this noted star has appeared and besides awarding her a role in which her capabilities are brought out to their fullest extent it affords her opportunities to wear some amazing creations of fashion. Miss Gordon receives her support from Mahlon Hamilton as the husband and from W. Lawson Butt as the minister.

CATCH LINES

Henry Rowland accused a minister of stealing his wife's love! Was he correct in his accusation? See Kitty Gordon in "Playthings of Passion."

Play, play, play. That was Helen Rowland's life. She had no interest in the great outside world. Her social events were all that she seemed to care for. How could she be awakened? How could she be brought to a realization of the shallowness of her existence? See Kitty Gordon in "Playthings of Passion."

Startling Kitty Gordon in a tale of startling situations.

He deliberately threw his wife in company with this minister and then accused him of stealing her love! See Kitty Gordon in "Playthings of Passion."

The story of a woman of enormous wealth who failed to realize that there was suffering in the world.

She had plenty while thousands starved for the necessities of life! See Kitty Gordon in "Playthings of Passion," a dramatic photoplay of startling situations.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally the title is a catching one. It is lurid and will attract the lovers of the sensational picture. Don't fail to make full use of it in all advertising. To plant it firmly in the minds of your patrons it might be used of itself alone in teaser advertising campaigns or in throwaways. Anything to get the name talked about.

Of course play Kitty Gordon up. Her United pictures have scored heavily and she has become even more of a star than she was before. Feature her in a society role and, for the benefit of your feminine patrons, dwell at length on her gowns. These are startling to say the least and will doubtless cause a lot of comment. The character of the comment caused is a small matter. The fact that they will make people talk is the thing that counts

The two main supporting players, Mahlon Hamilton and W. Lawson Butt, are also worthy of mention for their performances are of a high calibre and their popularity is also worthy of consideration through their work in the past.

"THE BUSHER"—PARAMOUNT

Charles Ray Pitches a No-Hit Game in a Picture Full of Hits

SPEAKING IN baseball parlance, Charles Ray pitches a no-hit, no-run game in "The Busher," his latest offering on the Paramount program. But speaking in picture parlance, he appears in a picture fairly loaded with laughing hits, while the runs of human interest and quiet humor pile up to a big figure. With each successive characterization of Mr. Ray's one finds it difficult to sum up the worth of his performance when the superlatives employed on the one previous are recalled. But certainly it seems that in "The Busher" he excels all his work of the past.

And "The Busher" is not only a baseball picture. Those who search for something real in their entertainment will instantly sense that the career of Ben Harding on the diamond is nothing more than a parallel of a very human young man's career in any line of endeavor.

The story, old in its essentials, is excellently developed, and the human touches of the director and star are things that cast it in a mold that always appears new and refreshing. Mr. Ray receives some great support from Otto Hoffman in a character role and from Colleen Moore as the girl. The photographic work of Chester Lyons is to be commended with the highest praise.—Length, 5 reels.—May 18.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Ben Harding	Charles Ray
Mazie Palmer	Colleen Moore
Jim Blair	Jack Gilbert
Billy Palmer	Jay Morley
Deacon Nasby	Otto Hoffman

By Earle Snell.
Scenario by R. Cecil Smith.
Directed by Jerome Storm.
Photographed by Chester Lyons.
Supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

CATCH LINES

He came from a small town and landed on a big league baseball team and then he got a case of enlarged cranium and went blooey! Just like any youngster might do under parallel circumstances—but he came back and came back with the biggest wallop of them all! See Charles Ray in 'The Busher."

A baseball story with a ninth inning rally that will thrill you like regular big league stuff—don't fail to see "The Busher."

In "The Busher" Charles Ray puts laugh after laugh right over the home plate—and knocks out a few thrills too—don't fail to see this baseball picture. It's a hit.

There are laughing hits in every reel of "The Busher" but mighty few of 'em in the star game that Charlie Ray pitches in it—don't fail to see this baseball story—human and humorous.

PRESS NOTICE

Charles Ray in another one of his country boy characterizations will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The picture bears the Paramount brand and is entitled "The Busher," being a story of a young man's career on the baseball diamond. Never before, it seems, has Mr. Ray given such a thoroughly human characterization of a perfectly ordinary young fellow, but still this is the impression left after seeing every one of the actor's pictures. "The Busher" was written for him by Earle Snell, a professor in the University of California, the continuity was prepared by R. Cecil Smith and the direction was in charge of Jerome Storm.

Mr. Ray is seen as Ben Harding, the hired man of old Deacon Nasby in the little town of Brownville. Besides working with the hoe and the plough, Ben is the pride of the village in that he is star pitcher of the Brownville baseball nine. When a big league manager sees him in action Ben's future seems assured for soon afterwards he receives an offer to come to the city and travel in the fast company of the big league. How success turns his head and results in his downfall and how at last Ben learns how to deport himself after the manner of a man, are events which crowd the reels of "The Busher" with touches of wonderful human interest and delightful humor.

Surrounding Mr. Ray is a cast of exceptional worth, including Otto Hoffman as the Deacon and Colleen Moore as the "only girl." Others are: Jack Gilbert, Jay Morely, Jack Nelson and Louis Durham.

PROGRAM READER

Like a good baseball picture? Real big league stuff? And a bush leaguer making good in fast company? Most every human being does like such a picture and we can promise all that and more in Charles Ray's latest feature "The Busher" which is one of the features shortly to be seen at this theatre. But this busher has a hard row to hoe. The first time he pitches in one of the big games before crowds that include a delegation from his own home town, his head begins to puff and he is taken out of the box! Just what every young man might do in the same circumstances. The busher was just a human being after all and he flunked! But he came back and came back strong—a regular ninth inning rally he staged and one with a big thrill. That ninth inning comes in the fifth reel of "The Busher" and you'll have to stand up and cheer. Furthermore there's no seventh inning when you have to stretch! "The Busher" is clean ball from first to last with the star giving what is, perhaps, the best performance of his career in the title part. He is supported by Otto Hoffman and Colleen Moore among others.

THE STORY

Ben Harding is old Deacon Nasby's hired man and pitcher for the Brownville baseball team. One day the champion Pink Sox from Minneapolis, passing through the town on a train, are forced to lay off at Brownville for three hours owing to railroad trouble. A game is arranged on the spur of the moment and as a result all of the Pink Sox have a chance to try their skill with Ben's curves. The young fellow pitches a great game, and when he learns at its conclusion who his opponents have been he swells with pride. He can hardly believe himself when, only a few weeks later, he receives a telegram asking him to join the team. And Mazie Palmer shares his happiness and bids him a fond farewell with the rest of the Brownville folk.

At first Ben is a success in big league circles but soon afterwards he develops an inflated opinion of himself. When the Brownville folk come to watch him pitch an important game he loses it and after that the manager hands him his walking papers. So its back to Brownville for Ben and the kindly old deacon gives him his job again. And because Ben ignored them in the city, the Brownville folk now ignore him—that is all but Mazie who feels terribly sorry for him.

But Ben's chance to redeem himself—and save the roof over Mazie's head—comes when the pitcher who succeeded him disappears when an important game is to be played between Brownville and its greatest rival. He enters the box and pitches for all he's worth, saves the game for Brownville and is again the hero. And at the game's conclusion a man from the Pink Sox steps up and offers him his contract back for the manager had just been waiting until he had proven himself level headed once again.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally your advertising on this picture will suggest the character of the story which contains a baseball atmosphere. Don't fail to bring this out in any manner in which you exploit the picture for the national game dominates in it from start to finish. Paramount certainly have chosen a good time of year to release this. People's interest in the pastime has been reawakened since the war stopped and the races in all leagues are closely followed. Play it up for its baseball atmosphere then in whatever manner you advertise it.

If you think that your women patrons will fail to be attracted by such exploitation present it as a baseball picture and then go on to state that the story might have happened anywhere else than the diamond. Tie it up with some human interest copy and you will be presenting it so that it will attract even those who do not know what "two and three" means.

The picture should have a special appeal to the boys and if you are able to arrange any sort of a special matinee for them go to it. You will send a satisfied bunch of kids away and at the same time get in for some good advertising.

After all the biggest asset in any Charles Ray picture is Charles Ray. It is a known fact that no star is able to outdraw him in certain quarters of the country. His every act is so human that people fairly bubble with delight on watching him. Boost him for all you're worth, for without doubt he is a favorite and he is still coming up. Between him and the striking character o fthis picture any exhibitor should be able to make a cleanup of cleanups.

Special Service on "The Busher" appeared in the May 31 issue of Motion Picture News.

"PHIL FOR SHORT"—WORLD

Evelyn Greeley in Her First Starring Vehicle—a Comedy

"PHIL FOR SHORT" is Evelyn Greeley's first single starring vehicle for World, and it turns out to be a comedy of a quality well worthy to be placed with the best of the light offerings from this company. The plot, contrived by Clara S. Beranger and Forest Halsey, is a brisk affair and toward the end develops a spirit of farce that is always effective. The subtitles are of a humorous nature, too, although the scene-backgrounds used are in no way calculated to throw the words out clearly.

The story deals with the romance of a girl, Phil for short, and her husband. John Alden had married Phil because he believed he had compromised her and himself and he was pig-headed enough to say he didn't love her. How Phil accomplishes the winning of him makes a brand of humorous entertainment that should prove wide in its appeal.

Miss Greeley is supported by Hugh Thompson as her leading man and by a large cast of World stock players. The picture was produced under the direction of Oscar Apfel and as a consequence shows care and good taste in practically every one of its scenes.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 2.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Evelyn Greeley, formerly the co-star of Carlyle Blackwell in World pictures but now elevated to the ranks of single stardom by this company, appears in her first vehicle under this new arrangement entitled "Phil for Short," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "Phil for Short" is a brisk and joyous comedy written specially for Miss Greeley by those two excellent scenarists, Clara S. Beranger and Forest Halsey. It takes up the case of Damophilia Illington, whose name was "wished" on her by a father long on Greek but short on pocket-money. Naturally enough Damophilia decides to shorten her hindrance to Phil and hence the title of the picture.

The greater part of the comedy arises when Phil fairly forces herself on one John Alden, a woman-hater and makes it impossible for him to do anything else than make her his wife. But he professes a total absence of love even when he stands before the altar and it is Phil's task to wake the man up to himself in the concluding reels of the picture, a feat which she performs to the tune of considerable merriment. Miss Greeley appears to exceedingly attractive advantage in the stellar role and well justifies the company's choice in making a star of her. Her support in this instance is headed by Hugh Thompson and includes such well-known members of the World stock company as Jack Drumier, John Adrizani, James Fury, Ethel Grey Terry and Edward Arnold.

The picture was produced under the direction of Oscar Apfel, one of the leading directors of the day.

THE STORY

Damophilia Illington is the daughter of a famous Greek student—hence her name. She is known, however, as Phil and makes good her nick name by dressing as a boy and looking after the farm which her father neglects for his studies. In time Professor Illington passes on and Phil is confronted with the awful possibility of being adopted by Donald MacWrath, ancient pillar of the church who purposes to marry her. So, dressed in her boy's rig, she sneaks away in company with Pat Mehan, an old fiddler and travels the open road. The first stranger that she meets is John Alden, Greek teacher in a small college and profound woman hater.

In the course of time Phil lands the job as assistant Greek professor. John will have nothing to do with her in her girl's clothes but when she dons male attire and poses as her "twin brother" he tolerates her. Then Donald MacWrath comes for her with a warrant and Phil, to escape him, flees to John's house (dressed as a boy) and remains there for the night. The next morning the whole plot is discovered and John marries Phil to save both their good names.

Then comes the trip to John's home in Boston where Phil finds it difficult to make her husband even speak to her. Eventually, however, she arouses his jealousy by pretending elopement with Ivanovitch, a famous violinist. The "elopement" in reality is well chaperoned by the artist's wife. But John wakes up to the fact that he loves Phil through this game that she plays and before the story is over he takes her in his arms and confesses himself cured of his woman-hating.

PROGRAM READER

She knew her husband loved her but she knew too that he was pig-headed enough to go on refusing to admit it until the cows came home unless she took decisive steps to force him to. So she hatched a plan, a plan that revolved itself into an elopement! She chose Prof. Ivanovitch as the eloping partner for he had a convenient wife who would most certainly go along as chaperone! Wives of men are always such delightful elopement companions. But the note that she left behind for her husband to peruse mentioned nothing about this other wife—that was the trick and before he knew it the erstwhile pig-headed one had clutched his wife madly in his arms and was pouring forth his love for her. "Phil for Short" certainly teaches no lesson of importance but on the other hand it is a comedy bubbling over with merriment, that never falters in attracting the interest from first reel to last. Moreover it is Evelyn Greeley's first starring vehicle on the World program, she previously having worked with Carlyle Blackwell. The direction was in charge of Oscar Apfel who has been responsible for so many good World pictures.

CATCH LINES

Her husband pretended not to love her and she knew that he was pig-headed enough never to stop pretending unless she took the matter into her own hands. And she did! What happened then is humorously shown in "Phil for Short." Don't miss it.

She planned an elopement with a great musician and took his wife along as chaperone! There was a reason. See "Phil for Short."

In which Evelyn Greeley is starred alone for the first time—a sure-fire comedy with a sure-fire star.

Her father called her Damophilia and she chose Phil for short because the first syllable of her name was profane! See her adventures in "Phil for Short," a comedy for surprises and unconventionality.

SUGGESTIONS

As this is a comedy all advertising should be keyed in lighter vein and you have a lot of fine opportunities to do this in the story itself. A mere relation of some of the unusual situations that will be found by a perusal of the story will suffice to awaken the reader's interest. If you relate these in a snappy, original fashion, you will have the people eager to see the picture.

If you have played the Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley comedies in the past and if your patrons have shown themselves admirers of Miss Greeley, don't fail to mention that for the first time she is starred alone in this picture. You might even go so far as to make the exhibition of the picture in the way of an event if you think the name and the occasion of sufficient importance to warrant such a proceeding. Oscar Apfel directed many of the comedies in which Miss Greeley appeared with Blackwell, so give him a play. And the authors, too, for they have been responsibile for some of the best pictures from World.

"DIVORCE TRAP"

lionaire and he tires of her and attempts to get a divorse, which is difficult in the State of New York. His methods of framing her are good points to bring out. Advertise it as a domestic drama that carries the all-important theme of marriage and divorce. There is a big heart throb that should not be neglected. It is visualized when the heroine finds that she has been framed and fights to keep her honor. Keep the star before the public in any advertising plan you follow. Miss Brockwell is one of the leading emotional actresses of the screen and she has a considerable following. Fox has published some excellent stills of her and a number of one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets. Use them. The title vertise them. They are all well known to the is attractive and pound it home with effective arguments. The picture presents a story that touches a vital spot in the marriage problem of today. And don't fail to concentrate upon its truths. If the assisting players mean anything to you adaverage fan.

"THE HOME TOWN GIRL"—PARAMOUNT

Vivian Martin's Latest Sparkles with Charm and Sentiment

THESE homespun stories are having quite a vogue upon the screen and inasmuch as they generate a lot of wholesome philosophy and charming sentiment, it stands to reason that the silversheet is striving to show realities. Take Vivian Martin's new release, "The Home Town Girl," for instance. Here is a picture of small dimension which offers no pretenses but simply offers in a modest way a spray of real humanity.

It is based upon the faith that is generated through love and it remains true to its philosophy to the concluding scene. A small town boy leaves a small town girl to make his way in the city. When he fails to write because he is ashamed of his temporary fall from grace, the faithful sweetheart comes to the big town and restores him his self-respect.

Not much to it is there? Yet it is pointed with as fine a sentiment as one would want to see. And every detail that is needed to bring out its simple message is there without the least bit of exaggeration. Don't get the idea that it is a sweetmeat, for there is enough humor and substantial drama injected to provide a happy balance. The small town atmosphere is thoroughly in place and gives the picture a "homey" look.

Miss Martin makes a charming figure out of the heroine and plays with her accustomed sincerity. Ralph Graves is the small town lover and a good one, while the city folks are represented by Carmen Phillips, Stanhope Wheatcroft, and Herbert Standing. The picture is from a story by Oscar Graeve and is directed by Robert Vignola.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Vivian Martin, the popular and charming Paramount star, represents one of the finest types of womanhood in her new picture, "The Home Town Girl," which will be shown at the ———theatre on———of———week. Miss Martin plays the role of Nell Fanshawe, a country girl, who, by her sublime faith and loyalty, becomes the inspiration of her youthful sweetheart. Her power for good saves him from disgrace when he has a moment of weakness. He leaves the country drug store where he is the clerk behind the soda fountain and finds a more lucrative position in the city, in order to find the means with which to marry. When he becomes involved in difficulties and fails to write his faithful sweetheart, she goes to the city, finds him and brings him back to his fine ideals. We have not told the entire plot of the story. You must see it yourself to appreciate its many high lights. But we will state that a more truthful depiction of simple love and faith has never been told in pictures. The things that take place in "The Home Town Girl" are everyday happenings and so are recognizably real.

The picture is given an appropriate setting, there being an abundance of small town scenes that are rich in atmosphere. Miss Martin is especially charming in the role of Nell Fanshawe and gives a sincere and charming performance. Indeed she is thoroughly ingratiating in her representation of noble womanhood. Robert Vignola directed the picture from a story by Oscar Graeve. Edith Kennedy attended to the adaptation. In the supporting cast are Ralph Graves, Lee Phelps, Carmen Phillips, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Edythe Chapman and others. And they all render fine assistance.

THE STORY

In a little New England town lives Nell Fanshawe, who is extremely popular with the boys. Among those who pay homage to her are John Stanley and Frank Willis. The first mentioned seems to have the inside track as far as arousing the interest of the girl, but inasmuch as he is only a soda clerk in a drug store, their marriage cannot take place. However, John is ambitious to get ahead, and through Nell's inspiration he goes to New York and obtains a job with Jellaby & Co., antique dealers. Though his salary isn't large he is contented until Steve Ratling, a grumbling employee, tells him he is a fool to work for such a small wage. The ne'er-do-well is discharged and when John makes a particularly large sale Steve, out of jealousy, entices him into a poker game where he loses the firm's money. Afraid to face his employer, the country boy writes him that he has been the victim of pickpockets and that he won't return until he has made good his loss. And so he drops completely out of sight, with the result that Nell doesn't get any more letters. Yet she maintains her faith in him and comes to the city to find him if possible. She is employed by Mr. Jellaby, who informs her that John has been dishonest but that he is sending money each week without disclosing his whereabouts. Since he was at one time a soda clerk, Nell assumes he must be following that trade. Her assumption is correct, for she locates him behind the fountain in a drug store. After he confesses and declares his love she persuades him to return to Jellaby and face the music. And he offers such an effective plea that he is reinstated, thus paving the way for a happy reunion with Nell.

PROGRAM READER

Vivian Martin appears as a quaint but charming little country girl in her new Paramount picture, 'The Home Town Girl," which will be shown shortly at the ——— theatre. The star's many admirers will be glad to learn that she has a most congenial role in Nell Fanshawe. In fact, it is one of the most wholesome characters that has ever been drawn. Miss Martin admirably conveys all the qualities of loyalty, faith and unselfishness. And you will respond to her when you see that she cares more for the simple love that a soda water clerk in a country drug store gives her than for material riches as offered by men of position. She employs her womanly attributes so splendidly that she saves her boyish lover from moral degradation and makes everyone with whom she comes in contact just a little finer in heart and soul.

The story is written by Oscar Grave and perhaps you have come across it under its original title, "You Can't Just Wait." It has been faithfully adapted by Edith Kennedy, while Robert Vignola attended to the direction. Among the assisting players are Ralph Graves, Lee Phelps, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Carmen Phillips, Herbert Standing, and Edythe Chapman. They contribute splendid performances.

CATCH LINES

Don't fail to see Vivian Martin in "The Home Town Girl." It is a human picture of a girl who has sublime faith in her sweetheart. When he fails to write she comes to the city and rescues him from the depths of despondency.

His employer had made up his mind to have him arrested, but when Mr. Jellaby looked into the appealing eyes of the young man's sweetheart he couldn't resist them. Did the employee go to jail? See "The Home Town Girl."

Do you want to erase the furrows from your brow? Do you want to see a downright wholesome comedy? If you do, then don't fail to see Vivian Martin in "The Home Town Girl."

SUGGESTIONS

Here is one of those homely and human tales that should have no trouble in scoring with your patronage, simply because it tells a volume of truth which is set off entertainingly. Everyone loves a lover, but particularly so when he is willing to give up the environment of a small town to make or break himself in the city in order to obtain the wherewithal to marry on. Use this idea in your argument and bring out the inspiration that is created in the heart of the country boy by his wholesome sweetheart. She has unbounded faith in him, and even when he falters she is ever constant to make him better himself. Advertise the picture along this line and you won't have any trouble in catching the crowd. It looks like the best lead, this theme of "The Home Town Girl." and concentrate upon it. And

"THE BISHOP'S EMERALDS"—PATHE

Virginia Pearson Presents Herself in Good Melodrama

VIRGINIA PEARSON, who now heads her own producing organization, Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., has presented her initial offering, "The Bishop's Emeralds." Judging from the merits of the attraction, she has established her company upon a good foundation. There is a thoroughness about the workmanship of the production that augurs well for the future providing, of course, that sponsors are guided by the same artistic standards.

In selecting their material those in charge have not indulged in any research work to unearth anything new. But in choosing Captain Houghton Townley's novel which retains its title in the picture, they showed a good dramatic perspective since it is strong in plot and characterization. The picture presents the familiar figure of a wife who has married again when she believed her first husband dead. And of course he bobs up to torment her when she is endeavoring to forget the past in the happiness of the present.

Coincidence is a strong factor in the play, though it doesn't destroy the dramatic fabric. The story is too well knit for such an event. There is only one weakness discernible in the construction and that is found in the deliberate planting of the plot and characters. Otherwise everything is in its favor, if one overlooks a few slips in detail.

Of course the thought behind the story is the attempt by the supposedly dead Nemesis to steal the Bishop's emeralds. And a counter thought is his desire to ravish his bigamist-wife. Is he frustrated? He is, but only after a series of smashing climaxes. The story carries a youthful romance that is enacted by the offspring of the central figures, and it helps to lighten the melodramatic burdens of the grown-ups.

Miss Pearson acts with sufficient emotional fervor and is always appealing and sympathetic in her role. Sheldon Lewis as sinister and suave as usual and his villainy is comparable to his best serial work. It is good to see him without tatters, whiskers, and vicious claws, but groomed like a gentleman. The other players are capable. The picture has been handsomely mounted. John B. O'Brien directed.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

The ——— theatre has secured for presentation on ——— of ——— week the first run of "The Bishop's Emeralds," the initial offering of the new Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc. In the picture that classic beauty, Miss Pearson, is said to have one of the greatest roles of her entire career on the stage and screen, as Lady Hester Cardew, wife of the Bishop of Ripley.

The picture is founded upon Captain Houghton Townley's novel of the same name and depicts the struggle between Lady Cardew, the second wife of the Bishop, and her first husband, long thought dead, but who reappears as an international crook with intent to steal the Bishop's priceless emeralds. It shows the intense mental torture of this woman whose soul is wrung between a sense of duty to her reverend husband and the terrible scandal in which she would be involved were her former husband to denounce her as a bigamist.

The tense action of the picture gives Miss Pearson full scope for the display of her emotional and histrionic powers, and she embraces every opportunity with rare skill. Sheldon Lewis, who is featured, deserves praise for his sinister characterization of the cold-blooded crook, who stops at nothing to gain his ends. The balance of the cast is thoroughly satisfactory. John B. O'Brien, who directed the picture, has provided a notably "finished air,"—the whole production having a mark of quality.

THE STORY

Ripley Manor is the ancestral home of John Cardew, the Bishop of Ripley, and those who reside with him are his second wife, Lady Hester; Jack Cardew, the Bishop's son by his first marriage; and his spinster sister, Caroline. The latter heartily disapproves of her sister-in-law and when Jack marries Mabel Bannister, who has been a frequent guest at the Manor, the spinster again voices her disapproval. It seems that Mabel is the daughter of Richard Bannister who is also known as Richard Gordon, a notorious parasite and thief. He has educated his daughter in a convent so that he may be able to gain entree in sciety and thus practice his nefarious profession. When she returns home to break the glad news that she has secretly married a fine young man, she is greatly shocked to learn that her father is a chief and that he has accepted an invitation to the Bishop's week-end party.

The girl knows that he is after the famous emeralds, though she is powerless to stop him. When the guests are assembled in the drawing room, Lady Cardew recognizes in Bannister her husband, Dick Gordon, whom she had long thought to be dead. He is amazed to discover that her beauty has grown into sheer loveliness and his desire for the coveted emeralds temporarily sinks into the background when he realizes that this woman is his wife and that he can legally claim her.

When they meet at dinner an armed truce ensues. However, when she learns from Mabel, whom she now knows to be her own daughter, that Bannister is after the jewels she resolves to save them at all hazards. Although he succeeds in overpowering her to gain possession of them, he is subsequently wounded by his valet, an accomplice. The injury proves fatal, but before he succombs he manages to kill his man. And the story ends with a scene of reconciliation between the Bishop and his wife.

PROGRAM READER

"The Bishop's Emeralds," the initial production of Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., with Miss Pearson, the classic beauty of the screen, as the star, will appear shortly at the ——— theatre. As Lady Hester Cardew, the wife of the Bishop of Ripley, she is given ample opportunity to display those talents for which she is justly famous on the screen and stage. The star is supported by Sheldon Lewis, who is familiar to millions as the villain supreme of Pathe serials, and who appears against the background here as dark, sinister and malign. The picture has been adapted by Frank Beresford, while John B. O'Brien attended to the direction.

It is a literal dramatization of Captain Houghton Stanley's novel of the same name, and depicts an intensely dramatic story of English country life. It shows the struggle between the second wife of the Bishop and her first husband, thought to be dead, but who reappears in her life as an international crook bent on stealing the Bishop's famous emeralds. This man's attempt to carry out his purpose, his death at the hands of an accomplice, and the final reckoning and reconciliation between the Bishop and the woman he loves—these together form the groundwork of a highly interesting tale. It remains a picture that every picture lover should see.

CATCH LINES

See "The Bishop's Emeralds," an intensely dramatic story of English country life, with the Bishop of Ripley, his second wife and her first husband as the principal characters. The latter is thought to be dead, but who reappears as an international crook with intent to steal the Bishop's emeralds.

"Truth will out" is brought home vividly in "The Bishop's Emeralds"—the new Virginia Pearson photoplay. It exposes with glaring relentlessness the fallacy of a wife suppressing her past history from her husband. See Virginia Pearson supported by Sheldon Lewis in a powerful picture.

SUGGESTIONS

In starting your campaign of exploitation of this feature emphasize the fact that it is the first of the star's pictures produced by Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc. Miss Pearson is widely known to screengoers as an exceptionally brilliant actress. So use her name extensively in any advertising plan, and that she is producing pictures under her own management. Bring out that she is supported by Sheldon Lewis, who will be remembered as one of the leading serial actors of the day. The story appeals to every class of the picture public. Although its locale is set in a society atmosphere the strong dramatic elements will attract those patrons who delight in melodramatic fare. The novel has undoubtedly been

"BREAK THE NEWS TO MOTHER"—SELECT

Rather Poorly Done Picture with Mother Love Theme

THE mother love theme is always a good one for the picture producer to turn to, but it is a theme which requires the best of treatment and production. Regrettably "Break the News to Mother," an opus that is traced to Charles K. Harris' song of the same name, is not intelligently put on. The main theme, always rich in the elements of sentiment and heart interest is not very prominently developed and even when it is, its effect is not very deep owing to the rather unskilled treatment it receives.

The character of the story as a whole is melodramatic and a good many emotional demands have been made on the players, none of which are met with any great degree of appreciation save those that come to Gertrude Berkely, who appears as the mother. And Miss Berkely apparently suffers from poor direction as in several of her scenes she is lost.

The rest of the players are little known and the two leads, Raymond Bloomer and Pearl Shepard, have quite a hard time scoring their points. It is evidently up to the exhibitor to get as much from the title and the picture's scource as he can, for there are more merits in this regard than in the production itself.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

PROGRAM READER

A story of a small-town boy whose ideal in life was his mother, and whose one desire was her ultimate happiness, is the theme of Select Pictures' big special attraction, " Break the News to Mother," which comes on ——— to the ——— theatre. At his mother's request, one night, he goes to his employer to apologize for having humiliated him, and asks to be reinstated. The superintendent is jealous of Dave because the girl he wants for his wife is in love with the boy. An argument arises, and the superintendent is shot. Dave is accused and, although he is innocent, he flees. The superintendent recovers, and after one year, when Dave does not return, he becomes engaged to the girl Dave hoped some day to make his wife. Dave turns up at the last moment, is absolved of all blame, and happiness and love are his rewards.

PRESS NOTICE

"Break the News to Mother," which Select Pictures offers on ——— at the ——— theatre, as a special attraction, is one of the most delightful stories the screen has seen in many months. It is a clean, breezy and powerful picture. " Break the News to Mother" is not one of those many photoplays that have no other reason for being except that they just happened. This picture has something to say and says it in a direct, appealing and powerful way. It is the story of the greatest love in the world—that of a mother for her child. Raymond Bloomer as Dave Bray, the small-town boy who worshipped his mother, is one of the best juvenile characters seen on the screen in many a day. Half man, half boy, typical of the small town which has been his home ever since he can remember, Dave is accused of a crime he never committed. He is forced to leave his home without taking time to bid even his mother or sweetheart goodbye.

The mother, one of the most wonderful characterizations that has ever appeared upon the screen, as enacted by Gertrude Berkely, is brokenhearted. She feels that the disappearance of her boy is entirely her fault, because she had persuaded him to go to see Flint, the superintendent of the firm for which he worked, who was later found shot, and for which crime Dave was named as responsible. The inner workings of the mother-heart are revealed to you. Throbbing, stirring, thrilling, " Break the News to Mother " will make you smile through your tears and make you glad that you are alive.

THE STORY

Dave Bray, only son of the widow Bray, is a typical boy with one strong point—his intense love for his mother. Ruth Godwin, daughter of Howard Godwin, President of the Godwin Iron Works, has second place in his heart. Warren Flint, superintendent for Mr. Godwin, is very anxious to win the affections of Ruth, and as Dave, one of his employees, stands in his way, he naturally feels resentful toward him. After having tried a number of times to interest Ruth, he decides to " frame " Dave so that he will appear as a good-for-nothing cad in her eyes and establish a better footing for himself. Dave learns of the " frame " and in his boyish way decides to " punch his head " for it. Flint declares that he has been humiliated and " fires " David. Dave goes to the office that night, at his mother's request, to beg Flint's pardon. A quarrel starts over Ruth, and Flint picks up a revolver, aiming it at Dave. They fall in a clinch. The revolver goes off and Flint falls to the floor.

During the fight Edna Holmes, Flint's former sweetheart, has been listening at the door, unknown to both men. Dave believes he has killed him. Flint learns that he has a chance to live and, although he knows that Dave did not shoot him, he accuses him of the crime. Dave manages to make his escape, but does not have a chance to say good-bye to his mother or Ruth. At the end of a year of adventures, he returns triumphant—to love and happiness. It is natural for Dave to find a haven in the ranks of the army and caring little whether he lives or dies, he covers himself with glory in the world war. Then comes his return to his home, his happiness with his mother complete when he finds Ruth still waiting for him and his name cleared of all the false charges.

CATCH LINES

A picture of tremendous heart interest founded on Charles K. Harris' famous song " Break the News to Mother."

A theme which all the world glories in—mother love.

Your eyes will smile through a veil of tears.

A story of the greatest thing in the world—mother love.

All his friends suspected him, she knew he was innocent! Who was she? The greatest friend of every boy in the world—his mother! Don't miss " Break the News to Mother," special in name and special in value.

Do you appreciate to what length a mother will go to save her boy? Do you know what mother love really is? If you do or don't, see " Break the News to Mother," the picture founded on Charles K. Harris' great song hit.

Gertrude Berkely, famous for her characterization of the mother in " War Brides," again takes this role here. A great performance in a great picture—don't fail to see " Break the News to Mother."

SUGGESTIONS

This picture has a title of great sentimental interest and it should be liberally displayed together with the announcement that it is based on Charles K. Harris' famous old-time song hit. If you can find any copies of the song left in your music store, dig them out and use them in connection with advertising this feature. Maybe the dealer will help you along. Of course use the piece several times through the run of the picture, employing it as the theme for the role carried by Gertrude Berkely. This will tend to further accentuate the sentiment of the picture. In your advertisements you might reprint a bar or so of the music to still further tie the picture up with its original source.

If you played " War Brides " probably even today your patrons remember the great characterization contributed by Gertrude Berkely. Dwell on the fact that she again takes the mother part here. She scored such a hit in the old picture that many people will want to see her again. Make mention in your advertising that she appeared in " War Brides " in order to freshen the audiences' memories.

interest readers. The catch lines have been written with this object in mind. And play up the star. Miss Traverse can do the triangle theme to perfection. She has personality and poise, and sufficient dignity to play the wronged wife. Use her name in advertising the feature and don't neglect the photographs. Your nearest Fox exchange will gladly send you some stills, but try to get some that exhibit her in a lavish display of gowns. Special lithographs have been worked out in advertising the star and story. They will suggest effective cutout ideas to you.

"LEAVE IT TO SUSAN"—GOLDWYN

Madge Kennedy's Indomitable and Undeniable Humor Scores Again

IN "Leave It To Susan," Goldwyn has taken Madge Kennedy to the rolling plains of the West, and there against a background of melo-farcical happenings she appears as her own inimitable self. In this satire of a western thriller, the star has a thoroughly delightful subject—delightful in the sense that she is given full opportunity to display her unbounded talents as a comedienne.

It seems good to see her again in a humorous role for comedy is her forte and the woods are full of lachrymose actresses. They can do the serious things quite as well as Miss Kennedy, but she has few rivals when it comes to generating humor. So it is a sight for sore eyes to see her in this amusing trifle.

But the picture is Madge Kennedy any way you look at it. Take her out of it and we can think of no substitute who could emphasize the ineffable charm that she puts into her role. Susan Burbridge is her character name, and she surrounds herself with such an armor of innocence, and appears so unmindful of villainy that she makes her kidnappers appear like a delegation of missionaries. She has always wanted to meet bandits and now that she knows several she doesn't think they are bad fellows at all.

The action takes a melodramatic turn occasionally, but then Miss Kennedy is always there to balance it with the comedy threads. Wallace MacDonald, Walter Hiers, Alfred Hollingsworth, Ann Hernandez contribute good support. Clarence Badger's direction is capable.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PROGRAM READER

Madge Kennedy in the environment of the wild West! It had to happen. The laughter-provoking possibilities of the daintiest of stars surrounded by the roughest of Western characters has been evident ever since the piquant comedienne arrived at the Goldwyn Studios in California. The concrete result is "Leave It To Susan," confidently offered by Goldwyn as absolutely the best Madge Kennedy photoplay yet presented. She is as different in her methods as the locale is unlike any in which she has hitherto found herself. Her rapidly mounting popularity will increase by leaps and bounds when she is seen as Susan, daughter of a financier, who finds herself stranded on the American desert and seeks refuge in a shack occupied by a band of desperadoes. This situation, verging on the tragic, becomes an episode of delight as Madge Knnedy plays it. The entire production of "Leave It To Susan" is replete with moments of wholesome and refreshing fun. All the amusing happenings on a long railroad journey are shown, not to mention Susan's adventures with the bandits and her return to civilization. Players high in favor with the public support her, and genuine plainsmen and cowpunchers take the places of her usual society satellites. All in all, Madge Kennedy's latest is sparkling comedy in its best estate.

PRESS NOTICE

A chuckle every second and a laugh a minute is the guaranteed speed record of "Leave It To Susan," Madge Kennedy's new Goldwyn picture, which comes to the ——— theatre, beginning ———. She is the daughter of a mining capitalist who is taking her on a Western trip with him, accompanied by her mother and a ridiculous suitor. Unknown to anyone aboard but the father is a young mining engineer, Jimmy Dawson (Wallace MacDonald), retained by the father to investigate beforehand the property the capitalist is interested in. They have arranged a code and Jimmy will wire to Susan's father at a certain hotel.

The inevitable hot box occurs on the long trip across the American desert and Susan takes the opportunity to give her dog an airing. They are left behind and after long hours Susan finds herself at nightfall in a tumbledown shack. Jimmy Dawson turns up there, too, and dons rough garb. In this guise Susan sees him for the first time and is sure that he is a hold-up man. Her suspicions are confirmed when the real desperadoes appear and Jimmy pretends he is one of them. Thanks to the code he is able to apprise Susan's father of his daughter's danger and eventually she is rescued. What happens afterward is the big surprise.

THE STORY

Susan Burbridge journeys west with her father and most unwelcome suitor, Horace Peddingham. Burbridge is to look over some mining property on which Jimmy Dawson, his engineer, has been working. Nearing their destination the train is held up and Susan gets a good look at the robbers. To make matters worse a few miles further on a hot box occurs in the engine and the train is stalled. Susan gets out to give her dog an airing, but the beast gets it into his head to chase an animal of the plains, and when at last Susan has recovered him the train has gone on its way.

Susan wanders around for hours and at last finds herself in a shack where the same Jimmy Dawson is stationed. His rough clothes lead Susan to believe that he is a bandit, but she quickly reverses her opinion of him when he talks to her as a gentleman. However, soon afterwards the bandits who robbed the train enter and then Jimmy lapses into their style of talk and Susan is convinced that he is an outlaw. Jimmy tells them who Susan is and suggests that they write a note demanding a ransom. He pens the epistle and includes in it a code message telling the truth to Burbridge.

While one of the bandits is away to get the money Susan contrives to make all the rest her captives on the grounds that she wants to learn some tricks with the rope. Then the sheriff arrives and Susan is rescued. Jimmy, however, disappears. Later in the city Susan again meets her "bandit," this time clothed in gentleman's clothes, and it is not until then that she learns the real identity of the romantic individual.

CATCH LINES

In which Madge Kennedy invades Bill Hart's own West and proves a match for a gang of holdup men. See "Leave It To Susan," a merry melodramatic farce.

She stepped off the train in the middle of the Wild West to give her dog an airing and found that when he had gotten his full the train had gone on without her. Stranded in the trackless country! What did she do? Well, see "Leave It To Susan" and enjoy a laugh and a thrill.

She knew she oughtn't too, but then she just couldn't help falling in love with this bold, bad bandit! But was he a bandit after all? See Madge Kennedy in "Leave It To Susan."

SUGGESTIONS

Tell your patrons that in this picture Madge Kennedy invades the melodramatic West, still with her farcical ways, however, and that she masters a bunch of bad men without knowing how she did it. Bring out the farcical spirit of the picture which the title itself suggests and at the same time strive to get a few melodramatic touches in your copy to keep up the interest.

Madge Kennedy is worthy of special featuring and in the Goldwyn press sheet on this production a number of good stories regarding it are to be found. Wallace MacDonald, leading man, is also worthy of mention, inasmuch as he only recently returned from service with the Canadian forces.

"MODERN HUSBANDS"

wrapped up in the scheme of making money quickly is real and so is his wife who is skidding near the danger sign in her vain search for pleasure. Idleness and wealth—what tragedies are written about these words.

Play up this idea. It is your strongest talking point aside from the star. Send out teasers suggested by the producers which are that EVERY WIFE who feels she is neglected, every wife who is longing to meet a "dancing man" at a tea dansant so that he may give her the love that her husband has denied her, should see this picture. And the same idea can be used about the husband who neglects his wife for the sake of business. Concentrate upon the theme. It is a big revelation of a modern triangle. The title is a hum-dinger. It will catch the crowds if you emphasize it properly. Use the argument that everyone may have an idea what a modern husband is but he doesn't know for sure. Your argument will show him. Use the star's name. He is a big feature in the screen world. He has been called the Mansfield of the silent drama. He is highly talented and your crowds should know it by this time.

"LOVE'S PRISONER"—TRIANGLE

Olive Thomas Stars in Society-Crook Picture

OLIVE THOMAS takes the role of a young woman who is society leader by day and notorious crook by night in "Love's Prisoner." While crook plays are generally accepted by the public if properly presented, it must be confessed that this picture fails to measure up to the standard in this line of entertainment. The action itself presents a good enough appearance, scene by scene, but it is only too obvious that the picture was extensively edited, with the result that the whole possesses small measure of continuity. Instead the producers have overburdened it with subtitles containing big phrases and accomplishing much of the action themselves. For example, the heroine is married, widowed and educated all in the short space of twenty-five words or so!

Miss Thomas herself appears to attractive advantage and is ably supported by Joe King as the hero and William V. Mong in a character role. The settings are passable, although it is quite obvious that the director was striving for "atmosphere" all the time. Certain it is, however, that the picture could be improved if the laboriously written subtitles were removed and replaced with others.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 8.—Peter Milne.

CATCH LINES

Jim Garside stumbled on a clue that led him to believe that the famous Lady Cleveland and the notorious crook, "The Bird," were one and the same! Was he correct in his surmise? Would he be obliged to arrest the woman he loved as a common crook? See "Love's Prisoner," Triangle's latest picture in which Olive Thomas appears.

Why should Lady Cleveland prey on society in this way? See "Love's Prisoner," in which Olive Thomas again appears on the Triangle program.

Society leader or crook? Which? See Olive Thomas in "Love's Prisoner."

PRESS NOTICE

Olive Thomas, the popular Triangle star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week in her latest production entitled "Love's Prisoner." This is a singularly effective photoplay and awards the star a role which taxes her versatility to its utmost. Suffice it to say, however, that she meets all the difficult situations of the story with a wonderful display of those varied capabilities of hers, which have so soon lifted her to a place in the foremost ranks of screen stars. "Love's prisoner" was written by E. Magnus Ingleton and produced under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Miss Thomas appears as Nancy, the daughter of a famous pickpocket, who, on her father's death, is confronted with the seemingly impossible task of providing for her two younger sisters. She resolves to make a valiant fight to play with the law instead of against it as her father had done before, but through a series of peculiar circumstances she finds this an impossibility. She is revealed later as the fashionable widow of the late Lord Cleveland, but there is more about Nancy than just her society name. For to keep up appearances she goes forth into the night and robs the homes of the rich that she herself and others less fortunate may live.

How she was finally discovered on one of these marauding parties and what the consequences were make "Love's Prisoner" a picture filled to the brim with heart interest and true romance. Miss Thomas is supported by Joe King and William V. Mong, both players of great ability.

THE STORY

Nancy is the daughter of a famous pickpocket and when the old gentleman gets sent off up the river for a stay she is obliged to turn in and support her younger sisters. Leaving them in care of old Jonathan Twist, a jeweler, she gets a job as demonstrator of some new drink in a drug store and in this way she meets the wealthy and ancient Lord Cleveland. A proposal of marriage and a wedding shortly follow and not so long after that Nancy is a widow—but without funds. Cleveland's holdings were in England and Nancy finds that she has no title to them. But she determines that the law, the law that has always been against her it seems, shall not force her back to the poverty she once knew.

And so Nancy takes her place as a brilliant society leader during the day time and at night, dressed in boy's clothes, sallies out and robs the rich. There is method in her madness, however, for she gives part of the loot to the poor she once lived with. So clever is she that the police consider her a most dangerous person and put Jim Garside, ace of detectives, on the mysterious robber's trail. It takes Garside weeks and weeks of watchful waiting and patient watching to get a clue, but eventually he does, through Twist who acts as Nancy's "fence."

Nancy plays a clever game, but the detective is cleverer and he finally places her under arrest, after he has found Twist murdered. He is about to accuse her of this crime when the police inform him the real murderer has been found. And then, not having to press the murder charge, Garside decides to press none at all—instead he presses Nancy—very close to him.

PROGRAM READER

Jim Garside found himself rapidly falling in love with this pretty little widow—Lady Cleveland. He had been assigned to guard her house which had been brought under the surveillance of a notorious robber, known to the police as "The Bird." But Jim found that he was watching Lady Cleveland and not giving much time to the elusive one who constantly violated the law. And then one day Jim received a shock. He stumbled over a clue that led him to believe that Lady Cleveland and "The Bird" were one and the same! Could this be true? Could the respected and eminent Lady Cleveland be the crook that had systematically been looting the fashionable residences of the city? Was Jim Garside right in his conclusion? These are questions that will be answered in the most recent of Olive Thomas' Triangle pictures, "Love's Prisoner," which will be seen at this theatre shortly. It is one of the most exciting of all pictures in which she has appeared and should be missed by none of her many followers.

SUGGESTIONS

The greatest advertising point regarding this feature lies in the story which introduces a society leader as a crook. Advertising should be molded on the form of one of the catch lines, that is as far as word arguments go. Stimulate the reader's interest in this character. Play it up for all it's worth and you will arouse the curiosity of even the casual reader. The same plan could be employed in throwaways or any other sort of exploitation you employ in putting the picture over.

Olive Thomas, of course, should be featured heavily. Recently she has been receiving national advertising that has made her name even better known at your theatre. Cash in on this by using her name in all exploitation matter.

"BISHOP'S EMERALDS"

read by many of your patrons and it is certain that everyone who perused it will be desirous of seeing it on the screen.

Link up with your bookdealers and get them to make a window display. Or have them use cards with the question, "Have you ever read 'The Bishop's Emeralds'?" provided they are unable to obtain copies on short notice. But have them draw attention to the fact that the public can read the story from the ——— screen if you cannot exploit the book angle. Than you have the jewelry stores to work with. And they can display real or imitation emeralds with cards advising when and where the picture can be seen. You can get lobby displays in the shape of posters and stills from your nearest Pathe exchange. Use them. Miss Pearson wears some stuning gowns that are sure to attract the feminine sex. Then you might use the circular letter stunt. Get up a few snappy sentences particularly emphasizing that the star is beautifully gowned, the fine atmosphere of the play, and the date and time of presentation at your theatre.

"BEAUTY PROOF"—VITAGRAPH

Harry Morey in Melodrama of the Far North

"BEAUTY PROOF" is old fashioned melodrama with a vengeance. It is the villain that contributes largely to the creation of this aspect of the picture. He simply will not behave. He drags a helpless man out into the snow and leaves him to die, hurls the heroine from his sled when he discovers that she retards his progress and takes mean advantages of the hero from reel No. 1 to reel No. 5.

Certainly none of those who enjoy the ten, twenty, thirty stuff will find anything missing in "Beauty Proof," but before an audience accustomed to the modern in picture production it will appear in its true light—old style.

The picture is laid against a background of northern snow and is worthy of special consideration as to its scenic value because of this. Mr. Morey is again the fighting hero, while George Majeroni is the villainous one and Betty Blythe the heroine. One can not help but criticise the direction of Paul Scardon when it comes down to dramatic details. If he had toned his action a bit the obvious tricks of a by-gone age that he uses would not be so apparent.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 23.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Corporal Steele	Harry T. Morey
Carol Thorpe	Betty Blythe
Hodge, Alias Garson	George Majeroni
Young Thorpe	Denton Vane
Inspector McGregor	Robert Gaillard

By James Oliver Curwood.
Scenario by Edward J. Montagne.
Directed by Paul Scardon.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature offers a number of features for distinctive advertising. You can play on it in the manner done elsewhere on this page in the catch lines. Questions directed to the readers as to whether any man is "beauty proof" will likely catch the attention. Play up this angle in all advertising that you do. It will help sell the story.

Mention also that the story is laid against a background of snow in the far North. The scenes of the picture will back up this statement with much to spare.

Harry Morey is a popular Vitagraph star and there are others in the cast that surround him worthy of mention in the advertising. At all events feature Mr. Morey for all he's worth to you and then mention the others who support him as they are well known to people who have been seeing Vitagraph pictures regularly.

PRESS NOTICE

Harry Morey, the virile Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "Beauty Proof." This is an adaptation from a story by James Oliver Curwood and awards Mr. Morey the role of a member of the Northwest Mounted Police. He is known as "beauty proof" inasmuch as he is a woman hater and his comrades in the organization of law and order know little or nothing regarding his past. There comes a time when this man is sent on a perilous mission to arrest one Thorpe, charged with murder. Other men have tried and failed owing to the wiles exerted over him by Thorpe's sister, Carol. And so the "beauty proof" corporal is chosen because of his reputation as a woman hater.

How he fares in the tractless wastes of the frozen north, how he learns eventually that Carol and her brother are really innocent and that their oppressor is really his old enemy, and how finally justice is meted out to all, makes a picture of extraordinary entertainment value. Mr. Curwood, an author who knows the North of which he writes, has constructed his story with a keen eye to its many melodramatic situations and as a result these have been developed to their fullest extent. The scenario for the story was made by Edward J. Montagne and the picture was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon who has done such good work on Mr. Morey's pictures in the past.

Mr. Morey makes a striking figure of the strange man of the North and receives support of an excellent sort from such players as Betty Blythe, George Majeroni and Denton Vane.

THE STORY

Corporal Steele of the Northwest Mounted Police is known as "beauty proof" because of the fact that he is a woman-hater. The reasons for this attitude of his are deep ingrained. Several years before Steele had taken one Garson into the bosom of his family and had helped him to gain a financial footing in the world. Garson's thanks were to make off with Steele's wife, later deserting her and leaving her to die. As a consequence Steele had hunted high and low for the betrayer but his quest had never met with anything approaching its reward.

Steele is sent farther north to arrest Thorpe on a charge of murder. He is regarded as the only man for the job inasmuch as Thorpe's sister, Carol, one of the most beautiful girls in the north country, has bent every effort to save her brother from the clutches of the law. When Steele arrives at his destination he is made prisoner of the girl and is so placed in a room that he learns that the charge of murder is a frameup by Garson, who now goes under the name of Hodge, in order that he may get Carol in his power.

So Steele turns evidence against the crown instead of for it and it is through his testimony that the victims of the villain are acquitted. Afterwards, Steele, influenced by the girl attempts to get Hodge away from the angry mob. Hodge attacks him and leaves him in the snow. Again he makes Carol his captive and severely wounds her brother by shooting him. But Steele revives and gives pursuit and this time there is a fight to the death with Steele the survivor. But Steele's heart has been softened again through contact with Carol and he leaves the northern wilderness with her as his wife.

CATCH LINES

PROGRAM READER

Corporal Steele of the Northwest Mounted Police was chosen to go on a mission of a most peculiar nature. It was an easy thing to arrest this man, Thorpe, accused by an important railroad man of the far North of committing murder. But the chief told Steele that there were more perils attached to the job than he dreamed of. In the first place there was Carol Thorpe, the accused man's sister. This opened up a vast avenue of difficulties that no ordinary man could beat down. Carol was known as the prettiest girl in the Northwest and the commandant of the police knew that any other man than Steele might be susceptible to her wiles—wiles used in keeping her brother from the law. But Steele was "beauty proof," a nickname fastened on him by his associates because he was a confessed woman hater. That was why he was chosen to go far into the North to make this arrest. What did he find there? How did he fare with this famous beauty of the North? Was he successful in his mission? Was he really beauty proof? All these questions are answered with dramatic effect in the latest Vitagraph picture starring Harry Morey and entitled "Beauty Proof" which will be shown at this theatre shortly. It is one of the best of Mr. Morey's features and should not be missed by any of his many admirers.

"HOME TOWN GIRL"

because it is true to life and will be recognized as such by your patrons, the picture is going to be talked about. Bring out that it shows a lot of wholesome people—people you would like for your neighbors. They have no pretentions but are sincere and take life as it comes.

Play up the fact that the star has never had a more congenial role. She is going to make a lot of new friends. So use her name and photographs. She is a regular girl here and your younger patrons will recognize her as identically like their sisters and sweethearts. Also state that the picture is an adaptation of Oscar Graeve's story, "You Can's Just Wait," and that Robert Vignola directed it. Ralph Graves, Lee Phelps, Carmen Phillips, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Herbert Standing, and Edythe Chapman are in the cast. Advertise them because they are well-known players.

"THE LADY OF RED BUTTE"—PARAMOUNT

Western Melodramâ Gets Tangled Up in a Tissue of Absurdities

DOROTHY DALTON wins the prize for having the best crazy quilt of the current cinema season in "The Lady of Red Butte." What the thing purports to tell we are unable to find out, but we do know that after it has run through its spool that it resembles nothing so much as vacuum. Gardner Sullivan, are you guilty? Your name is down as the author, which leads one to suspect that you were dreadfully hurried to finish it on schedule time. And that is the idea that the picture brings forth—that it was written to furnish a vehicle and nohing more.

The realists are going to be awfully disappointed here, and for that matter so will the sentimentalists. Those who enjoy seeing life lived with a measure of reality will be just as shocked as the others, who like truth sacrificed for happy touches. The story is absurd and the characterization is weirdly overdrawn.

It is all about a gambler's daughter who paired off with a wandering minister after she has restored his mind. He was a raving maniac when he hit the camp and he wore a false beard and carried a shepherd's crook. And he cursed and he prayed that fire and pestilence would destroy Red Butte. Well, the fire came, but it burned his shack of worship and left the den of evil standing. Why? Because the girl prayed harder than he did. This is only one of the absurdies; the others are too numerous to mention.

But for the sake of the good old love interest we must state that the crazy evangelist became a good and loving Christian after the girl had whacked him on the head with what the gentlemen of the press call a "blunt instrument." The picture is intended for serious consideration, but to us it looks like a corking comedy. Where was Mack Sennett when the thing was taken?—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE

Dorothy Dalton will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Ince-Paramount picture entled "The Lady of Red Butte." As the title implies the star appears in the sort of picture that brought her fame—a picture of the western type and of a generation past. There is the mining town of Red Butte with its saloon, and a gambling house that is presided over by the star in her character of Faro Fan. Everything is peaceful in the community since the natives are largely influenced by the wholesome personality of the girl. However, when a religious fanatic comes to the town and curses the citizens and calls upon Heaven to purge the place of its sins, the peaceful quietude of Red Butte is sadly interrupted. A fire sweeps the town and takes every building but the gambling house. And the minister, enraged to find his church destroyed, attacks the girl. How she restores his sanity and regenerates him is told in an absorbing climax.

It is a most dramatic photoplay, this "The Lady of Red Butte," and is filled with situations of an unusual character. The story was written by C. Gardner Sullivan—than whom there is no better author for the screen—and he has succeeded in making it graphic and thoroughly interesting. The direction was in charge of Victor Schertzinger, and he has brought out the full values of the story besides seeing to it that it was properly staged. Miss Dalton's vital and vibrant personality is set off to advantage by the requirements of the role, while Thomas Holding, Tully Marshall, William Courtright, and Joseph Swickard are among the most prominent members of the supporting cast.

THE STORY

Faro Fan is a young woman who has inherited her father's gambling house in the mining town of Red Butte. As she is strictly on the level and generous to a fault, she does not encourage the lawless element to gain the upper hand. Consequently she and the place she presides over are respected by every one in the town. Things go along in their even way until Webster Smith, a religious fanatic, staggers into the town bent on reforming the citizens. His mind had given way some time previously while he was attending a theological school. Mounting a platform, he expounds his doctrine of hate, and condemns every one, including Fan, for leading a life of sin. She is the only person who upbraids him for his intolerance. When he learns that she conducts a gambling house he curses her and prays that God will scourge the town by fire.

As a malignant fever is rampant, Hanson, the saloon-keeper, tries to disinfect his place and starts a fire which spreads rapidly. Every building is destroyed except Fan's house, and Smith, enraged over the loss of his church, attacks her. In the struggle she strikes him on the head, and the blow restores his mind. The result is he becomes the personification of love and kindliness. Thus a romance springs up between them. When he goes away to bring a doctor and supplies, Fan is attacked by a vicious Mexican, though she succeeds in protecting herself. But Smith returns unexpectedly and Fan fires at him in the belief that he is the greaser. The injury makes her realize that Smith has redeemed himself, and that his intolerance is succeeded by love. And so they are happy.

CATCH LINES

Her life was in danger since she was threatened by a religious fanatic who held her responsible for the sins of Red Butte. She conducted a gambling house in the town. Did his intolerance turn to love? See "The Lady of Red Butte."

The mining town was a pretty clean place, but a wandering fanatic believed it to be Hell on earth. He called on Heaven to wipe it out. Was his prayer answered? See Dorothy Dalton in "The Lady of Red Butte."

Dorothy Dalton, the popular Ince favorite, will come to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in a good old hair-raising mining camp melodrama—the kind of picture that made her a star. No one can do this subject quite as well as Miss Dalton. Don't miss her.

When fire swept the town, Faro Fan's gambling house was the only building spared. The fanatical minister attempted to take vengeance out upon the girl. But he found a love that he never thought existed on earth.

See "The Lady of Red Butte"—a picture of intolerance and love and a mining camp.

PROGRAM READER

Dorothy Dalton, whose pictures have been greatly enjoyed in the past at the ——— theatre, will return here shortly in "The Lady of Red Butte." As the title implies, it is a mining camp story—the kind of story that brought Miss Dalton out as a star. No actress on the screen has a more vital personality, and she always succeeds in suggesting the frontier girl to the life. The management believes that you will enjoy seeing her in the thing that she does best.

It is a tale of a girl who conducts a gambling house. She has such a splendid character herself that the place could not help being run strictly on the square. A fanatical minister comes to the town with a lot of bigoted ideas. How his intolerance spreads unhappiness in her heart provides the dramatic elements of the story. He calls upon God to scourge the town by fire, and the flames sweep every building in the town except the gambling house. How his mind is brought back so that he looks upon the world with kindliness and love forms a fitting climax to an absorbing story. "The Lady of Red Butte" was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, one of the few BIG authors in the business, while Victor Schertzinger directed the picture. The star is supported by a cast that includes such popular players as Thomas Holding, Tully Marshall, William Courtright, and Joseph Swickard.

"PRETTY SMOOTH"—UNIVERSAL

Bayard Veiller Writes Another Crook Story for Priscilla Dean

"PRETTY SMOOTH" stars Priscilla Dean in another crook picture, this time written by Bayard Veiller, the popular stage author. The picture combines mystery and suspensive action to a good degree and presents two principal characters that always attract the spectator's sympathy. The climax of the story is well evolved and besides rising to unusual heights brings a laugh.

Miss Dean, whose name has come to stand for the exciting crook picture, plays with an alertness and spontaneity that is attractive and receives good support from Francis MacDonald as the hero and from Milton Ross as a detective.

All in all the picture should find an extensive appeal before those audiences who delight in seeing the minions of the law go down to defeat through the cleverness of outlaws. The picture was extensively reviewed on page 3657 of last week's issue.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Gertie	Priscilla Dean
Hartigan	Francis McDonald
Mrs. Manson	Gertrude Astor
Mr. Manson	George McDaniels
Nellie	Claire Greenwood
Judge	Joseph Swickard
Kersey	H. Milton Ross

Scenario by Waldemar Young.
Directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

PROGRAM READER

They had decided to go straight, had Gertie and her husband, Jimmy Hartigan. Horrible examples of what they might come to in future days changed them from crooks into people endeavoring to be honest. So they bought a little farm in New Jersey and settled down. But they forgot! Forgot that there was one relentless detective who was on their trail. He was Kersey, a sleuth, who had been on Hartigan's track ever since he broke jail some two or three years before. His job had been a difficult one and one which he had often despaired of fulfilling but it so happened that just when Gertie and Jimmy had decided once and for all to quit appropriating other people's property that he should come upon them! And what was the consequence? Did he take Jimmy away to jail? Did he break up their happiness? In "Pretty Smooth," the latest Priscilla Dean picture which will come to this theatre shortly, all these questions are answered in most dramatic fashion. The story for the picture was written by Bayard Veiller, the famous playwright, while Francis McDonald appears opposite the star. If you like crook plays you'll like "Pretty Smooth"; if you don't like them, "Pretty Smooth" you'll surely like.

PRESS NOTICE

Admirers of Priscilla Dean, the Universal star, have a special treat in store for them in her latest picture entitled "Pretty Smooth," which is scheduled for public exhibition at the ——— theatre beginning on ——— of ——— week. "Pretty Smooth" is another crook play but an unusual one. Its merit may be partially judged when it is mentioned that Bayard Veiller, the famous stage playright, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," is author of it. All those elements of mystery and suspense which he always managed to inject in his stage work are not missing here with the result that "Pretty Smooth" pretty nearly sets a record for the crook picture play.

Miss Dean is awarded the role of Gertie, a sweet young crook, who is married to Jimmy Hartigan, the prize cracker of them all. After a variety of exciting experiences the couple decide to tread the straight and narrow path—but, they forgot the inevitable detective. Said detective at last gets on their trail and accosts them just as they had planned to settle down on a little farm in Jersey. How they manage to escape from his clutches and enter their new life with all vestige of the old swept away makes a photoplay of absorbing interest, the climax of which rises to unusual heights.

..Miss Dean makes a dashing appearance in the stellar role and receives competent support from Francis McDonald as Hartigan and from Milton Ross as the detective. The picture was produced under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon from a scenario by Waldemar Young.

THE STORY

Gertie Jones, known to the police as the "chatterbox," is acting as maid in the home of a wealthy family for purposes best known to herself. When she sees her chance she attempts to open the safe with tools in order to secure a valuable necklace but makes an exceedingly bad job of it. Casting about for an alibi she cuts a hole in the glass window, as if a burglar had done it, and then sends for the police. But just as the "coppers" come a real burglar, Jimmy Hartigan, enters the place and it is a case of love at first sight between Jimmy and Gertie. However, Jimmy gets caught by the police and Gertie finds herself with a debt to pay.

She pays it first by arranging for Jimmy's getaway from jail and then by marrying him. They establish themselves in New York where they are not known and proceed to continue in their chosen line of endeavor until unforeseen circumstances influence them to attempt the straight and narrow path. Gertie's sister comes out of jail a consumptive and a famous old crook appears before them a broken down wreck. Seeing that they too will some day come to similar circumstances, the Hartigans, under the name of Hart, buy a farm in Jersey and settle down.

But a detective has been on Hartigan's trail ever since he broke jail. They get word of his coming and, with two other crooks, arrange a game that, when enacted, makes it appear as if Hartigan had saved his life. And so the detective makes a quiet exit, saying that he was looking for Jimmy Hartigan and not Jimmy Hart. The happy couple then settle down to virtuous lives quite free from such things as detectives.

CATCH LINES

They wanted to go straight but there was a detective on their trail who wanted them back in jail. Who won out? See "Pretty Smooth," the latest Priscilla Dean crook play.

The detective wanted some way out. He didn't relish the job of arresting Jimmy Hartigan and Jimmy was obliging enough to provide that way out! See "Pretty Smooth," the crook play with a hundred thrills.

Written by Bayard Veiller, the famous Broadway playwright, author of such successes as "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair"—see his first original picture, a masterpiece of suspense and surprise, "Pretty Smooth."

Priscilla Dean's latest crook photoplay—nothing like anything you have seen before—don't miss "Pretty Smooth."

SUGGESTIONS

Priscilla Dean and the fact that this is another crook play are the points to bring out first of all in advertising this feature. Miss Dean has climbed to popularity rapidly on the recent features awarded her by Universal and it would be wrong to underestimate her reputation with the fans. Furthermore they seem to look for her in crook plays so don't make any mistake about announcing the real character of "Pretty Smooth."

You also have a wonderful name in Bayard Veiller, the author of the picture. His two most recent plays, "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," were tremendous successes in New York and the other big cities and are still playing on the road. It would certainly be of value to carry his name on all copy together with the statement as to his authorship of these plays.

"LADY OF RED BUTTE"

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture exhibitors should keep in mind that the star returns to the sort of subject that founded her popularity. No actress on the screen can do the western picture quite as well as Miss Dalton, and you should acquaint your patrons with the fact that she is back in the thing that she does best. The title suggests what sort of a picture it is, and your exploitation should be built around the star in western garb. Use her name in everything you send out, for she is the strongest selling point in the picture. Play up that she conducts a gambling house but that she is thoroughly on the level. And make mention of the fact that only a single shot is fired. Then there is the child appeal. Several children in the piece will bring out the people if you advertise them, especially the crippled youngster played by May Garcia. She it was who appeared as the little girl in "For Better, for Worse," and if you played the picture your crowd will remember her. If you use the plot in advertising, play up the fact that a religious fanatic is taught a few lessons in Christianity by the heroine. He calls upon Heaven to destroy the town and a fire sweeps his church and every building except the gambling house. Use this argument and others you may find in the catch lines. Use stills of the star in her western garb. And use red lights in your decorative scheme in the lobby and the sign out in front. They will suggest the picture. Make mention of Thomas Holding and Tully Marshall. They are in the cast and are well known. And the author's name might also be used. He is at the top of his profession.

Private Post Office Box for "Ham and Bud"

AMONG the first group of state right exchanges to secure the Kalem single reel comedies featuring Ham and Bud was R. M. Savini Films, Inc., of 63 Walton street Atlanta, Ga., and also A. A. Weyland's Standard Film Corporation, 1412 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The former secured the Ham and Bud rights for North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Forida and the later secured these single reel comedies for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

It was only a few weeks ago that Jans Productions, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, announced that it had bought the ninety-two Kalem subjects starring Ham and Bud and would select fifty-two of the best to re-issue one a week for a year.

F. E. Backer, general Sales Manager for the Jans Company, declared that not only the representative state right buyers immediately communicated with him but that he was amazed at the immense array of exhibitor inquiries as to what concern had the Ham and Bud comedies for their particular territories.

R. M. Savini, the well known Atlanta exchange man, issued a unique folder addressed to the exhibitors in his territory. The return post cards enclosed were addressed to "Ham and Bud," personally in care of a Post Office box in Atlanta which Mr. Savini had engaged in their name.

Two mornings after mailing the enclosed cards in the folder combination he had prepared he visited the Ham and Bud private box at the Post Office in Atlanta. He reports that the box was barely able to hold the first avalanche of replies from exhibitors desirous of booking the comedies.

"Can they come back?" queried Mr. Savini. "Well, I know they have come back and stronger than ever."

"True Heart Susie" is Griffith's Latest

"NOT to the battle of cannons and of liquid fire has David W. Griffith turned," says an official of Famous Players in his newest Artcraft production, "True Heart Susie," which was released June 1, "but to the everlasting warfare between the silken ankled wielder of the powder puff and the plainly dressed, simple-hearted sweetheart whose lips have known no rouge, whose eyebrows have never felt the touch of charcoal pencil. These and a minister. This eternal triangle forms the ground on which is laid the story of this Artcraft picture that is said to excel in workmanship and artistry anything the director has ever before produced.

"In no picture Mr. Griffith has made, do his people reach a higher climax in the art of screen acting than they do in 'True Heart Susie.' Lillian Gish, in one scene portrays emotion in a way never before attempted by any artist at any time. And there are fragments of comedy that will bring laughter from every person who sees it."

Robert Harron is given the credit, it is stated, for creating a new style of serious comedy. It is a comedy, it is said, that lingers, excites and while provoking laughter at the immediate moment has a lingering seriousness that will be held in the memory of many who see it. Clarine Seymour plays the part of a milliner from the big city, a part for which she is said to be splendidly fitted. Kate Bruce, Loyola O'Connor, Walter Higby and Raymond Cannon complete the cast.

Director Is Now Producer

Oscar Apfel, the well known director will for the next three years, produce five reel pictures at stated intervals which will be known and designated as Apfel Productions, and will be distributed through World Film exchanges. Mr. Apfel has completed "Phil for Short" with Evelyn Greeley as the star as his first production. The second will be put in work next week with Miss Greeley again as the star in "Bringing Up Betty" by Charles Sarver and adapted by Clara S. Beranger.

Powers Cameragraph and Ford Company

THIS picture is an excellent object lesson of the good uses to which motion pictures can be put.

It shows the auditorium at the Ford plant which will seat nearly 500.

The interest of the Ford Motor Company in motion pictures is well known. They are using a number of Power's Cameragraphs in the projection room with very excellent results.

A letter from them states: "During the past three and one-half months over 25,000 Ford employes have attended these Safety meetings, and the results have been manifested in the form of a very material reduction in accidents."

Abrams Engages Whitaker for Washington, D. C.

V. P. Whitaker, who has been closely identified with film rental in the Washington, D. C. territory and Southern points for the past six years, has been appointed Sales Manager of the Distributing Depot which United Artists Corporation will open in Washington.

Mr. Whitaker is the first Depot Sales Manager to be engaged by Hiram Abrams, General Manager of United Artists Corporation. Mr. Abrams is building the sales organization gradually, selecting the men with great care, in the hope that when the personnel is rounded out, United Artists Corporation will have a sales force of specialists.

World Pictures Contracts with Rubye de Remer

Rubye de Remer, following her appearance in "Fires of Fate" the propaganda picture, has signed contracts with World Pictures to star in a series of productions. Her initial picture will be "Dust of Desire," written by Forrest Halsey.

Miss de Remer has been jumping back and forth from the stage to the screen. Prior to entering pictures she was with the Ziegfeld Frolic and more lately with Weber and Fields.

Blackton Writes Story for His New Feature

Though no definite news is yet available regarding the title and theme of the sensational super-feature J. Stuart Blackton is now producing at his own studios in Brooklyn, it is announced that the story of the production is an original one written by Commodore Blackton himself. The continuity is the collaborative work of Commodore Blackton and Stanley Olmstead, newspaper man and author of scenario and magazine stories. This new Blackton picture has been under way for about two weeks.

The featured names are Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon. Included in the cast are Fanny Rice, Eddie Dunn, Gus Alexander, Julia Swayne Gordon, Van Dyke Brooke, Louis Dean and Leo Delaney, all Vitagraph favorites; Charles and Violet Blackton, the producer's children; Madame Barry, Alla Peroff, Richard Milasch and Jay Strong.

Praise for Outing-Chesters

So well does the Camp Morale Officer at Camp Custer, Michigan, think of Outing-Chester pictures, that he has ordered the continuance of their showings at the cantonment theatre, it is announced.

This word was contained in a letter from the manager of the theatre to Arthur S. Hyman, distributor in Michigan, commenting on the expressed liking of the soldiers for the Outing-Chester subjects.

Second Macauley Play Ready Late in June

AFTER five months of work, and heralded by an eight weeks advertising campaign, the second production of the Macauley Photoplays, Inc. "When Bearcat Went Dry" is nearing completion and will be given trade exhibition the latter part of June.

For this production, which is from the book of the same name by Charles Neville Buck, a company of sixty players has been in the Cumberland mountains for nine weeks. In the cast of principals are Bernard Durning, Evangeline Valentine, Lon Cheney, Winter Hall, Walt Whitman, Ad Brady, N. K. Wilson, Gordon Russell and John Lynch.

The company had a number of amusing experiences in the mountain districts, many of the inhabitants never having seen a motion picture. Some of the natives, however, were induced to participate in small character parts.

Edward Stacy, grandson of the original Bearcat, who is the foremost character in the book, was found, it is said, and verified many of the incidents mentioned in the story and shown on the screen.

Bearcat, contrary to belief, is not a town, but the appellation of a man. Long prominent in mountain life, he was one of the big, virile figures of the Cumberlands which have prompted volumes of fiction.

Vangie Valentine, the "Blossom" in Macauley's "When Bearcat Went Dry"

Bernard Durning was chosen to play the part of Bearcat Stacy, and Vangie Valentine, formerly featured with Ziegfeld in his Amsterdam Roof show, is playing the role of Blossom.

The picture is to be about six reels in length and will, it is claimed, be ostentatious as to production, sets and faithfulness in detail.

A nation-wide campaign has been instituted by the Macauley Company and Grosset and Dunlap, publishers.

"SAHARA"

That masterpiece about which there is so much "advance interest" is now being printed, tinted and toned in our laboratories, supervised by one of the foremost experts in the industry.

Unless you see "SAHARA" perhaps you will never realize how much the scientific application of Tints and Tones to release prints assists in gratifying the esthetic nature.

Sahara release prints are not "Republic selling samples." They are typical of the Republic Standard. For further proofs we refer you to any of our recent releases: "The End of the Game," "The Carter Case Serial," "The Best Man."

About Metro Players

When supervising Director Maxwell Karger arrives at the Metro studio on May 26, from his trip to New York, where he went in search of new stories, it is expected the big producing plant will take on considerable activities, if such is possible. Every company is at work on new place with the exception of that headed by Madam Alla Nazimova who is expected to arrive soon from her vacation in the East.

That the Metro expects to do more producing in the West, is indicated by the purchase this week of five additional acres adjoining their studio site at Romayne and Cahuenga streets, Hollywood. The present plant covers twelve acres and the recently acquired property will be used for street and exterior sets that are built at the plant.

Two important engagements were made for Metro productions this week when Kenneth Harlan was contracted to play opposite Viola Dana in "The Microbe" to be directed by Henry Otto and Jack Mulhall was engaged to be the leading man for Emmy Wehlen "In His Brother's Place."

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

The talk to be heard at the Famous Players-Lasky studio is mostly concerning the Houdini special Artcraft titled "The Grim Game," which is now well along in production. To begin with this picture has a wonderful array of literary talent and the main titles will carry the names of Arthur B. Reeves and John Gray as authors, and credit the continuity to Walter Woods, who has been a king in development of melodramatic situations both for the speaking and shadow stage. Everyone who is at all familiar with this story will tell you it is to be a high brow melodrama, with respect to the manner in which it is produced, for be it known everyone says "the sky is the limit" for properties, setting, etc. And judging from what everyone has said and putting their several predictions into one composite statement it may be prophesized that "The Grim Game" will make "The Still Alarm" or "Lights of London," or "The Whip" seem dry and uninteresting, as compared with the thrills upon thrills that will be seen in this mystery detective yarn. Irving J. Willot is now directing.

Elliott Dexter is absent from the Lasky studio and it is possible he will be away for several weeks for he is now confined in a private sanitarium suffering from a nervous collapse. Studio officials have been informed Mr. Dexter is recovering nicely and he will in all probability, be able to resume work in three or four weeks or about the time that Cecil B. DeMille is ready to begin the filming of his next Artcraft special, which is to be a companion picture for "Don't Change Your Husband," and probably released under the title of "Don't Change Your Wife."

Dorothy Dalton, Ince star in Paramount pictures

Title selected for the Kate Douglas Wiggins' story, which served as a vehicle for Lila Lee under the direction of Robert Thornby is announced to be "Rose of the River." This production is now practically finished. Darrell Foss makes his debut as a Paramount leading man.

Universal Newsettes

Passports have been secured for a Universal producing company to tour the world, and twelve people under the direction of J. P. McGowan will leave Los Angeles about May 31st for the east. Eddie Polo will be the featured player of the serial to be entitled "Trailed Around the World," and Peggy Aarup will be the leading woman. The first episodes which open in a big cattle ranch in Arizona and on Catalina Islands off the California coast, have now been taken, and the next stop is New York, following this the third episode will be filmed in England, and from there the company will tour eastward, finishing the serial in Honolulu.

Joseph Brandt, who for the past several months has been devoting all his time to the supervising production of serials and such propositions, returned to Universal City from the east a few days ago, and has been devoting his time to the completion of detail work necessary for the launching of this world-wide producing effort.

Harry Klein, formerly manager of the Globe Theatre in New York, has come to Universal City with the avowed intention of learning motion picture production, and he was sent west by President Carl Laemmle and began his work this week.

Paul Powell is to direct the filming of the next Monroe Salisbury picture, the name of which is "Devils Have Their Friends," and Colleen Moore has been engaged to play the opposite lead. The company has spent the past week in the San Bernardino mountains and are now back at the studio to make the interiors.

Three subjects are nearing completion at the Universal, "The Pinnacle," directed by Eric Von Stroheim, "The Right to Happiness," starring Dorothy Phillips, directed by Allan Holubar and the Harry Carey subject, "A Man of Peace," which has Peggy Pearse in the feminine lead. For "The Pinnacle" a big Tyrolean village was erected and proves to be one of the most expensive sets built at "U" City. Lynn Reynolds has completed "A Little Brother of the Rich," and George Seigman is making the final scenes for a Joseph Franklin Poland story "The Spitfire of Seville."

Vitagraph News Bits

Lake Tahoe, California is to furnish the exterior setting for the next Earle Williams Vitagraph subject which is an adaptation from the Eugene Walters play "The Wolf." Mr. Williams left for the North this week and will be followed by Director James Young and Company within a few days.

Members of the Dave Smith Vitagraph Company now engaged in the filming of an adaptation from the Florence Morse Kingsley story. A contest has been inaugurated to see which member of the company can suggest the most desirable title, the story is at present known as "Fate and Geraldine."

William Duncan cannot be kept down even though he has three ribs broken. He induced the doctors to make a bandage which would insure his ribs could not be misplaced, and he is going right ahead with the production of his next serial. This week he extricated himself from under a wrecked automobile staged in a tank full of water.

The Tony Moreno "Perils of Thunder Mountain" serial company are putting in every available minute to make up for lost time caused by Director William Bowman's illness, and because the historic log cabin used in the initial scenes taken at Truckee and then brought to the Hollywood studio must be sent back and rebuilt so that the company can take the final scenes at Truckee. The cabin will be shipped back next week by express and the company will go North for the final weeks work on this serial in about three weeks.

The laws of gravitation are to be defied in the big "V" comedy now being made which features James Aubrey. The comedian will do a number of stunts which he performed in his vaudeville tour several years ago and which are new to the American stage and screen.

Montgomery and Rock have finished their Arabian comedy made under the working title of "Rummies and Royalty" and it is said to compare most favorably in respect to richness of setting, writing effects, etc., with any comedy released to date.

Here and There

E. M. Asher, who was formerly associated with T & D Circuit at San Francisco, was recently engaged by Mack Sennett to serve as special representative for him, and Asher has now taken up his new work. He left for New York early the week of May 24th and will spend some time with the Paramount advertising and publicity department in working out the problems of improving this feature of the Sensett service for the Paramount program.

The Mitchell Lewis Company left this week for Lake Memet, a private resort high in the California mountains, where a story titled "Jacquel of the Silver North" will be made for Select. The supporting cast accompanying Mr. Lewis and his director Robert M. Bradbury, includes Gloria Payton, Patricia Palmer, Joseph Swickard and Frank Wilson will be the heavy. Ethel Hill is the author of this story. The company plans to be in the mountain section about four weeks.

Cast for the first Geraldine Farrar subject now being filmed at Goldwyn Culver City studio in addition to her husband Lou Tellegen, will include a number of exceptionally well known film players, the list announced are Lawson Butt, Naomi Childers, Lydia Titus, Arthus Carew, Alec B. Francis, May Giraci, Frances Marian, Mlle. Dione, Hazel Brennon and E. J. Connolly, who plays with Goldwyn through the courtesy of Metro Film Corporation. Director Frank Lloyd has made the initial scenes on this film titled "Blind Youth."

The Madge Kennedy company, under the direction of Clarence G. Badger, has returned from a week spent in the vicinity of Bear Valley, where a number of melodramatic situations were filmed. These included riding bucking horses, sensational climbs in the Sierra Mountains above the snow line, and visits into mine shafts from which the Star was removed by means of a rope. Lieut. Burnell Manly, an American Ace, is playing an important part in this Goldwyn production, he took part in the Chateau Thierry and Champagne, and second Marne battle and other engagements.

JUNE 7, 1919 NEWS MORE NEWS

Had a shower.

Fred Stone is coming West.

Ruth Roland is in New York.

Abe Stearn is in town from New York.

Gerty Selby is back from New York.

Vera Lewis gave a Lilac Tea the other day.

May Allison had a letter from Japan this week.

Jack White is going to direct for Henry Lehrmann.

Johnny Nickolaus was seen at Jack Doyle's square-circle emporium on a Tuesday night.

The Vivian Martin Company has found Arrowhead a convenient location.

Jack Curtis finished the picture this week with Fox so he could get a shave.

Henry Otto came out of his seclusion in Hollywood and took lunch in Los Angeles this week.

Rose Mullaney has found a desirable bungalow and has settled permanently in our quiet city.

Big Mitch Lewis has gone to Lake Memet, where he thinks he can find mountains that he cannot see over.

Frank Kennan is smiles all the time, for his son-in-law, Major Frank Anderson Sloan, is back in the U. S. A.

Dave Smith's slogan is "A Little bit of Love in every scene" and he insists that this Love shall be capitalized.

Clarence G. Badger contends that the old fashioned director who doesn't wear puttees, can have the respect of his company.

Mickey Neilan is to have a New York representative in the person of Lucita Squiers, we hope Broadway will be nice to Lucita.

Paul Powell bought a new fishing outfit and went to Bear Lake to make exteriors for "Devils Have Their Friends."

Dave Hartford claims to have his voice in good training for grand opera, now that he has completed the Canadian snow picture which required directing a pack of malamutes.

Dusty Farnum is preparing for the next reform movement and is quitting the habit of smoking, as a substitute he chews gum.

Hank King is coming back to town from Santa Barbara to direct the Tom Ince's Southern Colonial establishment.

Molly McConnell is mascot for Rosco Arbuckle's West Coast League Vernon Tigers Team and wears a regulation uniform when the Tigers are home.

The other day Hookum learned of a grievous mistake it has been making for three years. The "R" of R. N. Bradbury does not stand for Ronald, but his name is Robert.

Tom Gibson comes through with the allegation that he composed, invented and promulgated a story titled "The Other Half" by himself, alone, and withstood the shock.

Carli Elinor has put on his civies and will shortly be preparing incidental music for our producers, before the war Elinor was with David Wark Griffith.

R. Cecil Smith threatens to discard his striped hat, for he learned the other day that checks are more fashionable, especially worn with a continuity neck tie.

Jess Willard has given the Colony the good-bye and after four weeks in pictures claims his intensive training for the fight on the Fourth will be a pleasant vacation.

A Press Agent sent this in our mail the other day and we want someone to explain just what it is all about: "It was and I said not or" (no hiding out is necessary, for no names are to be published.)

Six nationalities are represented in "The Red Lantern"—Russian star, French director, American scenario writer, Italian cameraman, Chinese story and an Irish film editor.

Pat Dowling made a foolish bet as to the number of holes in a waffle and therefore had to buy for the three musketeers of press-agentry—B. Zeidman, Clark Irine and himself, for it was proven there were no holes in the waffle, merely dents.

Hookum planned to get out a box score story this week on the Metro-Goldwyn game which ended 64, but there was not sufficient space in the tabulator form to indicate the number of errors, so the project was side-tracked.

Adam Hull Shirk is entitled to mention in these here columns, for be it known that he has stepped into the aristocracy class by the purchase of a Chalmers 6-30—he won't look at the other press agents now.

Ted Taylor, the Metro publicant, has been busy with the City Directory, therein discovering that Los Angeles had long expected the Metro producing aggregation. There is a Viola and a Dana Street, May and an Allison Avenue, a Hamilton Way and a Maxwell (Karger) Street. With this information before him he is preparing a petition to the City Council for them to build a Nazimova Boulevard, Lytell Lane, a Wehlen Way and an Engle Drive.

Remembrances of the bond drive in Los Angeles are recalled in Bert Lytell's latest story. When Charles Stearn, assistant treasurer of Metro Film Corporation, was out from New York, Bert Lytell acted as his guide and among other places they visited was the Ship Cafe at Venice. The following night Bert was headliner at U. S. S. Victory, a miniature transport in Pershing Square, Los Angeles, spoken of as "The Ship," and used as a stage during the bond drive. The next morning he said to Stearn, "It was a big night at the Ship—took in $55,000."

"Wonderful, wonderful," were the ejaculations of Stearn, "there isn't a cafe in New York that can do that business in one evening."

COULD YOU GUESS HE'S ENGLISH

A Los Angeles exchange has a slogan card which reads, "The recollection of quality will remain long after the price is forgotten," which was read by Albert Percy Michael Narlian, general council for the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade. A few minutes later he told a friend of the slogan and this is the way he repeated it, "It is very obvious the remembrance of quality will long outlast the recollection of the question of the lowness of the price."

PAGE DIOGENES!

The man whom the ancient sage sought with his lantern, has been found. He is a man who claims he does not know all about the motion picture business, although he daily rubs elbows and exchanges opinions regarding California weather with some of the best known men of the film industry, including the Editor of Hollywood Hookum. This remarkable man has had unlimited opportunity, for the ups and downs of his life have been many, just as though he had been an actor or a writer or a producer. He is retiring, but extremely courteous, and answers all questions, idiotic or otherwise, with a smile, regardless of whether the questioner may be a dimpled ingenue or rough faced character man. He accumulates a wealth of information concerning the film industry and doles it out with the greatest of liberality. The general business manager and directing genius of this publication, whose attention was called to this remarkable man by Richard, the Hatless, sought his service in collecting bits of wisdom about the filmsters, while he is daily meandering, and so we are to have bits of wisdom contributed every week by the hydraulic sage who makes round trip excursions every minute or two, to the top of the Wright and Callendar Building.

Tap! Tap! (orchestra, attention).

Ta-Da-a-a-a-a.

"Introducing William J. (meaning Jonah) Curley, supervising Director General of elevator service, an honest man."

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 16, 1919.

Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture and enjoyed by everyone. Average business three days."

BETTER 'OLE, THE (WORLD) SPECIAL CAST (MAR. 17)..MAR. 8
(Seven Parts)
"Novel and very entertaining; characterizations good."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture but seven reels too long for patrons. Disappointing to the gallery." "Decidedly different. Went over fine, especially with the better element. Well worth while playing. Good business against bad weather." "Very well liked to big business." "Opened up big, patrons pleased, indications are that it will continue big all week."
Consensus—"Pleasing picture, big puller."

BLACKIE'S REDEMPTION (METRO) BERT LYTELL (APR. 14) .... APR. 26
"Melodrama with power and pathos, and Bert Lytell."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment—"Very good crook play to average business." "Excellent preduction to big business."
Consensus—"Fine picture, good puller."

BLINDING TRAIL, THE (UNIVERSAL) MONROE SALISBURY (MAY 19) ....(Six Parts)........MAY 3
"Predominant element is suspense; a trifle uncheery."—M. P. News.

BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL (SELECT SPECIAL) SPECIAL CAST (APR. 20)........(Six Parts)........APR. 19
"Picture as good as its title; square deal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Five day run, all came. Big and little, blind and armless. I removed most the rudeness from the film. Picture pleased."

BOOMERANG, THE (PIONEER) HENRY B. WALTHALL (MAY 26) ....(Seven Parts)........MAY 17
"Star and competent players in capital versus labor picture."—M. P. News.

BRASS BUTTONS (AMERICAN) WM. RUSSELL (MAR. 30) MAR. 22

"FLASHBACKS" ON EARLIER RELEASES

" Common Clay " (Pathe)—" Fine picture and satisfied. Paid a good price for it but hot weather killed the business."

" Shoulder Arms " (First National)—" Great comedy. Broke all records."

" A Pair of Silk Stockings " (Select)—" Good comedy drama to average business."

" Kiss or Kill " (Universal)—" Good picture to good business."

" The Great Romance " (Metro)—" Fine picture. Rotten business. General slump."

" Common Cause " (Vitagraph)—" A great picture. One of the best war pictures to date but poor for the box office. Big first day. Slump following."

" The Spender " (Metro)—" Fair comedy drama and program offering to average business."

" Caught in the Act " (Fox)—" A crackerjack comedy drama."

" Infidelity " (Fox)—" Average business two days in first class down town house."

" The World to Live In " (Select)—" Average business all week to well pleased patrons. Story very good. Star excellent. Photography just fair and the sub titles were simply awful. In fact they looked so cheap that they detracted from the whole production. They were dark and shaky, undoubtedly from poor sprocket holes as well as poor work of camera in reproducing them. Otherwise it was a Class A picture throughout and it seems a shame to release such a high class picture titles in the shape these were in."

" Mickey " (State Rights—Mabel Normand)—" Ran this six days, clever advance advertising started off extra big with first performance and was up against 'Hart of Humanity' next door and killed same first day. All opposition got was our overflow. 'Mickey' broke all records here being the first picture to stand a full week's run and five performances daily. The last day I ran seven shows and turned hundreds away. Easiest picture to advertise and good enough to keep them coming. 28,000 persons saw the picture in my theatre."

" Cheating Cheaters " (Select)—" Good story, good punch, good work, average business."

" Pals First " (Metro)—" One of Lockwood's best."

" Experimental Marriage " (Select)—" Average business three days."

" Arizona " (Artcraft)—" Picture that pleased and drew well."

" Salome " (Fox)—" Fine picture but did not draw as well as expected."

" Greatest Thing In Life " (Artcraft)—" Drew well and pleased."

" Queen of the Sea " (Fox)—" Proved very good card for Saturday. Pretty picture."

DOMINATES THE FIELD

A NEW plan of production, distribution and exploitation of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures has been prepared by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and will be put into effect for the year beginning September 1st, 1919.

The plan is a radical departure from old methods and it guarantees the exhibitor a standard quality of production far beyond anything heretofore attempted in moving pictures.

It positively assures exhibitors of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures greater profits and greater prestige than ever before.

The entire plan will be discussed in the trade papers issued during the week of June 15th.

IT'S A WINNER

Harrison in the Motion Picture News, Says—

"The authors of "THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL" have done a fine job. So has Robt. Leonard the Director, and Miss Murray has done one of her finest bits, perfectly suited to her splendid talents. Fresh originality of plot, carries swiftly, and comedy situations generous."

Gordon Trent in the N. Y. Morn. Telegraph says

"THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL" is one of the finest pictures in which Mae Murray has appeared as a Universal Star. Titles add quaint atmospheric charm. "Notably well done throughout."

Wid Says

Mae Murray in "THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL" is seen at her very best. Whoever picked this story for Miss Murray certainly had the right idea. Suits her perfectly and enables her to display her rare talents."

POSTER advertising, part of the life-blood of every motion picture theatre's existence, is not a hap-hazard business.

¶ The demand for good locations is bigger than ever before in the history of advertising.

¶ Exhibitors should be warned against their inability to secure adequate and serviceable space. There is real danger of good locations being taken up by national advertising.

¶ It is therefore suggested that exhibitors look to their bill-posting program at once and, if possible, arrange for their locations by yearly contract. It is only thus that the best locations may be kept free for the exhibitor's use through the year.

¶ It is a matter that is worth the immediate attention of every wide-awake exhibitor.

¶ Take it up with your local bill-poster. He's the man who can tell you all about it.

My dear Mr. Goldwyn:-

Will you be good enough to advise me at your earliest convenience what will be your policy of distribution of your pictures for next season?

Mr. Jules Mastbaum,
Stanley Company,
Philadelphia, Pa.

My dear Mr. Mastbaum:-

Regret that I cannot meet you in Philadelphia this week. I am held here concluding details of the very subject of which you write.

Frankly, as long ago as last December we saw this coming. We foresaw then the questions that you and hundreds of exhibitors are now asking. We knew that this fall would bring vast changes in the industry which no company wishing to hold leadership could afford to ignore. And we backed our belief by preparing half a year in advance.

Have therefore spent four of the past five months on the Coast cooperating with our production forces in the task of creating, far in advance of release, the powerful pictures needed to meet the new demands.

Since my return to New York, we have been going over the distributing proposition with a fine-tooth comb. Aided by the presence and advice of our branch managers, we are working out a sales and exploitation plan flexible enough to meet the manifold needs and conditions of the exhibitors of America.

Naturally, no exhibitor can make his bookings safely until he learns just what our policy is to be. We expect to issue a definite and concrete announcement the first week of July, and I shall then be very glad to run over to Philadelphia and go over the whole proposition personally with you.

Very cordially yours,

Samuel Goldwyn

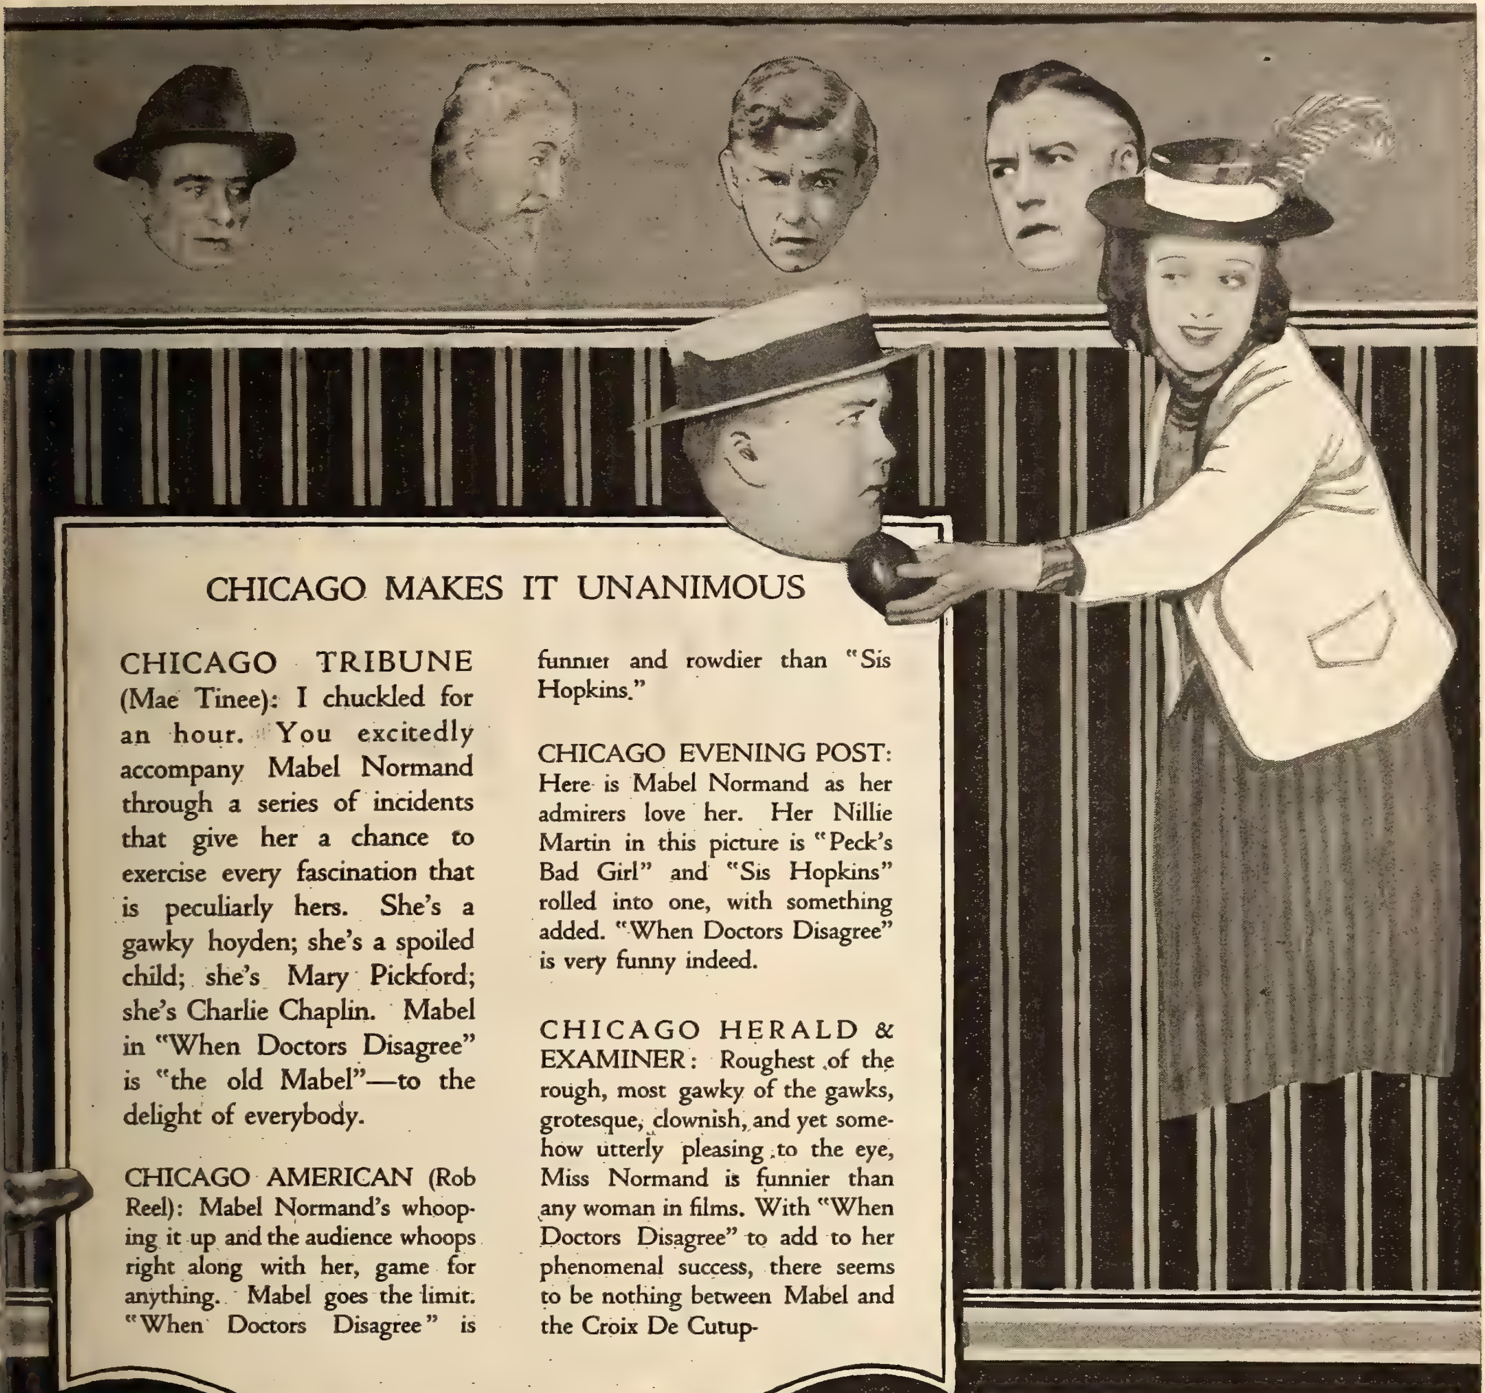
MABEL NORMAND



CHICAGO MAKES IT UNANIMOUS

CHICAGO TRIBUNE (Mae Tinee): I chuckled for an hour. You excitedly accompany Mabel Normand through a series of incidents that give her a chance to exercise every fascination that is peculiarly hers. She's a gawky hoyden; she's a spoiled child; she's Mary Pickford; she's Charlie Chaplin. Mabel in "When Doctors Disagree" is "the old Mabel"—to the delight of everybody.

CHICAGO AMERICAN (Rob Reel): Mabel Normand's whooping it up and the audience whoops right along with her, game for anything. Mabel goes the limit. "When Doctors Disagree" is funnier and rowdier than "Sis Hopkins."

CHICAGO EVENING POST: Here is Mabel Normand as her admirers love her. Her Nillie Martin in this picture is "Peck's Bad Girl" and "Sis Hopkins" rolled into one, with something added. "When Doctors Disagree" is very funny indeed.

CHICAGO HERALD & EXAMINER: Roughest of the rough, most gawky of the gawks, grotesque, clownish, and yet somehow utterly pleasing to the eye, Miss Normand is funnier than any woman in films. With "When Doctors Disagree" to add to her phenomenal success, there seems to be nothing between Mabel and the Croix De Cutup-

Give her dog a run—doggonit!
The train sailed merrily away
Without Miss Madgie on it.

And there she was right out in the middle of the desert and everything with nothing but her dog and her fur cape to keep her company."

That's the way Mae Tinee, the none-too-susceptible critic of the Chicago Tribune, felt about "Leave It to Susan." It drove her to poetry.

And then she continued:

"This is a darling of a picture—an interesting, cleverly told, human story. The whole effect is to send you forth purring. Nobody rubs you the wrong way."

That is the verdict wherever Madge Kennedy has been shown in "Leave It to Susan."

It is another link in that long, strong chain of successes that binds Madge Kennedy to the affections of millions of admirers.

"Murder Is A Crime, But I Won't Commit Any More Murders After September."

While they use different words, this is what is being said to you, the Exhibitor, by certain producer-distributors who announce that for their coming season they will abandon program or star series and sell pictures singly on merit.

Their "new season" means September.

If they are going to change in September, why don't you, the Exhibitor, make them change now? The summer months are the ones in which you can least afford to be tied up to a program of unknown and uneven quantities.

If you should clean your slate now, if you should cancel out all the doubtful and provably poor series you have been buying, there is not one producer-distributor who would threaten you with any form of punishment.

The days of threats are ended in the motion picture industry.

W. W. Hodkinson has forced a revolution in the ranks of the producer-distributors by selling all pictures singly on the basis of individual merit. In less than two months six companies have followed his lead.

We advise you, for the benefit of your theatre and yourself, to kick out whatever deadwood stars and productions you still have and book pictures on merit and value. We are not selfish in this, for we advise you to book many of the other powerful pictures available in the open market.

Why should you "go along" till September?

HODKINSON

definitely foresees the crafty changes being shaped in the market.

definitely tells you that many of these changes are not for the benefit of you, the Exhibitor.

It reveals how the love of a woman for her child can swing her back from the abyss.

To-night - When Your Show is Over

After the last of your people have gone—

And the lights are dimmed and the music stilled—

And the applause and laughter echo only in the memory—

Go into your darkened house.

Alone there, try to conjure up the Spirit of the Films;

Try to bring out of the walls that have so often resounded the joyous acclaim of your people

The real essence of the motion picture's appeal.

Try to read into the heart of hearts of your audiences.

And though the age of miracles is past, there will rise out of the dusk and shadows of your house

A Vision—now radiant as it reflects the exquisite charm of Mary Pickford,

Again, rollicking in joyous abandon with the elfish mirth of Charlie Chaplin,

Then whirling in youth's love-of-life as Douglas Fairbanks smiles back at you,

And now, stilled for a moment, as it feels the soul-searching spell of the master, Griffith.

This is the Spirit of the Films—the echo in the hearts of your people—the very breath-of-life of your theatre.

Guarding Your Greatest Asset

Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith are your greatest asset.

The mere announcement of their films brings the multitude to your doors.

They are the heart and soul and life-blood of the motion picture's appeal.

These master artists, realizing that they must have absolute freedom in order that they may keep faith with Exhibitors, and through them, with the millions of lovers of the screen,

Will produce independently, giving their utmost in each of their pictures.

These pictures – your guarantee of continued prosperity – will in turn be rented to you on the same free and independent basis.

Single pictures only will be booked. The unjust program and star series methods of rental have been discarded

Thus, your greatest business asset is safeguarded—assured to you, picture for picture, so that each production will earn for you its full measure of profits.

TO THE TRADE:

In the selection of the above insignia as my trade-mark I have been governed by a desire to make it mean something more than merely the necessary stamp for commercial protection.

I want this trade-mark to represent the collective signature of myself and organization as affixed to a guarantee. A guarantee that the production so marked has attained or surpassed the standard set by "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Stella Maris," "M'Liss," "The Unpardonable Sin," and "Daddy Long Legs."

In the past it has been the custom of producing organizations to carelessly and indiscriminately place their trade-mark on productions whether good, bad, or indifferent. Such practice has caused the average trade-mark to mean nothing to the exhibitor or public insofar as quality is concerned. This latter condition is the very thing I want to avoid and in order to establish and conserve the integrity of the above trade-mark it will be my policy not to release any production falling below the aforementioned standard.

HAYAKAWA

"IN A CLASS BY HIMSELF AS A SCREEN STAR"

HELEN POLLOCK IN MORNING TELEGRAPH
MAY 25 1919

HIS BIRTHRIGHT

"From the story of J. W. Riley has been woven a scenario that gives Sessue Hayakawa such opportunity for the display of his undoubted histrionic ability as to leave no room for conjecture. Every phase of the picture seems to melt into his make-up so that he is truly the exemplification of the part himself.

"The direction of William Worthington seems to leave nothing to be desired in this respect, and the photography in many instances is little short of marvelous, and shows the great possibilities of the camera when properly handled."

—Motion Picture News

A HEART IN PAWN

"A photoplay designed chiefly for the entertainment of the adult, thinking audience, strong in the best sense of that abused word, interesting and realistic, the most careful exhibitor may feel perfectly safe in promising 'the best picture that Hayakawa ever made.'

"Sessue Hayakawa, at all times an actor of exceptional ability, has the advantage of a story that rises head and shoulders above the average.

—Exhibitor's Herald

SESSUE HAYAKAWA'S

HAVE ESTABLISHED AN PICTURES OF HIGH

THE COURAGEOUS COWARD

"To this young artist (Hayakawa) the much abused term "artist" may be applied in all sincerity. Never does he disappoint his audience, for intelligence and distinction mark his every performance. So true is this that it is surprising that no manager of the spoken drama has as yet shown himself astute enough to secure the Japanese actor for the legitimate stage. His undoubted following is a sufficient guarantee of public interest to warrant a venture of this kind."

—Morning Telegraph

BONDS OF HONOR

By [illegible] WHIPPLE

"Every foot of the picture radiates with Mr. Hayakawa's sincerity and speaks aloud of his determination to produce pictures of merit and the kind that appeals to the better element. If you are a believer in good pictures you should back these efforts."

"I have seen every one of Mr. Hayakawa's pictures, but I cannot seem to recall one that is more pleasing, more interesting, or more entertaining. Some people will even rave over it."

Motion Picture News

THE TEMPLE OF DUSK

"'The Temple of Dusk' is exceptionally good from all standpoints. The scenes in Japan are exquisite with the Japanese gardens, wisteria bowers, tea houses, geisha girls, and cunning Japanese children.

"Here is not the calm, slow moving stoical Japanese, but an emotional actor with the tears streaming down his cheeks. As Akira Hayakawa plays upon the heartstrings and there will be few dry eyes in the audience."

Exhibitor's Trade Review

SIX SUCCESSES

UNEQUALLED RECORD FOR STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE

HIS DEBT

"The leading figure who dominates one's interest is admirably portrayed by Sessue Hayakawa. His repressed methods of acting hold one completely and the role fits him no less than he fits the role.

The atmosphere pervading the picture is full of charm. The oriental gambling house scenes are massive and in fine taste, while the views of the home of Moriyama suggest all that make incense and idols so fascinating to us. The photography and lighting effects are noticeably fine."

WITH every picture in which he has appeared as a Robertson-Cole star acclaimed by the press, public, and exhibitor in superlative terms of praise for their dramatic and artistic quality, Hayakawa has created an individual following in four thousand theatres in the United States. Not a single one of his new series has fallen below his exceptionally high standard and on this record of consistency, one never before equalled in six consecutive star pictures, exhibitors have achieved an element of continued, steady prosperity.

To this unique record he adds the distinction of being alone in his chosen sphere, the interpretation of those parts which only an Oriental can successfully portray for an audience of the Western World. Sensational or unpleasant subjects are always avoided and Hayakawa carries with him the full support of those who love the mystery and beauty of the Oriental World as well as the superb finish of a great actor.

His productions are supreme achievements from the Box Office standpoint as well as dramatically and artistically. From the first his films have been phenomenal financial hits and each picture brought additional thousands to the ticket windows of the theatres.

Box Office receipts represent the mercury in the thermometer of public opinion and when they go steadily up and up it is the surest indication of the popularity of the star and his productions. Hayakawa represents an unbroken series of successes.

Gentlemen:-

Some time ago when I ran HOOP LA I asked that you please furnish me with enough extra seats to a ccomodate the crowd on the next special you sent me. Yesterday I ran THE CANNIBALS OF THE SOUTH SEAS but failed to find the extra seats as I had requested. During the three years I have been here this is one of the few pictures that I have hung the S R O sign up in the afternoon and left it hanging until we closed for the night.

Patronage generally falls off during the supper hour but on this picture it failed and as a result some of us did not get anything to eat until we closed for the night. With very best of wishes, I remain

presents
HARRY T. MOREY in
"BEAUTY PROOF"
By James Oliver Curwood Directed by Paul Scardon
A VITAGRAPH FEATURE

A Powerful Drama of the Snow Country

Warm?

How would you enjoy a cool breath from the snow country?

Then see Harry T. Morey's newest feature, "Beauty Proof," a rugged drama of the great Northwest, virile, throbbing, powerful. It's a tale of real men—a veritable cross-section of Life in the big snow country, with its blinding blizzards, its wooded hills and frozen streams.

When James Oliver Curwood first wrote the story under the title of "Philip Steele" for The Red Book, he must have had Harry Morey in mind when he created the character of "Corporal Steele of the Northwest Mounted," fair and true as man can be, yet grim in a fight, be it with fist or gun, and sure to bring back his man though he had fled ever so fast and hard and far over the trackless wastes of snow country. And absolutely "beauty-proof" —indifferent to the most appealing of women if they ran foul of the law which he had sworn to uphold. There was a reason for his attitude—a reason that dated back to the years before he had joined out with the Royal Mounted, when a man had wrecked his home and embittered his life.

It is Corporal Steele, accordingly, who is detailed to bring in a man named Thorpe —not because Thorpe is a dangerous character, but because the fugitive's sister, Carol, is noted for her beauty and her way with men. And Carol's determination to keep her brother free from the clutches of the law has been the downfall of more than one trooper sent out to "get" Thorpe.

Corporal Steele arrives in the camp, meeting the girl for the first time in the dance-hall restaurant. He proves impervious to her wiles, but the girl outwits him. Two of her half-breed retainers knock him insensible, and he is placed in a long box, the cover is nailed on, and he is taken by dog sledge to the cabin of Hodge, the boss of a construction camp. Steele, from the box, overhears an altercation between Hodge and the girl, and finds that the root of Thorpe's law-breaking had been Hodge's attempted attacks upon Thorpe's sister. He then realizes the motive of the girl's queer attempt to kidnap him—that he may hear the truth and hear it from the lips of Hodge, who believes that he has no audience except the girl in the lonely cabin. Hodge again attacks the girl, Steele breaking out of the box just as the girl shoots Hodge in defence of her honor. And then Steele learns that Hodge is the very man who had wrecked his own home, back in the misty past. Hodge was the man who had brought bitterness into his life.

The dramatic scenes that follow make "Beauty Proof" one of the very strongest plays in which this virile and popular star has ever appeared. The recovery of Hodge —his escape—Steele's grim vow to bring him to justice—the kidnaping of the girl by Hodge—the mad chase by dog sledge over many miles of the silent snow country— the fight—the decidedly novel love interest all follow in a big crashing crescendo. Paul Scardon scored heavily in the direction of "Beauty Proof," and Betty Blythe, George Majeroni, Denton Vane and Robert Gaillard are ideally cast in parts that are real.

And through it all the weird magic of the snow country—great, silent, impressive. You will call "Beauty Proof" a 100 per cent. feature. And it is.

Advt.

SNOW ON YOUR SCREEN

In exploiting this feature, remember that it's a great snow picture—great stuff for this particular period. Bear this in mind when arranging the display for your lobby. The paper, slide and lobby display cards bring out the snow stuff most effectively.

James Oliver Curwood knows the great Northwest better than any living author. Be sure to bring out his name in all of your advertising matter. Your patrons know him. Mention the supporting cast, too. It's a strong one.

OLIVER GOLDSMITH once observed that language is an instrument for concealing THOUGHT.

THE MACMANUS CORPORATION believed in it as an instrument for concealing Action.

You wondered why the MacManus Corporation half concealed and half revealed in Announcements the stupendous work undertaken to produce the most pregnant story of America's task in France and the miraculous deliverance in the world's greatest travail through and by American strength, wit, and unmeasured valor, of the liberty loving nations of the world for EQUAL OPPORTUNITY and ECONOMIC EQUALITY.

The Lost Battalion

Finally accomplished by the heroic stand made in the impregnable forest of the Argonne by The Lost Battalion, under the valiant leadership of Lt. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey, and Division Command of Major General Robert Alexander.

Many of the brave, intrepid, unconquerable men who survived ceaseless artillery fire, withering blast from machine guns, and hunger, and thirst, for six days and nights, have re-enacted this, the most glorious page of the WAR'S HEROISM just to let America see how and at what cost the end of the terrible conflict was brought about.

Nowhere in France is a country so stark, so grim and so terrible as where The Lost Battalion fought.

And now that it has been successfully reproduced by the men and officers who did the actual fighting, there is no hesitancy on the part of the MacManus Corporation to HONORABLY PROCLAIM the GREATEST PICTURE of the hour, The Lost Battalion.

The Lost Battalion

The supreme effort of the bravest men that ever honored an army. The painstaking accomplishment of the foremost experts of the Moving Picture Industry, and the artistic co-operation of stellar performers, whose ABILITY and POPULARITY is unquestioned on the screen.

In the Super English of our American language no sentence can be written or spoken that can describe adequately, the compelling power, magnetic quality, photographic beauty, thrilling action, constantly recurring surprises and an overwhelming love that is born in the blood-red heat of the Melting Pot.

THE LOST BATTALION is the prologue of true justice and brotherhood, the enthroning of America as the noblest nation on earth.

"What Is A Mexican?"

George D. Wright's "Mexico Today"

Four years of war has created a large number of new theatre patrons who look for their newspaper material on the screen. This new Mexican subject is timely, interesting and entertaining.

"Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement"

A close-up of D. W. Griffith, with "shots" of "The Ride of the Clansmen" and "The Feast of Belshazzar"—together with half-a-dozen other intimate scenes of celebrated stars.

"The Passing of the Crow"

"The Eagle and the Fawn"

Two novel subjects—"quite the best pictures of our American Indian that have been seen"—fascinating Indian characters, unique "stunts," in addition to unusual scenic value.

"The Wolf of the Tetons"

Robert C. Bruce American Scenic

Proclaimed the finest example of scenic-story without human characters. "The Little Grey Wolf" and "The Great Dane Dog" as they lived together in the Jackson Hole country of Wyoming.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 24 June 14 1919

Here's a Problem

WE are in receipt of a letter from a Southern exhibitor that presents a real problem. And as is usual with an editor when he is stumped—we are hereby passing the problem on to our readers.

The exhibitor's letter follows:

"I have been using a certain program of very high grade pictures for the past two years. I use one picture each week and have lost money on them ever since I started. I have advertised them, placed them on different nights of the week and have tried in various ways to get my patrons interested in them. This seems an impossible task. Therefore I have decided to cancel them entirely, but find that the contract which I signed the first of 1919 is not the same as the one which this company had in 1918. The 1919 contract is non-cancellable. I have written the company asking them to cancel but they have refused. I could cancel and let them keep my deposit but am afraid of injuring my standing with the Board of Trade.

"As you can readily see I am in a very peculiar position. I do not know whether you will advise me or not, but would appreciate a suggestion other than to keep the program and advertise it more than the other pictures on my program. I have tried this but find that it is a losing proposition. This is not a sudden decision because I have tried them out thoroly."

What Would You Do?

WE have an idea that Motion Picture News readers can give as many different answers to this letter as there are surmises concerning "the age of Ann."

But if a few of our exhibitor friends give us their opinions there is no doubt that this Southern exhibitor can be aided—nor is there any uncertainty about the letters making most interesting reading. Should the exhibitors show our troubled reader too many ways out of his dilemma we will probably receive some snappy retorts from the exchange men.

The problem is a pressing one. Two questions are presented:

Should an exhibitor whose good faith is clearly shown in the tone of the above letter be penalized for many months to come? Or—

Is it a matter that leaves no room for argument? Is it simply a case of living up to a contract regardless of other considerations?

Let us hear your opinion.

What is the Answer?

THE same mail brings a sarcastic letter from another exhibitor who wants to know:

"What determines the cash value of a star? The number of times he or she changes from one distributor to another? Or do the distributors determine the rental value of a star merely by putting the price twenty per cent higher than the star's most recent picture?

"Of course the truth is that box office value is the only proper measure. But can box office value continue to be stretched and stretched and stretched? There are limits on the amount of money that can be brought in over the cash till."

Perhaps there is considerable truth in what our exhibitor friend says. But we are inclined to ask him—what is the limit? Some of the biggest theatre men in the country have told us that they are inclined to believe that there is no limit. Each step forward they take in advertising methods, each improvement in music and theatre construction open up new vistas.

"If production quality will keep step with the advances of theatre men in the next few years," we heard one man say, "we'll find that we never knew what the capacity of the box office was."

Room for Action Here

A DELIVERY wagon fire in Brooklyn the other day burned up film on the way to fifty-seven exhibitors. The theatre men lost their day's show—and in addition have to pay for all the film destroyed. New York's delivery companies take no responsibility on their shoulders.

Here surely is an opportunity for the National Association to tackle. Perhaps the Transportation Committee, already doing very effective work, can look into the film delivery problem in those cities where conditions are similar to New York's.

Exhibitor organizations should be able to work out a system that would give to their individual members some security when films are given in the care of delivery companies.

The present conditions are intolerable. After the film has passed over the exchange counter the exhibitor is responsible for it. But when he hands it to a delivery company that receives thousands of dollars every week from exhibitors he is trusting to luck alone.

Why Five?

(An Exhibitor Echoes the Query Put by William A. Johnston)

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Time was when the book agent was the worst pest in the world, but time has changed considerably. The worst pest in the world now, to my way of thinking, is not a man, it is an inanimate object, and there are many of them. I mean the rotten, unreliable line of worthless and popularly and wrongly called motion picture trade journals. I wish I could keep them from flooding in on me.

I am of the opinion that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is absolutely right in its trade journal advertising policy and I will welcome the time when other companies take the same stand and limit the advertising and exploitation of their films to five of the trade journals, or less.

On page 2794 of MOTION PICTURE NEWS for May 3 you ask: "Why five?"

And I repeat: Why five?

I talked this over with a number of exhibitors when I was in San Antonio several weeks ago and our unanimous conclusion was that five was more than ample. I don't know of any exhibitor today—and I know scores of them throughout this state, Arkansas and in Oklahoma—who subscribe to five motion picture trade journals. In fact, the average is two. I don't believe a real live motion picture theatre manager has time to read five journals. If he has time to pore through five journals, they ought to make him a copy reader or associate editor or something like that. Any time I find a theatre manager with more than five trade journals in active use, I'm going to take a picture of him and send it to the authorities of the state insane asylum. Frankly, I take two trade journals—the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and one other. And these two give me about all the material I can use and sometimes I don't even get enough time to read them as closely as I'd like to; but I always keep them on file. If there is a certain picture I want to present at the Crescent I frequently look over my files to see if there is any special exploitation suitable that has been tried and proved successful elsewhere.

If the least bit of good could be gained from sticking ads in every sort of publication, I would be in favor of it. To my way of thinking, the theatrical game, either the motion picture line or the legitimate stage, is dependent upon publicity for life. Without the proper publicity no one would know the name of Charlie Chaplin better than any other film star. The same is true of Mary Pickford or President Woodrow Wilson. But more than any other business in the world, the show business requires publicity or it can't live.

But the ad won't bring you a cent's worth of business if it is placed in a trade journal which isn't trusted. I can name you several trade publications which through some reason or other are apparently making money for their publishers and yet, I can tell the names of dozens of exhibitors who wouldn't believe a thing either in their ads or in their news and editorial comments.

There is no doubt in the mind of any sane exhibitor as to the vital need for trade journals. But I doubt if you would be able to find a single exhibitor who favored the continuation of the present harum-scarum way of scattering the ads in this book and that, not knowing, not thinking, not caring about what the results of the advertising will mean; simply going on the proposition that the exhibitor must pay for the feature regardless of what it costs and leaving the matter entirely up to the exhibitor to sell the picture to the public.

The sooner the other picture companies follow the lead of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, the better for all.

And it will be a wonderful day for the exhibitor when he can go down to work in the morning and not find his desk cluttered with a dozen "trade journals" all of which he would be willing to trade for a six-cent cigar if he didn't have to give too much of a bonus!

Sincerely yours,

H. C. PLATH,
Manager, Crescent Theatre, Temple, Texas.

Dealing in Personalities

Here's the last-minute bit of news: Harry Garson and Lewis J. Selznick have reached an agreement over the Clara Kimball Young matter and the case will not go to the courts. Selznick will release "The Better Wife," the Clara Kimball Young picture now completed. Garson will later announce distribution plans for the four big Clara Kimball Young spectacles to be made next year. "The Eyes of Youth" will be the first of these.

Our private Atlantic City sleuth reports that he saw the following fillum personalities on the Boardwalk over the last weekend: L. J. Selznick, Myron Selznick, Fred C. Quimby, and Bert Adler.

Word received from E. W. Hammons, vice-president of Educational Films Corporation, who is now abroad, advises that he will sail for these shores on the "Nieuw Amsterdam," leaving Rotterdam on June 9th.

Those Educational boys are mysterious about it but we have been tipped that Hammons has completed arrangements on the other side that will be of big interest to the short subject field.

Have you received your invitation to the dinner in honor of the trimumvirate—Sydney S. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly and Samuel I. Berman? Have you ordered your tickets? Don't wait till tomorrow—do it now. The dinner is to be the biggest social event in Filmland since President Wilson graced a picture banquet. And aside from the social angle it is important in the inspiraton it will give to real exhibitor organization throughout the country.

Messrs. Sanford and McHenry, formerly of Southwestern Art Dramas Corporation, are in the gay city looking for a few good buys. Wotcha got? Any territory within the three mile limit.

Before us there is a telegram from Willard Patterson, of the Atlanta Criterion: "Unpardonable Sin opened Criterion today breaking all house records. Hundreds turned away. Biggest attraction we have ever played." Couldn't sound any better if Charlie Schwerin wrote it.

L. C. Wheeler, of Bech, Van Sicklen and Co., left for Europe last Saturday.

B. S. Moss has moved his offices to the Broadway Theatre—everything under one roof now.

The general opinion of those who should know is that the proposal to legalize censorship in New York City is now on its way to interment. Which is as it should be. Both because New York doesn't need censorship so long as producers, exhibitors and license commissioner continue to cooperate as well as heretofore, and because the effect on the entire country of censorship in New York is something we'd rather not contemplate.

Herman Fichtenburg and Mrs. Fichtenburg are enjoying life at Hot Springs, Arkansas.

Earl Hammons and Jimmy Quirk sent us a picture postcard showing Windsor Castle. But the journey must have wiped off the "Cross marks our room" line.

Watch for Arthur Kane's announcement next week! (Free adv.)

We are importuned to let a waiting world know through this imperishable column that "Everybody's Business" has such a big theme that hundreds of newspapers have promised cooperation. The picture will be ready in two weeks.

Harry Musgrove, the popular Australian, has extended his stay in this country. Will probably be with us another month.

Visiting the Cannibals With the Martin Johnsons

Being a Complete "Log" of the Present Journey of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—To Be Carried Exclusively in MOTION PICTURE NEWS

MR. AND MRS. MARTIN JOHNSON, who have given exhibitors and fans of this country some of the most thrilling cannibal pictures ever secured, and whose product is to be released through Robertson-Cole, are off on another journey to the South Sea Islands in search of more thrills.

Beginning with this issue, MOTION PICTURE NEWS will carry a complete log of their adventures. Subsequent installments will appear in following issues.

The account as published here is as dictated by Mr. Johnson to a stenographer of Sydney, Australia.

"Good-bye, New York!"

"We got away from New York on May 24, 1919, to a big send-off, following a banquet luncheon at the Hotel Astor, and reached Chicago the next morning. In that city, following an audience with the interviewers, we were entertained until 6 o'clock in the evening, when we left for Kansas City, and from there to Chanute, Kas., to visit Osa's parents before leaving for the west. From Independence, to visit my parents we returned to Kansas City to catch the California limited.

"After cleaning up upon reaching Los Angeles on the morning of April 1, Mr. Semler, the Robertson Cole representative, brought around a car, and took us out to Hollywood, where we spent the afternoon in the Jesse Hampton Studios, and had a very pleasant afternoon with H. B. Warren, Bill Desmond, Mr. Hampton, and a lot more 'movie' people, and that evening had a very pleasant dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Bray.

"Next day, Mr. Semler and Mr. Boone were on hand early and we again motored out to Hollywood, where we spent one of the most pleasant forenoons of our lives with Charlie Chaplin, who is just about as interested in the South Seas as anyone I have ever seen, and until noon we forgot the rest of the world while being entertained by this clean-cut young fellow, who is really as interesting off the pictures as he is in them, and just before leaving he showed us over his studios, which looked more like a big country estate than anything else, and after making quite a good many pictures, we motored on and spent the afternoon with Douglas Fairbanks, where we argued for some considerable time regarding the locations of different islands. Here we made more pictures, and then stepped over to the studio where Sessue Hayakawa makes his pictures, and after a short talk and making a few more pictures, we went on to the studio where Olive Thomas was engaged in a new production, and held up work there for a short time.

"We went back to Los Angeles and stopped at Grauman's theatre, where I had been asked to give a short talk, and I got so interested in what I was saying and then Osie got interested in her talking, so that when we came off the stage, we found we had taken up 17 minutes of their valuable time, but my pictures have made such a big hit just here, and the audience knew us so well, that it was interesting to talk to them. That evening we appeared again at Grauman's.

"On the following day, we started early again for Hollywood and it was one studio after another. We met baby actors and old men actors, until I think we now have a speaking acquaintance with nearly all of them. We even had quite a long talk with David Griffith, who was serious enough to be a clergyman, and then we hurried back and at 5 o'clock took the Owl for San Francisco, arriving there the following morning, and went directly to the St. Francis Hotel, where Mrs. Jack London was waiting for us, and she remained as our guest for the next four days, while we were making preparations to leave for Australia.

"The next four days were busy ones, as it was necessary for me to buy a lot of equipment, that it was not feasible for me to get in New York, and I had to get a lot of permits of various kinds, and go through a lot of foolish red tape to get the vise on our passports, and we appeared at several different theatres where my pictures were running, and at 2:30 in the afternoon on April 8 we set sail on the Steamship 'Ventura' to the strains of Scottish bagpipes played by Harry Lauder's friends, who came down to bid him good bye, and then for five days, we steamed with a seasick passenger list to Honolulu, where another Scottish organization met Harry Lauder, and during the excitement Osie and I slipped ashore and grabbed the biggest touring car we could find, and started out to do 24 hours with the photographing, but we did not have a great deal of success, as it rained nearly all day. We had lunch at Moana Hotel, and then went back to the ship, but before doing so we stopped in and shook hands with Doctor Nakata, whom I found a little ragged, barefooted boy in Hilo, Hawaii, and was instrumental in getting him hired as cabin boy on the 'Snark,' and now he is Dr. Nakata, with a nice suite of offices, speaking perfect English, and one of the leading Japanese citizens of Honolulu.

Mrs. Martin Johnson, the Better Half of the Martin Johnson Family, Bound for the South Sea Islands

"On going aboard, I photographed the Kanaka Boys as they dived for coins, and here a very painful experience occurred. One of the boys, about 14 years of age, went overboard and never came up. Just before the steamer sailed they brought up his body, literally covered with soft shell crabs.

"Then for 8 days we sailed over a bright sunlit sea bound for Samoa. By this time the 300 odd passengers were getting well acquainted. We had deck sports every day, concerts nearly every night, and from morning until night the swimming tank was full of bathers. I could hardly keep Osie out of the water, for she seemed to want to be in all day long, and on the day we crossed the Equator, Neptune and his staff came aboard. Osie was Neptune's daughter, and everyone who had not crossed the line before was shaved and ducked in the swimming tank. Harry Lauder had crossed the line a great many times, but they shaved and ducked him because Neptune said while Harry Lauder had crossed the line before, that Sir Harry Lauder never had.

"On the eighth day we arrived in Pago Pago, Samoa, the most beautiful natural harbor in the world, and very much to the disgust of everyone aboard we found that quarantine regulations would not allow passengers to land, but I had anticipated this, and several days before, I had sent Governor Poyer a wireless telling him that I was coming, and bringing the moving pictures that I had made on my last trip there; that I would give him the film if they would have their picture machines set up in a perfectly dark place, so that I would have the enjoyment of showing the natives my own pictures, and I also told him that I would like to have him arrange some Seva-Seva dances for me. So when we docked, I was the only one allowed to land, although they fumigated me and made me wear a mask, and within an hour after we landed, I had my pictures ashore and at least 500 natives as well as the Governor and his staff and their wives were assembled in the theatre that had been built by the American sailors, and run by them as a picture show.

"There is no need of me trying to describe what took place when the natives saw themselves on the screen; they simply went mad, and I laughed until I was weak. They naturally remembered each other and yelled out the names of very native as they came on the screen, and as the pictures were exceptionally clear, you could almost see what they were thinking about, and after performance was over I think I could easily have been elected the biggest chief in American Samoa.

"Governor Poyer had sent for the head chief of all American Samoa, a great big massive native, who, outside of Nagapate, the chief of Big Numbers, had the most powerful face I had ever seen. This chief had instructed all the best Seva-Seva dances from all over the islands to come in, and then for several hours I photographed all the native dances, but unfortunately it rained most all day long, and I even made made some of the pictures while it was raining, but I am almost afraid that the pictures I made there will not be good, as the sun never came out once.

"And it is such a shame, because the dances were all dressed in their old time native tappa clothes, and had their dancing sticks and clubs.

"I had already made arrangements with Captain Dawson for him to leave me in Pago Pago while he steamed out the bay, while I stood on shore, and made a Moving Picture of him leaving. I had everything ready, and had selected a spot way at the end of the Governor's Jetty and just as the "Ventura" pulled out into the stream, it started to rain, and it rained like it can only rain in the tropics. It came down in buckets full. I was soaked through, my cameras were drenched. The Governor's launch was waiting for us, and drenched to the skin we ran out to the ship, and up the ladder about the wettest human beings I have ever seen, and then for several hours I had to polish and work on my cameras to keep them from being rusty.

"The next day we passed several steamers bound for America, and I sent a wireless to our old Friend Captain Trask, who passed us on the "Sonoma," and he wired back his greetings. And on the next morning on arising a beautiful waterspout came across our bows but was moving too fast for me to get a picture, and on this day we received a wireless from Honolulu saying that our cabin steward had died there of influenza. That night Harry Lauder gave a concert which netted him nearly £300 for the Harry Lauder Wounded Soldiers' Fund.

"We had aboard Captain E. R. Sterling, president and general manager of the Sterling Ship Company. He had a six-masted schooner on the way to Australia, and his 25-year-old son was the captain, and we were all in hopes that we would pass her so that I could get a moving picture, but she reached Sydney before we did.

"Captain Dawson was a very congenial old fellow, and he did all he could to help me with moving pictures, even going out of his way for some considerable distance in order that I could make moving pictures of several of the outlying islands in the Fiji group. We went so close to them that we could see and hear the surf beating on the rocks. I believe I made some excellent pictures on that day.

"The next few days I spent in going over my cameras to make certain that they were in good shape, and on the morning of April 29th, we steamed into Sydney Harbor, perhaps the most beautiful harbor of its kind in the world, although I always claim that Pago Pago is the most beautiful on account of the tropical environment, but Sydney is beautiful in a different way, as the shores on either side are covered with beautiful red top bungalows and some very fine homes all the way from Sydney Head into Circular Quay, a distance of seven miles, and the bay is made more interesting by the scores of little tugs and ferry boats that are always hurrying in that direction.

"We were met at the dock by our old friend E. H. Higgins with whom we lived when we were here before, and he gave us another cordial invitation to stay with him on this trip, and here we are planted at 70 Darling Point Road, where we must remain for five weeks as the little steamer for the New Hebrides left on the same day that we arrived, and now we must wait for her next trip.

"We have already seen most of our Sydney friends, and have run upon a few South Sea Islands friends also.

May 2, 1919."

Screen Patriotically to the Fore

Thanked Again for Its Efforts in Giving Publicity to Need of Offering Jobs to Our Returned Warriors

MAJOR WARREN BIGELOW, director of the Re-Employment Bureau, of New York, has issued a statement of appreciation for the aid being given by motion picture theatres and folk, to the finding of employment for discharged soldiers, sailors and marines. He says in part:

"The necessity for bringing a large volume of jobs into this Bureau is manifest from the fact that all the camps and discharge points around New York are sending men to 505 Pearl Street. In giving publicity to this movement, the screen in the Motion Picture theatres in Greater New York and vicinity, have been of great value. Their cooperation in showing slides and trailers is very much appreciated both by the War Department and the Re-Employment Bureau.

"Mr. Henry Cole of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is ably assisting this Bureau in placing slides and trailers and the Director desires to say that any courtesy shown him and cooperation given to him in this work, will be most gratefully appreciated and will certainly do a great deal toward helping the work along and bringing the job to the place where the soldier comes to find it.

Major Warren Bigelow, who issued statement eulogizing Motion Pictures

"The work done by the Motion Picture theatres throughout the War, in Liberty Loan Drives and other patriotic moves, has been of inestimable value. But we have got to finish the job by placing the soldiers back in civil life just as we took them out of it; and so, the patriotic work of the Motion Picture theatres is not over yet. It must go on until the boys are all back home and all have a job again."

Big Merger Involves $15,000,000

Stanley Corporation Is Formed Taking Over Many Picture Interests; No Intention to Enter Producing Field

THE birth of a $15,000,000 corporation, in which many of the big financial, theatrical and motion picture interests in the East are consolidated, was announced during the week by Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, Philadelphia.

The new corporation is the Stanley Company, and the consolidation of the several interests includes the taking over of motion picture and vaudeville theatres and circuits, involving a sum reaching into the millions in real estate alone.

Incorporation is under the laws of Delaware, and the amusement rights granted are wide. Those interested assert that the field of operation of the new concern will not be limited to Philadelphia and adjacent territory, but will include the whole United States and possibly foreign countries.

Officers and directors are men prominent in every line of endeavor. The officers are: President, Jules E. Mastbaum; vice-presidents, J. McGuirk, A. R. Boyd; treasurer, L. O. Beggs; assistant treasurer, L. Sablosky; secretary, Morris Wold, and chairman of the Board of Directors, A. Sablosky.

There are many interests involved in the merging of so many enterprises, and those that are best known are the Stanley Booking Company with all of its many theatres; the Central Market Street Company, operating a chair of motion picture theatres on Market street; the Sablosky and McGuirk enterprises, the Alexander R. Boyd enterprises and the Stanley Booking Corporation.

Theatres in New York, Atlantic City, Camden, Reading and other cities are also in the merger.

Following the announcement of the merger Mr. Mastbaum stated ground would be soon broken for the new Stanley Theatre, Nineteenth and Market streets, Philadelphia, which will cost $2,000,000.

Asked if the new corporation intended to enter the production field, Mr. Mastbaum returned a most emphatic "no."

Soldiers Demand Best of Pictures, Says Croy

Homer Croy, who has been in France for almost ten months, has returned. He was connected with the Community Motion Picture Bureau, which organization had in hand the showing of motion pictures to the soldiers. Mr. Croy is known as the author of the book, "How Motion Pictures Are Made."

"We often had stronger programs over there than you have here on Broadway," says Mr. Croy. "I remember one night at the Cirque de Paris we had on Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" and Mary Pickford in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" in addition to a two-reel news weekly. That was what the boys were accustomed to over there.

National Ass'n Seeks to Band Exchangemen

The exchange manager has come in for his share of attention from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, of that body, is in Chicago assisting in the formation of a National Association of F.I.L.M. clubs as an integral part of the Association.

This is looked upon as a most constructive step, as the clubs will it is believed, prove a great adjunct to the Association and a big boom to the industry.

At the Chicago meeting, Mr. F. C. Quimby, of Pathe; Mr. C. C. Pettijohn, of Exhibitors Mutual, and Secretary Elliott were appointed a committee to confer with the New York executives for the purpose of perfecting arrangements for a big national convention of exchange managers to be held during the summer.

Applications have already been secured from independent exchanges who are thoroughly aroused over the necessity of acting in unison.

Representatives of the exchange clubs in Denver, Indianapolis and Milwaukee journeyed to Chicago for the meeting.

City Boards of Exchange Managers Meet

A convention of members of the boards of exchange managers which are affiliated with local boards of trades will be held in Chicago on the 14th and 15th of June. A decision to this effect was made at a recent meeting of the Board of Exchange Managers' Association of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce.

The object of the convention is to make the initial steps towards establishing a national association of exchange managers.

Many of the larger film centres have signified their intention of being present at the convention in Chicago, among them being Minneapolis, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati.

At the same meeting of the Board of Exchange managers also held election of officers. C. A. Thompson, local World Film manager, was elected president; E. J. Smith, Universal manager, vice-president; J. R. Johnson, Vitagraph, treasurer, and Sherman Manchester, secretary.

Presenting Harry Levey, Busy General Manager of Universal's Industrial Dept.

Convention Details Are Now Completed

National Secretary Frank Rembusch and Chairman of the Convention Committee Hector Pasmezoglu are in St. Louis and have completed all arrangements for the Annual convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, to be held June 25 and 26, in the Missouri city.

The Convention Committee asks that all exhibitors send in their reservations just as soon as possible. An exhibitor from every city in the United States of any importance is expected. Many prominent men in the industry have promised to attend and numerous requests have been made to the National Committee by various persons to address the meeting.

The Convention will be devoted conclusively to the problems within and without the industry as they affect the exhibitor. Any one having any matter of any special importance to exhibitors will be welcome to present same.

New Crandall House Now Building at Capitol

The York Theater, eighth link in the chain of photoplay houses operating in Washington, D. C., by Harry M. Crandall, is now in course of construction on Georgia avenue, N. W., occupying the entire area between Princeton and Quebec streets, in a residential section of the city heretofore devoid of a picture theatre of the first class.

The newest of the Crandall theatres will have a frontage of 135 feet on Georgia avenue, and a depth of 72½ feet on both Princeton and Quebec streets. It will have a seating capacity of 1,000 on one floor, no proviison having been made for a balcony. The total floor area will be 10,000 square feet, and the cost of the building will be $100,000.

The opening date is set about October 15. The completion of the theater will give Mr. Crandall three high class houses in the northwestern residential section.

Cleveland M.P.E.L. Reorganized

Firmer Business Basis Established; Advisory Committee to Assist Officers; Dues Are Raised to $50 Per Year

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland has been completely reorganized, and under the new constitution and by-laws, which were accepted by the body at a meeting last Tuesday, will be henceforth known as the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association.

The change is not alone in name. It begins there, and goes right through to the end. All of the old traditions of the League which have been in practice for the past seven years have been completely upset. No longer will the organization be informal in its manner of doing business.

Heretofore, the exhibitors have been running in a more or less happy-go-lucky way, meeting every Tuesday, talking over the local conditions, suggesting remedies, where remedies were needed, and in the main relying on the officers of the League to carry them out.

Under the new regime, this no longer exists. The officers, consisting of president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, now have the assistance and support of an executive board, consisting of seven members, three of whom are elected for three years; two, for two years, and the remaining two, for a period of one year. These members will meet with the officers of the organization twice a month, to discuss the affairs of the association. A general meeting will be held once a month, on the first Tuesday of the month, at which time matters of importance will be brought up for the body to take action on.

Henry H. Lustig was elected president of the new organization; C. W. Masterman, manager of the Madison theatre, vice-president; Sam Bullock, secretary, and Adolph Maher, treasurer. The executive board consists of M. Horwitz, W. J. Slimm, Walter Horsey, who will serve in their capacity for a period of three years; Dave Schumann and George Heinbach, elected for a term of two years, and Max Schachtel and Joseph Grossman, who will serve for one year.

The most radical change in the constitution of the exhibitors organization relates to membership dues. These have been raised to $50 annually. A proposition is now under discussion, whereby these annual dues shall be covered by screen advertisements. Sixty local houses have already signed their willingness to run a short advertising slide at every performance for one year, in lieu of dues, said sum to be paid into the organization fund by the advertising company. However, this is not compulsory.

Film Bills Legislative Grist in Pa.

Four Bills Affect Picture Industry in Penna.; May Substitute Amusement Commissioner for Censor

IMPORTANT changes in the status of four bills of intimate bearing on the motion picture industry took place in the week just closed in the Pennsylvania Legislature.

The Soffel bill, backed by independent exhibits headed by Fred Herrington of Pittsburgh, requiring film exchanges to deposit with the state board of censors sums equal to the amount of collateral the exchanges require of exhibitors who enter into long term contracts for films, passed the House finally, and is now before the Senate.

It is said to be the aim of the backers of this measure to create a condition which would deprive the exchanges of any financial benefit from the use of the money deposited in advance on films by the contracting exhibitors, hoping that under such an arrangement the distributors would cease to require the exhibitors to make the advance payments. The exhibitors hold, in brief, that under the present arrangement they must pay over considerable sums of money, which are tied up for long periods, during which the exchanges can get the benefit of the interest on the exhibitors' money.

The Flynn bill doubling the amount of the fees charged by the State Board of Censors for examining films, by making the charge $2 a thousand feet instead of $1 a thousand, as now, also passed the House finally and is now in the hands of the Senate.

The bill of Senator Leiby, of Perry County, prohibiting children between eight and fourteen years old from attending motion picture shows during school hours unless accompanied by parent or guardian or unless they have permits from their teachers, has passed the Senate and has been advanced in the House to the second reading calendar.

The Bucher bill which would substitute a commissioner of amusements for the present censorship board, such commissioner to license motion pictures, was reported out of the Judiciary General Committee of the House and passed first reading on May 28.

Court Refuses to Act; C. K. Young Film Shows

A late dispatch from California brings word that Judge Oscar Tippet of the Federal Court, Los Angeles, has refused to grant an injunction petitioned by Select Pictures against the Kinema Theater, to prevent the showing of "The Better Wife," Clara Kimball Young's first Independent subject. The premier was given June 1.

Harry Garson and Miss Young were named as defendants. The court held that there had been breach of a personal contract, and the only recourse of the plaintiffs was a suit for damages.

Leininger Has Several Things to Get Off His Mind in This Issue

I have been reading the pro and cons about renting, distributing and one thing and another and no one has said any thing about this day light business. Why not make a world-wide protest; it is the thing that is hurting most at present. I know last year it hurt me several hundred dollars. Why not get after everybody to turn the clocks back to the sane and sensible time? Cleveland has done it, why not all others?

Mr. Glenn was right about the posters; half the posters we get are no good at all. All posters should have one or two cuts of the picture on them, then they would be of some good.

If the producer wants to spend so much money in advertising why not do like the patent medicine companies or the shredded wheat companies or National Biscuit Company or Armour Company or the Hinze Pickle Company? They advertise where people see it: on barns, fences on billboards; any where the general public see it.

Is there not something wrong too, when some people like Hart can buy $32,000 worth of bonds and Griffith can buy $60,000 worth? I suppose Mary Pickford got about a $1,000,000 worth. Tell me how many exhibitors bought that many. I have not heard of any as yet. If there is one I would like to get his name and address for I want to ask him how he did it, for I certainly would like to know.

I see so much about the publicity man. Who are they? I would like to hear what good they ever did any body. It seems they have so many useless things connected with the business that never did anybody any good or I never heard of it if they are any good. Why keep it a secret? Let the exhibitor hear about it and print their help in the paper.

The open booking is the thing, the way it looks now. Then there will be a lot of N. G. laying on the shelf and the producer will be a little more careful and not make so many would-be. I have run and have pictures that was a waste of time to look at. Stars are a great thing but I have seen some I thought was away out of their course and almost invisible. What is a star in a punk story? Give us a star story with a good all-round company and it will get the people. There is too much money and not enough time spent with the brilliant celebrities. Let them work for their millions like the poor devil does that is the backbone of the business, as they are always talking about. That makes me laugh when people say them things for they are always trying to break our backs. It is a wonder some people do not choke trying to push out such big chunks of wisdom.

Give us good pictures, good service, good posters at the right price and all work together and I don't think anybody will have any kick coming and we will all be happy and sing loud in the chorus and everybody shout amen.

Yours truly,
C. E. LEININGER,
Owner and Manager,

McElravy Points Out Differences Between Then and Now

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Anyone who has been in the show business as I have been and who remembers the days when the theatres engaged in wild-cat booking can appreciate fully the points J. D. Williams of First National Exhibitors' Circuit makes in his statement on "The Single Picture Policy" in the last issue of Motion Picture News.

In the old days of the theatres, the days which are not so very distant, but which seem like old times when we reflect that there was not then a motion picture theatre in existence, the managers of the houses throughout the country used to go to New York in the summer and book their attractions for the coming season. They would meet the producers in the Rialto districts and would try to book a list of attractions that would give them a profitable season.

They would book a famous star for a certain date; they would secure a favorite drama, a play that had just made a hit in New York and hadn't been out and with as many big attractions of this calibre as they could muster they would undertake to stretch out a season that would do credit to their houses.

The trouble was, they couldn't depend on anything. The theatrical business at that time was in a state of confusion, deplorably lacking in system. The famous star would change his routing, or perhaps the manager would gnash his teeth and tear his hair to find that he had jumped to a rival house and that his contract wasn't strong enough to hold him.

We can remember the great change when the big booking systems came into being. The manager could then plan his system and feel certain that his shows would come in just as promised. The element of uncertainty, that biggest bugbear of any business, was eliminated. All over the country managers of theatres benefitted by the substitution of order for chaos. And whatever criticisms may be made of the big theatrical organizations, I don't think anyone can deny that in doing this they rendered a mighty fine service.

The motion picture has supplanted the legitimate theatre as the purveyor of amusement and entertainment; the silent drama has patrons whose numbers surpass daily the wildest dreams of the old time theatrical managers. But we can draw a good lesson from their experience.

The motion picture exhibitor must know what to expect. He must not be harassed by doubt as to whether he will have a series of high class pictures or whether he must take what he can get.

If he wants to set a Mary Pickford standard for his house, he must know that he can maintain it. He can't establish a Mary Pickford standard by running one of a series of Mary Pickford pictures. He must have them all and he must be able to secure them without a nerve racking struggle and the dread that the opposition will slip up behind him and tomahawk him by taking the rest of the series.

If he wants to have a Charlie Chaplin vogue for his house he must know that he can have Charlie Chaplin as a constant attraction. What would be more harrowing to an exhibitor than to buy "A Dog's Life" picture, advertise it effectively, work his hardest to get all his patrons to see it, have it go over with genuine success and then discover a little later, that his rival has put one over on him, secured "Shoulder Arms" and has reaped the benefit of all he did to exploit "A Dog's Life."

The exhibitor doesn't want to be forced to contract for program pictures that leave him no initiative and force him to take second-rate stuff with the good. Neither does he want a policy that will compel him to live "in the midst of alarms" never knowing what tomorrow will bring forth. He wants to be free to make his selections but he wants to know that when he picks a certain series of pictures as the best for his house, he will not have to engage in constant warfare to hold them.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES A. McELRAVY,
General Manager,

Jans Says a Word Anent Origination of the Open Market

"Recent and prevailing controversies in the trade journals anent the originators of the open market, personal service, exhibitor co-operation, and all such easily mouthed phrases, impel me to rise and make a few remarks," declared H. F. Jans, president of Jans Productions, Inc., 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

"We all want to give credit where commendation is due, but these post mortem reminiscences, after all, can accomplish little good unless they penetrate behind the breast works and that's my intention.

"I wish to state emphatically that while many of the estimable gentlemen, mentioned as originators of the open market and exhibitor co-operation, were theorizing upon the feasibility of these innovations, the territorial rights buyers, managers of state rights exchanges through the country, were actually putting the theories into practice.

"All honor then to these men in Seattle, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Boston, and the thirty other principal exchange cities. They have not been mentioned but every exhibitor knows that these men were the pioneers of the innovations so strongly publicized at this time. The individual state right men in the various districts were the actual stumbling blocks in the path of prospective domination of exhibitors through 'forced' programs.

"These independents were the salvation of the exhibitors from the very beginning when the late General Film Company was in the saddle. To these un-named men belong the glory of the present situation."

Mr. Jans is not only president of Jans Productions, Inc., but has the New Jersey franchise for Metro, Nazimova and Rolfe. He also handles all the big specials for New Jersey of such calibre as "The Unpardonable Sin," "Stolen Orders," "Hearts of Men," etc.

When Mr. Jans desired a strong line of short subjects such as comedies and Western thrillers he is said to have scrutinized the market closely and examined hundreds of films.

He negotiated a deal with Colonel Selig whereby he obtained all the United States on the Tom Mix single reelers. These in turn were disposed of to state rights buyers and at present there are very few remaining territories to be sold.

Ninety-two Ham and Bud single-reel comedies were purchased from the Kalem Company and of this lot Mr. Jans selected fifty-two of the best to be released one a week through the state right exchanges. He retains the New Jersey rights for his own exchange and reports that exhibitors throughout the country are anxious to run the comedies again as Ham and Bud have been absent from the screen for about five years.

"One-at-a-Time Picture Is Vicious"

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has expressed his opinions most emphatically on the subject of the "single picture" policy, and I'm back of him in everything he said. The star series contracts with a one picture cancellation clause affords far greater protection to the exhibitor. The one-at-a-time basis is decidedly vicious. The "single picture" policy certainly does not possess any benefit for exhibitors great enough to offset its disadvantages in making them compete with one another in boosting rental prices. The "single picture" policy is a very crafty and shrewd move on the part of its promoters. Naturally every first run house will be anxious to secure the really big stars. On the "single picture" basis each picture will be put "on the block" and exhibitors will throw discretion to the winds in bidding to get the different pictures. For the prestige these pictures would give the house the average exhibitor would—in the event of competition—forego all prospects of a profit in order to insure being shown in his house. The producer would get the money, the exhibitor would get the prestige.

Every thinking exhibitor in this country should refuse to do business on the "single picture" basis. Mr. Williams is to be commended for the bold stand he has taken in this matter and he should receive the heartiest support of every exhibitor. He is absolutely right when he says that in the "single picture" policy "one of the most vital principles of the industry is at stake."

In expressing my opinion against the "single picture" policy, I do not include the great special non-star productions. These pictures can and should be sold singly to anyone wishing them. They do not interfere with any exhibitors' program, by giving to a competitor the benefit of previous exploitation in another theatre. I can play "My Four Years in Germany" or "Auction of Souls" if I want to, or let some other theatre have them. It will not hurt my prestige as a theatre showing First National attractions, but show me the theatre that can take the Anita Stewart series away from me after my showing of "Virtuous Wives." Under the "single picture" policy, this might be done, for there are limits to what I can afford to pay for a picture, and chances are I might be outbid by some other theatre. With the star series, I am safe and protected, if I want the pictures—if I do not want them, I am just as much protected, for I can bring out that one picture cancellation clause and use it as a weapon of defence.

I'm for the star series policy all the time.

Very truly yours,
F. G. McWILLIAMS,
Madison, Wis. Grand Theatre.

"Must Book Stars in a Bunch"

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

After reading the statement by J. D. Williams of First National in Motion Picture News, I want to say that I prefer to book big star productions on the star series basis rather than the one picture policy. It seems to be fairer and of more protection to the exhibitor. Of course, I shall always insist upon the one picture cancellation clause, for that is the essential protective feature to the exhibitor; and could anything be more fair than that? You have the best elements of the "single picture" policy, with none of the bad features, namely the bidding against one another of the exhibitors, which would naturally occur when we bought one picture at a time. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Williams when he says that in the "single picture" policy "one of the most vital principles of the industry is at stake."

The special features without stars may be booked singly very nicely, for not all theatres care to book them, and when one does, it does not injure another theatre. But it would be decidedly injurious for another theatre to step in and play a star whom I had been playing.

The "single picture" policy can never take the place of the star series basis of booking.

Very truly yours,
JOE WINNINGER, Manager,
Appleton Opera.

Exchange Housing Taken Up by N. A. M. P. I.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is taking another progressive step. This time it is the question of properly having film exchanges throughout the country which is receiving the co-ordinated attention of the Association.

For many months Executive Secretary Frederick E. Elliott has been communicating with the Association's representatives in the leading exchange centers with the idea of gathering detailed information, including plans and specifications of any new buildings either contemplated or now in the course of construction. The results are filed in the Real Estate Department of the Association.

Mr. Elliott is now in Chicago attending a meeting of the Exchange Managers of that city, the purpose of which is to provide a suitable, centrally located building which will conform with all the safety and fire regulations and provide for the peculiar needs of the industry.

Western F. P.-Lasky Exchange Men Convene

Branch manager and salesmen of all Famous Player-Lasky exchanges west of Kansas City will meet in convention in Los Angeles, June 11th to 14th inclusive, according to announcement Branch Manager Harry Ballance of Los Angeles has received.

The Los Angeles exchange is placed in charge of arranging program which will provide ample time for heads of the distributing organization of this corporation to fully explain all features of the policy of distributing the product during the coming year. The distributing organization officials will have the co-operation of heads of the producing organization, including Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille, Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Roscoe Arbuckle, Frank E. Woods and others of the local studios.

"Hits the Right Chord," Says Fisher

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

I read with much interest the article published in your journal on the subject of the "single picture" policy, which expresses the views of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. After giving this article much due consideration I am of the belief that Mr. Williams has hit the right chord and his views on the subject concide with mine in every way.

It has always been my policy to secure follow-up pictures in which there appears a star that has appeared in a former picture. This is especially so when the first one proved to be a good box office attraction, and believing that my audiences are entitled to see the next one, it is up to me to keep on the jump for fear that my competitor would beat me to the exchange and offer a larger rental price to secure the second attraction, and if he secured it, reap a harvest from my exploiting the first one. By signing a star series contract all this trouble is averted because I can feel assured that I am going to secure the next release of a Mary Pickford, Constance Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, or what ever star picture it might be.

As to the big non-star attraction, with no particular star, there is always a chance of enlarging box office receipts, especially so, when the subject is a topic of general conversation at the time of the release, such as was "My Four Years in Germany."

There is no reason in the world why I should be compelled to pay a higher rental for a second picture of a star series just because I happened to make a huge success with the first one. If my success was due to my exploiting the first picture then I should be entitled to get the second one. To do this and play safe the only equitable way is to follow the star series contract basis.

Exhibitors need some protection and this plan is the only solution of the vital subject.

ALBERT FISHER,
Monmouth Theatre.

"Says It's Safest in Long Run"

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Booking a big star production in series will be found the safest in the long run, and that is substantially the purport of the statement in the May 31st issue of Motion Picture News by J. D. Williams, Manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

I have booked the Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Anita Stewart pictures in series, and have found the policy works to fine advantage. It gives stability and assurance for the future. When I feel gratified over the business done with "Daddy Long Legs" I do not have to worry lest some one else gets the next Pickford picture, or the price of it be jumped up because of the showing of "Daddy Long Legs."

I can't see any benefit from the single picture policy that will compensate for the loss of the many advantages to the exhibitor from the series contracts.

Now that the program club has been lifted from over the exhibitors' head and we are free to choose the best, we should be protected from ruthless competition; from surprise attacks by rivals which could knock out our best laid plans.

Freedom and safety are involved in the policies advocated by Mr. Williams according to my views.

Very truly yours,
(MRS.) M. C. KING.

Woehrle Favors Star Series

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

An article appearing in your journal on the "single picture" policy expressing the views of J. D. Williams, manager, First National Exhibitors' Circuit, on the subject and his championing of the star series contract cannot be brought too strongly to the attention of exhibitors. I for one am heartily in favor of the plans as outlined by Mr. Williams and have always been in favor of the star series contract basis of booking. In other words, the First National policy of booking suits me.

The "single picture" booking policy which many of the distributing firms contemplate doing will in my opinion destroy what little protection exhibitors have been enjoying in the past. To carry out the plans of the firms will destroy the most vital principle in the industry and leave

Big Attendance Predicted for Banquet Tendered to Sunday Champions

The number of exhibitors who have signified their intention of attending the banquet that is to be tendered to Messrs. Cohen, O'Reilly and Berman on Wednesday evening, June 18, at the Waldorf-Astoria, as a testimonial for their efforts in securing proper legislation permitting the exhibition of pictures on Sundays, is reported to have reached such numbers as to insure a big success.

It is stated that many exhibitors have overlooked the fact that for the first time ladies will be welcomed to the affair. Tickets for seats at the banquet tables can be procured at the same price as those for the exhibitors. This will entitle the ladies to participate in the dance that is to be given after the dinner without any additional cost.

To the ladies who will occupy box seats and not participate in the banquet a charge of two dollars and fifty cents for tickets will obtain. All applications for seats or tables are being made to Louis F. Blumenthal, 1587 Broadway.

Corner Stone of New Fox Edifice Is Laid

Engraved invitations were issued by the William Fox Corporation to men prominent in the motion picture trade, exhibitors and trade magazines, to the ceremonies attendant on the laying of the corner stone of the new home of the Corporation, 55th Street and Tenth Avenue, New York, June 6.

When four o'clock came, the hour set, the street held scores who had come to the ceremony, desiring by their presence to compliment the progressiveness of William Fox and wish the new venture success.

Two Service Sections This Week

Half Los Angeles Seeks Theatre

In One Week 300,000 Admissions Are Recorded in Big Houses—Estimate 450,000 Attend in All the Theatres

CONSERVATIVE estimates place the number of paid admissions to down town Los Angeles theatres during the week ending Sunday, May 24, at approximately half the population of Los Angeles or 300,000, the greatest week in the history of amusement in Los Angeles.

The phenomenal attendance of the theatres, both picture and speaking stage, is attributed to the excellence of the several programs for it is apparent that the managers of the leading houses sought to combat competition by giving the public the strongest bills possible.

Few if any cities of the size of Los Angeles have had three such pictures on in one week as those that constituted the features of the three largest houses. Nazimova's "Red Lantern" was at the California, Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs" at the Kinema and Fairbanks' "Knickerbocker Buckaroo" at Grauman's. These three houses, it is estimated, played to approximately half of the business of the down town theatres or nearly 150,000 of the admissions. In addition to these three bills other down town houses had the following bills: Tally's, Florence Reed in "Wives of Men"; Clune's Auditorium, "The Better 'Ole," and six acts of vaudeville; Superba, "The Heart of Humanity" (second run); Ray's Garden, Henry Walthall in "Modern Husbands"; Rialto "Shepherd of the Hills;" Palace, Vitagraph's "The Common Cause;" Victory, Olive Thomas in "Toton the Apache;" Symphony "The Fire Flingers;" Alhambra, Theda Bara in "The Siren's Song;" Clune's Broadway, Pauline Frederick in "Out of the Shadow," and the Hippodrome, Emmy Wehlen in "The Amateur Adventuress" with six acts of vaudeville.

If the smaller theatres played to an average of 300 a day, which is said to be very low, the total number of paid admissions at all Los Angeles theatres would reach 450,000 or three-fourths of the population.

The West Coast office of Motion Picture News makes the above estimates after carefully canvassing the theatre situations with the aid of several of the branch managers of Los Angeles exchanges.

The exceptional business of the Los Angeles houses during this period is attributed by all branch managers to the fact that the larger houses all had the best bills obtainable at the time; these attractions served to bring the people out and the smaller houses, in many instances, played to the overflow business of the three large houses.

Poor Stories Killing the Stars?

Hopp Hadley Writes Dearth of Plots Is End of Favorites

ALL the worry about which way certain stars will jump is misplaced unless more attention is paid to their vehicles, according to an interesting discussion overheard in a New York projecting room recently after a screen review of Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan."

"The striking originality of Oscar Wilde's famous story, its unusual plot and the tense situations made possible by its unraveling, together with the element of suspense which holds the attention from the very opening scenes until the final curtain, offers such striking contrast to the strength of the same elements in the stories our leading screen stars have appeared in from time to time, that we are almost tempted to wonder how these stars have managed to retain their drawing power in spite of them.

"Another almost unforgivable weakness that threatens the career of our stars is the absence of clever and out-of-the-ordinary character drawings in recent screen productions. "Lady Windermere's Fan" shows them up in glaring fashion in this regard. Not only are the now famous characters of "Tubby" the good-natured old club fellow; "Agatha Carlisle" who "just adores sunsets," and her gossip-loving mother, carefully and cleverly drawn, but they are transferred to the screen with ease by the picture artists.

"It all comes down to the unpleasant truth that even with the attention that is now being given to stories, their importance is not yet fully realized. Plots! plots! We must have real plots. Without them we will soon find ourselves with no stars. Stage stars have little to fear from bad plays compared with screen stars. Poor plays do not draw if they are too poor. Several failures in succession may mean box-office death to stage stars but they have a way of measuring their failures and can be very careful not to repeat them. On the contrary, screen stars are booked in inferior pictures, one following the other with small regard for the pulse of the public.

"There is but one sure course to pursue. Let us refuse to picture stories that do not contain the known elements of good drama. Study continually the dramas that are known to be great and compare the new ones with the old. The weakness of many present day dramas will then be very easily discovered."

Metro Appoints Atkinson General Manager

William E. Atkinson, business manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, has been appointed General Manager. He has been affiliated with Metro since shortly after its organization.

Harry J. Cohen takes full charge of the Foreign Department. Mr. Cohen was one of the organizers of Metro in company with Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel and was also one of the organizers of the old Famous Players Corporation.

General Manager Atkinson has issued a call for the Fifth Annual Metro Convention to be held in New York City at the Hotel Astor June 19, 20, 21.

Halcyon Theatre Days of the Bowery Recalled

Once more is New York's old Bowery, of late years merely a memory and a sightseers' haven, back in theatredom, with prominent stars playing to the edification of all.

For in a short time, on June 28, the New Atlantic Garden Theatre at No. 50 Bowery, is to open, marking another progressive step in motion picture exhibition.

It means the renaissance of the new world's most famous old-time amusement district—the bringing back to lower Manhattan island of the great men and women stars of tragedy and comedy, the motion picture taking the place of the spoken drama. Thus is theatrical history made.

The Atlantic Garden stands a few steps south of Canal street and next door to the old Bowery Theater in which Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, the elder Sothern and all the great players of another generation made their chief bids for public favor. The Atlantic Garden itself was opened by William Kramer to meet the standards of the great European amusement palaces and was successfully conducted by him and his sons for more than fifty years.

the exhibitor at the mercy of the producers and distributers.

The First National's plan of booking independent, non-star attractions such as "Auction of Souls" and "My Four Years in Germany" on the single picture basis is very attractive to me and should be enlarged on. At least one a month of these kind of pictures would suit me for they have proven to be money-makers at my theatre.

Mr. Williams has set forth his views in a forceful manner and left no point unexplained. More power to him in the good work.

Agrees with Williams' Statement

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

As an exhibitor in a small town, who must depend upon the patronage drawn for many miles around, I am heartily in favor of the series policy of booking the big star attractions and I agree absolutely with the predictions by Mr. J. D. Williams, Manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit as published in the May 31st issue of Motion Picture News that the "single picture" policy is sure to "throw exhibitors out of the frying pan into the fire." My reasons for this may differ a little from those of the city exhibitors, but I believe they are applicable to many exhibitors throughout the country.

I must lay my plans ahead through the seasons and must always be watchful to draw the people in from the country. If I can advertise only a single picture at a time, I must depend on the pull of the advertising and exploitation for that one period.

If I know I am to have a series of pictures, I can use each picture to pull for the others. I can "get set" for months and keep cumulative interest coming right along. For instance, the people who see Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" are all agog to see her in "A Midnight Romance" and if they know it is coming to Paris they will make their plans to come. They will spread the news through their neighborhood. Then the Anita Stewart vogue will sweep through the country and the succeeding pictures, announced in good time, will draw more and more patrons.

This benefit is possible when I know what I am to have. It is the great boon of the series contracts.

The "single picture" policy does not keep pace with the development of the motion picture industry. It belongs to the days when the business was on a much smaller scale and as it does not serve any useful purpose. I can't see any real argument for it.

Sincerely yours,
Paris, Tenn. H. L. LAWRENCE.

Industrial Features Getting Attention

For the first time in its history the National Board of Review is taking cognizance of educational and industrial pictures, according to a letter received last week by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Educational-Industrial Department.

"The routine activities of the board do not include the review of 'educational' pictures," the letter, which was signed by the board's executive secretary, stated, "because they involve no moral issues which are the function of the National Board. We wish, however, to keep our lists as complete as possible."

The lists referred to, the letter explains, are those provided for a constantly increasing demand upon the national board for educational pictures. These, it is stated, should include industrials and others which are of educational value, both for theatre and general exhibition.

The Board, the letter continues, is to inaugurate a weekly bulletin service to the educational magazines which will keep them in touch with the educational and industrial activities of the film world.

Social Workers to Aid in Dramatic Pictures

The National Board plans to form an advisory committee of social workers of national prominence who will be called on to furnish technical information regarding various types of social work to the directors of dramatic pictures of the large film manufacturing companies. This plan will result in these subjects being treated with the same technical correctness as is now secured for the artistic elements in picture production, through the engaging of art directors.

Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board of Review, was in consultation with the directors of the National Conference of Social Work to advise in the selection of pictures shown at the convention in Atlantic City June 1-6. The subjects included child welfare, delinquency, family problems, mental hygiene, Americanization and industry.

Famous Players-Lasky Buys "Sea Wolf"

C. E. Shurtleff, president of C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., and who has control of all the releases of the Jack London stories, announces that he has sold the picture rights to the "Sea Wolf" to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Shurtleff stated that due to the fact that the Famous Players Company once before filmed the "Sea Wolf" and were anxious to do it the second time, he was approached with an offer which he accepted on one condition. This was the Famous Players Company release all rights to two other London productions which they made and four other London stories which they claimed they had the rights to the stories. They were "Smoke Bellew," "Burning Daylight," "John Barleycorn," "Martin Eden," "Valley of the Moon" and "Odessy of the North."

Pa. "Funkhausers" Over-Ruled

Philadelphia Judge Reverses Decision of Censors That "Auction of Souls" Is Not for Exhibition

THE hindsight, which Pennsylvania exhibitors declare takes the place of foresight with the members of the State Board of Censors of that state, received a fall when Judge Patterson of Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, overruled the action of the Censors who condemned and forbade the showing of "Ravished Armenia," better known under the title of "Auction of Souls." The picture will now be handled in Philadelphia and vicinity by the Peerless Feature Film Exchange.

After viewing the picture himself, Judge Patterson, said: "The court finds it a fact and a question of law that there is nothing in the scenes which make them sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or of such nature as to tend to debase or corrupt morals. Viewing the picture as a whole, the court finds as a fact that it is educational in character. It is not only a vivid portrayal of the story entitled 'Ravished Armenia,' but it is also a picture of conditions as they existed in Armenia a few months ago."

Judge Patterson added a brief to his decision which in part is as follows: "This picture is capable of implanting in the many millions of thinking and unthinking Americans three convictions which may reasonably determine the public conduct of the American people in the near future. First, that the Armenian people deserve to be rescued, comforted and made free and secure for the future by the use of the full power of the Democratic Western people. Second, that the concert of Europe, which since the Crimean war at least, has signally failed to protect the Christian population of the near East and to establish justice in that part of the world should now be replaced by a more effective international organization.

"Third, if this enterprise of restoring Armenia be a crusade, that is an enterprise undertaking and a good cause with unselfish enthusiasm. It is a crusade in which the American people should ardently desire to take part."

Time and again during the hearing, J. J. McDevitt, representing the producers, was on his feet to interrogate the witnesses for the censors and try to secure from them something that would back up the charges of the Board, but in this he was unsuccessful for they never had enough evidence to make it plain to the court that the picture was objectionable.

Mack Swain Comedy Used as Feature

Sidney B. Lust, President of the Super Film Attractions, Inc., which has acquired the Mack Swain single reel comedies and the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns released on the State Right Market by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, wired that concern that for the first time in the history of any motion picture theatre in the District of Columbia a single reel production was advertised as a special added attraction in the daily papers of the Capitol.

Loew's Palace Theatre, reputed to be the Capitol's most beautiful playhouse, booked the entire series of twenty-six Mack Swain Comedies, and has announced theplaying of the initial release, "Daddy Ambrose," the week of June 2. In the daily papers they advertised the main feature "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," and "As a special added attraction 'Daddy Ambrose,' Mack Swain Comedy."

Mr. Lust states that he has contracted for two first runs on the Mack Swain Comedies, the additional first run being Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre.

This information supplied the Frohman Amusement Corporation is but one of many letters received by that company from State Rights buyers.

Promote Field Force Members of United

In conformity with the promotion on merit plan recently announced by J. A. Berst, president of United Picture theatres, as the basis on which future changes in the field force would operate, the following appointments were announced by United during the past week:

Ira Aronson, long time manager of United's Pittsburgh office, has been promoted to be special representative. Mr. Aronson will have a floating assignment, but will continue to make his headquarters in Pittsburgh.

G. C. Reid has been transferred from the Cleveland branch of the United to the larger Pittsburgh branch, replacing Ira Aronson.

Sydney Rosenthal, salesman of the Cleveland branch, has been promoted to local manager.

Rand to Manage United Artists' Exchange

Walter S. Rand, who has long been identified with the film rental business, particularly west of the Mississippi, has just been appointed Sales Manager of the Los Angeles Distributing Depot of United Artists Corporation by Hiram Abrams, General Manager of the company.

Mr. Rand's connection with the motion picture business goes back even further than his exchange experience, for he is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the West. He ran the first motion picture house in Denver and later operated theatres in Salt Lake City.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Who Says They Haven't Gone Ahead?

PROBABLY no one has such an opportunity to judge the progress that has been made by exhibitors generally than the staff of Exhibitors Service Bureau, who have been in the closest possible touch with conditions all over the country for almost two years.

With the inauguration of this department there were very few exhibitors doing anything unusual in the presentation of pictures. When we stated that we were going to have here a section of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS that would be devoted entirely to the exhibitors and to recording their activities, we were told that it could not be done.

For the first few weeks we were a little discouraged, and we might have listened to the "I-Told-You-Sos," but we knew exhibitors too well, and were too sure of their willingness to take advantage of their opportunities. Gradually there came to be recorded here the ideas of this and that showman, of how he and the other fellow put on pictures, reproductions of lobby displays and stage settings and all the branches of the exhibition business.

We knew that we were blazing a trail in the trade paper field, but we were sure that all that was needed was to have the trail open.

ONE result has been that exhibitors who never really tried to do things before were encouraged to try. At first there was a feeling that if accounts of their work appeared in these pages the exchanges would think that they were so prosperous that they could pay more rentals and increase their demands.

But that has been shown to be utterly false. On the contrary, the producers and distributors know that for certain leading theatres to show their pictures is a big asset, for lesser known houses to do something out of the way with pictures helps to boost that production all the more. Instead of doing anything to discourage them, we believe that every intelligent producer wants to do all he can to get more into the exhibitor presentation of his pictures. And we feel mighty sure that any exchange man who attempted to raise film rental on an exhibitor because he was doing things, would be unceremoniously "CANNED." We are using the slang word here because it fits; there wouldn't be time enough taken for the exchange man to do anything so formal as to "resign."

Any exchange man who fails to encourage the individual exhibitor to do as much as possible with each picture, to get the exploitation points and to bring them out best, is false not only to the exhibitor's interest, but to that of his employer. And we believe that they are all working on that basis now, where certainly many of them were not a couple of years ago.

BUT that is rather aside from the issue. We were talking about progress of the exhibitor. We want to point out the strides that have been made in presentation and that a NEW WORLD'S RECORD has been established in the presentation of these accounts in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the benefit of exhibitors who will show this same picture later. This is illustrated in case of "The Red Lantern."

In the May 10 issue of the NEWS there appeared the Special Service Section on "The Red Lantern," giving the views of our experts on how the picture should be exploited and giving advance information so that every exhibitor in the country could get in the spirit of the production before he even saw the print.

In the May 17 issue there appeared an account of the way that this picture was put on at the Rialto, New York, and the way that it was exploited at the Merrill, Milwaukee, with five pictures illustrating the various exploitation angles. In the May 24 issue how Franklin did it at Shea Hippodrome, Buffalo, was told and illustrated in detail. One week later the full campaign of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., was shown, and three striking views of the decorations at the Liberty, Kansas City. In the June 7 issue there were the accounts from the Alhambra, Toledo, O., and the Rialto, Des Moines, Iowa, both completely illustrated.

In this issue Ascher's Chateau theatre, Chicago; the new California theatre, Los Angeles, and Grand Central theatre, St. Louis, are represented.

We repeat that this is a world's record.

Never in the history of motion pictures has there been printed so much about the presentation of one picture—even in the course of years—and all of this matter listed has appeared in six issues of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and there are more to follow, because we want the smaller theatres as well as the biggest ones to have representation here.

But we are not stressing the accounts of what we are doing for self-glorification, but to show the wonderful strides forward that exhibitors have taken. To one who has been in such close touch with the exhibitors in one position for two years, it is hard to realize the growth week by week, but here we have amazing evidence.

It certainly means more than a thought for you. If you are not getting out and trying to do things, you are not getting the money out of your house that is there for you. And you know that we are willing to do everything in our power—without cost or obligation. And you know that these accounts are being printed here for YOUR benefit. We'll admit that "The Red Lantern" gave unusual possibilities, but there are lots of others that do, and we want to print every account possible of the worth while presentation of any picture.

The name of the manufacturer means nothing in this department. It is YOURS, Mr. Exhibitor, and you have it in your power to make it better.

Real Advertising Gives Trio of Theatres Runs of Three Days Each in City of 11,000

WHEN Uncle Sam counted the noses of the country in 1910 there were 11,267 of them out in Pocatello, Idaho. But that doesn't keep the city from furnishing one of the best examples that have come to our attention of the proverb, "It pays to advertise."

Now there are six theatres in Pocatello, three of which are owned by the C. and A. Amusement Company, which is controlled by R. D. Carrothers and C. H. Archibald. That is quite a number for a town of that size, especially with the three C. and A. houses having seating capacity of 1,900.

But that is not the most remarkable thing:

These three theatres run pictures for three days each.

The Orpheum and Princess charge twenty cents for adults in the evening and the Olympic charges twenty-five. And they get it.

Advertising is one of the reasons, and if the theatre managers display the same intelligence in their other work that they do in their advertising the cause for the success of the three houses is very plain.

We are reproducing here a page taken from the Tuesday issue of the Pocatello daily paper, in which there are announced the attractions of all three of the houses of the latter part of the week. Each advertisement is entirely separate from the other, and the only indication of the fact that they are under the same ownership is the fact that they appear together and that the same type is used for the names of the houses and the borders are identical.

Here is one small city where the managers get results even if their facilities are limited and they have to depend on the exchanges for the material with which to illustrate the advertising. But the main thing is that the man who wrote these displays knew what he was talking about. He got the material and studied it and found out and then put his selling arguments into plain English that is bound to get over and bound to get results.

Striking cuts of stars used on program covers

Excellent display has been secured in these and a fine sense of values used in the selection of the matter. There are mighty few small city managers who would take a half page advertisement and then resist the impulse to crowd it up with a lot of reading matter. In the case of "The Squaw Man" the writer has cited the cast, has stated that it is a Cecil B. DeMille production and then has gone ahead to refer to it as "A play full of suspense, thrills, humor and pathos, in which a man gives his honor and character to save the family name." The "For Husbands Only" display largely uses a cut secured from the exchange, while the Kerrigan display is a splendid example of good advertising writing. There are good lines with the three flush at the left: Alaska and the Yukon! The Golconda of the Few—the Golgotha of the Many." Then it refers to the fact that "The Drifters" is a "stirring, gripping story of red-blooded men who brave the perils of the Arctic while delving for gold, and of a frail girl driven there by a relentless purpose." Equally good is the rest of the selling argument.

Whether all of this was original or part of it taken from press books we are not stopping to find out, and it doesn't matter. In either case the man who prepared this advertising deserves credit, and certainly he shows that he has used to the best end the material that he had and that he has achieved results that would be a credit to many big city houses.

But the advertising does not stop here. Every week the three theatres issue a twelve-page booklet 6¼ by 9¼, under the name of the Amusement Herald. This has on the front cover the picture of the star one of the houses and then the inside cover and the back cover is devoted to advertising. The first right-hand page gives the program for the week at the three houses and then two pages are devoted to stories about pictures and players at each house and the remaining page to general matter. Small space advertising of local merchants is carried on these pages. The matter is all well written and where possible there are cuts of the stars carried. It is the sort of stuff that every fan will read "from cover to cover."

Two thousand of these are issued each week. Through the use of slides, request cards and other means the theatres have built up a mailing list of a thousand and the others are placed in the theatre lobbies where patrons may find them. The mailing list is constantly growing through requests from the patrons.

In addition to this the theatres use all sorts of paper up to 24-sheets. It is certain that everyone around Pocatello is going to know what the three theatres are showing every week.

This is about one hundred per cent exploitation in a small city, and it shows that it can be done.

STILL MORE

One More Step in Jacksonville's Progress Recorded

ONLY last week in "Your Idea and Ours," we called attention to the advance that had been made by the exhibitors of Jacksonville, Fla. We are mighty glad to see developments in the Southern city keeping up so fast that we can hardly keep on schedule.

Now there comes to our desk the issue of the Jacksonville "Times-Union," of May 11 carrying a four-page section in colors devoted to motion pictures! Heretofore the illustrations used in the Jacksonville papers have been bad, largely carry the trade-marks and the letters of the producing companies. Special cuts are used in this issue for all the news matter and most of the cuts for the advertising have been specially made for that purpose.

Jacksonville is pushing right to the front.

Ruffner Becomes Manager of Rialto in San Francisco

Ralph Ruffner, one of the best known exhibitors and advertising men in the country, on June 1 became manager of the Rialto, one of the largest theatres in San Francisco. He had been connected with the Jensen and von Herberg house for a long time, having been advertising manager and manager of the Columbia in Portland, Ore., and more recently manager of the Rialto, Butte, Mont., which he left to take the present position.

It was largely on account of the health of Mrs. Ruffner, who could not stand the climate in Butte, that the change was made, and as Jensen and von Herberg had no house on the coast open, Mr. Ruffner recided to take the Rialto post.

Wilby Finds That All Call One-Sheets Bad

By R. B. Wilby

Manager Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, Ala.

Mr. Wilby has just returned to Montgomery after visiting a number of the principal cities of the country with a view to studying motion picture conditions. His observations contained in the following article are the result of the things that he saw during that trip and especially with reference to the use of paper displays in theatre lobbies.

WHEN it was first found that pictures were subject to exploitation, the methods used were quite naturally borrowed from the so-called legitimate field. The displays were patterned after those of the theatre—with, it can be admitted, the 'ten-twent'-thirt' meller as the model—as were the paper and the "readers." As the business has developed publicity has improved and changed, until the better theatres are "selling" their shows through their advertisements in a way seldom attempted by the precedent-bound "legitimate" and using real stories rather than the prefunctory press matter that once stamped the work of an alleged press-agent. In short the methods of that part of the publicity for a theatre have been changed to meet the conditions.

Well designed twenty-fours have replaced the old shoot-em-up sixes that were supposed to herald the coming of something unusual. To some extent the threes have improved. But the one-sheet continues as from the beginning, in design if not in quality of work.

Practically no large theatre uses the ones designed by the distributors, yet all of them use signs of about that size. Since the lithographers can reproduce about any painting or drawing, it must be that the designs selected do not meet the requirements of these important houses. And if they do not, it seems entirely reasonable to say that they are therefore wrong; and if wrong, they should be made right. That is, so far as use in the lobby of a theatre is concerned.

The one has, however, another possible use—for outside posting, either hung in windows or on one sheet boards or street cars. For these uses, even more than for lobby work, the one is wanting. Its type cannot be read at thirty feet; its illustration seldom means anything. Here we are paying no little money for metal frames 28 x 42 on the dash of the street cars, yet the privilege is of little use because the lithographs which we can get for use can't be read from the side-walks, and the ones which we can afford to have printed are of rather a poor quality. Not many theatres have this same condition, but a poster that can't be read from the sidewalk to the car line also can not be read from the car window to a theatre's lobby.

It would seem that the truth of the matter is simply that a one-sheet should be an illustrated display advertisement no less than is a twenty-four or a slide, but that as we get them they are merely titled illustrations, sometimes badly and sometimes well selected, but not serviceable for the purpose for which they are most needed.

Just a few times—"Peggy" was an instance, as was some fairly recent Select release—ones have come along that were so divided between illustration and star-and-title that they were useful, but the number of times could be counted on a one-armed man's fingers.

Whether or not the "illustrated display advertisement" idea is right, this is certain—that the posters, and particularly the ones, are not being used by any theatre that thinks it can afford a card writer's work. And that's proof aplenty that something is ALL WRONG.

READ THIS, YOU N. Y. PUBLICITY MEN

Here Is a Newspaper that Wants to Cooperate and Cannot Get the Material to Work With

HERE is a letter that speaks for itself. It is addressed to the publicity departments of the producers and distributors. It comes from an exhibitor and it touches on a point vital to the industry.

The letter speaks for itself. It comes from L. W. Barclay, advertising manager of the Grand Amusement Company, Johnstown, Pa.:

In Johnstown, we have always had trouble getting cooperation out of our three newspapers. I, personally, finally prevailed upon Mr. Fred W. Church, Editor of the Leader, to introduce a page. He agreed to do so, upon condition that I write it and attend to it completely for a month or so, and that I get in touch with producers and have them send press matter and mats to the Leader.

I agreed to do this. I wrote to all the producers, asking them to see that the Leader was kept supplied.

Paramount-Artcraft is the only one that has been sending cuts—and Paramount-Artcraft is run in the opposition house, while the companies we buy from have been sending nothing.

Result—The fellow who gets the page started can't get publicity for his houses without yelling continually for cuts to the exchanges. Plenty of press stuff comes in, but no cuts or mats, and the Leader will use all the cuts that come along.

The page has progressed so that Mr. Church is now getting it out himself. About three times a week regularly, he calls me by telephone and asks me to dig up a cut for him. He has nothing but Paramount stuff to run.

Please put up a howl for me. Tell the producers' publicity departments to get mats to the Leader—to cooperate with it and other newspapers that are endeavoring to cooperate with the industry. It will possibly do some good if you will howl.

"Watch the Hands" Business-Getting Slogan For the Victoria With "A Midnight Romance

"WATCH the hands!"

With this slogan as the center of his advertising, Kenneth Thomas, manager of publicity for the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., drew audiences totaling 15,000 people to see Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance," during a three days' showing, thus breaking all records for attendance in the city.

The big office records are noteworthy, because Harrisburg has an actual population of approximately 75,000 people. From these figures, one-fifth of the town turned out to see the feature. The Victoria was crowded for every performance, and the capacity is 2,200 persons.

The crowd started on the first morning of the showing. For the first performance almost 700 people were in the house. For the last performance three days later, there was a crowd in the waiting list, that was similar to a New York bread line—anxious, hungry, eager to see their favorite star.

Thomas, the publicity manager, does not believe in merely putting down the name of the star and the picture, and letting it go at that. His plan is to advertise, and advertise so much in advance of the other fellow that every fan simply rushes to see what you've got. "Do it better than the other fellow," is his motto, and he carries it out to the fullest. His progressive publicity on "A Midnight Romance" was largely the cause of the remarkable success of this film, although he modestly disclaims the honor.

For two weeks in advance of the showing, he carried a line about the picture, at the bottom of every advertisement in the local newspapers.

The picture was booked for Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Monday he started a teaser campaign. "Watch the hands," he said in these announcements, and the attention of the public was drawn by the clever and original illustrations accompanying. At the same time he carried a bottom line on his advertisement which said: "When the hands of the clock placed in front of this theatre reach midnight this attraction will be here," featuring "A Midnight Romance," in bold type.

Tuesday, the teaser compaign continued, with another view of the hands, and the statement, "Blondie and Mazie raised their glasses to the 'Boodle,' they said. They speak various languages." The illustration portrayed two hands with glasses of wine, raised as in drinking a toast.

Wednesday came the solution of the mystery, as the readers of the papers were keyed up to a high tension of curiosity. "What are the hands?" was the query heard everywhere. The answer was given in an advertisement which said:

THESE are the emotions that follow one another with lightning speed in the heart and mind of Marie Alexander.

Roger meets her first at midnight—a moonlight phantom on the beach—beautiful and bewitching in her elaborate bathing costume; but she runs away.

Again he dances with her at the grand ball, and her gown is stunning; but she disappears.

Then—he finds her in his sister's room—a hotel maid, drab and dismal in the plain livery of a servant.

Who is she? Where did she get her wonderful midnight wardrobe?

"She stole it from me," shrieked a girl guest of the hotel.

And Marie disappears again, and so do three mysterious strangers who have been stopping at the seaview.

It is many weeks before Roger, desperate in his search for her, gets even the slightest clue. It is a big, official looking envelope. He tears it open, and there, before his eyes, but see

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Getting First Attention

By Mrs. Joseph Grossman

Advertising Manager, Standard Theatre, Cleveland

VALUE of attention has always been my first consideration. There must be a distinctive force to draw the eye "To the Display" as well as "Into It."

In order to accomplish this result, I read the plot of the story, then I endeavor to make a proper selection of the photographs at hand. Often I have made the choice of a "still" not in the marketed production and by viewing same in order to get the punch of the story, was able to discover it before using it in the display.

Since there is always more than one good way to arrange any given art, I experiment until I show by comparative illustrations, how much more attractive one display may be than another. Also what interest arousing powers may be in one that may not be in another.

The starting point is the production itself, whether I must depict Love, Romance, or Mystery. Second in consideration is the star to be featured. I consider this of secondary importance, for if the production cannot hold the interest of the public, the star will not be able to do so.

The public glances hurriedly through the displays, therefore there must be an eccentric arrangement. Not only to attract the attention from the other displays but most important in all, to "Hold" it. There must be something of special interest to make the reader pick your display and give it at least one look, because it promises something of interest.

At a glance the title, star and story must be suggested. There must be simplicity of arrangement to catch the eye and not confuse the reader. After the main purpose of making this clear is achieved, the decorative graces are added.

Some blase bachelors and chronic married men claim that no woman knows what she does want; that when she gets what she wants she doesn't want it any more.

Where white space on a Ben Day background works well

Mrs. Joseph Grossman

I am now ready to draw attention "Into" my display I am now referring to the selling power of the picture. In order to arouse curiosity so that every one will want to read the selling argument quickly, the text must be easily read and quickly read. This depends not only upon the type selected but upon the size, spacing and arrangement with other types.

White space I consider a valuable asset in advertising. It keeps your display apart from your competitors, it surrounds your selling argument, thus making it stand out clearly just as an individual line of talk helps a good salesman. Its selling power is increased ten fold. I use white space whenever possible for the reader must grasp in "The Least Time" and "With the Least Effort" what is being said.

If there is a great deal to tell the public, break up your reading matter into paragraphs so that the information be clear and not confusing. I keep one thing in mind and that is SIMPLICITY as that is the only thing that will catch the eye and HOLD IT.

In reference to Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow" the two phtographs aid in making clear the two vows. This is a semi-costume play and being aware of the aversion of the general public to costume plays, no "Still" was used to signify that fact.

"What Every Woman Wants" is a rather bold display. The simplicity of this design creates the necessity for large type. There is just as much danger in getting

Your Idea and Ours

IN writing our Special Service Section on "The Delicious Little Devil" we suggested that "There can be excellent advertisement prepared by the use of a picture of Miss Murray in dancing garb at the right . . . and then setting in want ad style . . . the advertisement Larry McLean used (which we reproduced) . . and then go ahead with the selling argument."

Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., followed this advice except for the placing of the figure at the left, an improvement considering the design used. This was taken from one of the displays that appeared exclusively in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. There isn't the slightest question that this display got immediate attention.

This display has the advantage of suggesting the spice of the picture and at the same time to avoid the suggestive. There's quite a difference.

Instead of giving your theatre a "name" give it a MEANING.

ISIS and Curran theatres, Boulder, Colo., show mighty good advertising for a smaller city. You know that we are mighty strong for having the selling arguments carried on in the advertising and here these two theatres make it a point to do this. While the reading matter is not in large type there is sufficient display given on the name of the star and the title to get the attention. Then these two houses are fortunate in being able to get their advertising on the same page every day so that the reader naturally turns there for the motion picture announcements.

We have noted some cases where the theatre omitted the cut from the advertising and it appeared in the news columns. We believe that it is more valuable in the advertising than in free space unless too large for use there. If these two theatres were able to get scene cuts and get these run in the news portion of the paper it would be much better.

Now, in the case of the Curran, "The Test of Honor" was advertised for several days in advance of the showing and cuts were used in that advertising, therefore it could well be dropped from the display on the last day of the showing so that more attention would be given the Gish picture.

Isis should have featured the name of Tom Mix stronger. Here is an actor with a great following and his name should have been strongly brought out, especially in a Western community. The heavy name of the theatre somewhat kills the cut and we would advise this house to use a name plate as does the Curran.

THOUGH not a distinct novelty this is an unusual advertisement and one that is certain to attract the fullest amount of attention. Here the enlarged face of Mary Pickford as she appeared as the little orphan asylum inmate has been "curtained off" so that only the left portion of her face appears on the background of the "curtain" there is drawn in the fanciful figure of "Daddy Long Legs," which has the immediate effect of attracting attention to the title. SATURDAY'S CROWDS were as dense as those on the opening day of "The Unpardonable Sin."

To accommodate today's throngs the showings will start at 10 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING.

The photoplay is made from Jean Webster's celebrated novel and stage success. It features the great prune strike—"The lives of us orphans is just one darn prune after another."

Just above the cut there is one of the selling arguments which says:

> This is the picture that is here today:
> A seven-act Marshall Neilan production—as noteworthy in the realm of comedy as was his "Unpardonable Sin" in the line of drama.
> The greatest story in which Mary Pickford ever appeared.
> One of the finest all-round motion picture productions you will ever see. A picture for the entire family.

In the first place, we are decidedly against saying any picture is a star's best. It is trite, unconvincing and out of place. Let the people find that out for themselves.

Below the title there are a couple of quotations from Judy and then in the lower right hand corner we find:

> The photoplay is made from Jean Webster's celebrated novel and stage success. It features the great prune strike—"The life of us orphans is just one darn prune after another."

The other matter tells that the crowds that attended the Saturday showing were as great as those for the opening of "The Unpardonable Sin."

It's often not the size of the type, but the type of the talk.

IN this three-column, nine-inch display the Walnut theatre, Louisville, Ky., has obtained an excellent eye effect with the drawing of Mae Murray and the display of her name and the title of the picture, but then the designer has been content to go in for mere generalities that might be Heavings! What adjectives. And to us and to the average reader this whole thing leaves the impression that the designer of the advertisement did not know himself what the picture was about. There was a time when the public bought merely the star and the title, but in most cases that day has passed. People are not coming down from their homes and plank their money on your ticket window simply because you have used a lot of adjectives. They want to know what they are paying for; they insist on buying something specific in amusement. There were ample selling arguments on this picture and they should have been employed. It is all right to say that Miss Murray is fascinating, but tell WHY she is IN THIS PICTURE.

Sometimes the sound of energy is only the exhaust.

FOX THEATRE, Aurora, Ill., uses advertising that in itself looks mighty good, but its effectiveness is marred to a certain extent because the newspaper in which it appears uses the same sort of a border around all of the amusement enterprises, even including boxing contests. We would suggest to the Fox that it first get a distinctive name plate and then that it use a border all of its own on its displays so that it will be recognized the moment that the eye strikes it.

Motion pictures are the greatest influence for good morals in the world—why censor them?

Mrs. Martin Johnson

A South Sea Cannibal

Typing is modest on both of these displays. That on the cannibal picture is six inches across four columns and the "What Every Woman Wants" seven inches by three.

Use of cuts in these displays again shows how much better advertising results when they are present. In one of these there is a single column of Mrs. Martin Johnson and then a single of one of the South Sea cannibals. The idea of balancing the picture of a black warrior with a pretty white woman is a good one and the contrast is sure to result in the attention. The main selling argument is devoted to a quotation from Martin Johnson, reading:

> But just as soon as the traveler sets foot behind those tiny areas under the control of the white man, he finds himself among savages, naked, treacherous, man-killing and frequently man-eating.

Under the picture of Mrs. Johnson is a quotation saying that there is no vulgarity in mere nakedness and referring to the real modesty of the women of those islands. It is all convincing stuff.

Motion Pictures are the greatest influence for good morals in the world—Why censor them?

The Fox has staid away from the teaser style largely with the Grace Darmond picture and has been content with arousing a certain amount of curiosity and then selling the product on the strong cast and that fact that it is a picturization of the dramatic Parker story.

By the way, the Aurora theatres are showing good sense by carrying at the bottom of all of their advertising the lines:

"Motion pictures are the greatest influence for good morals in the world—why censor them?"

A mighty good way of enlisting all photoplay lovers in your fight.

No one wants to study geography in your advertising, don't make a "map" necessary to understand it.

ORDINARILY we would take a glance at this display and say that it is mighty poor. But as a matter of fact we could not even suggest a better display than the Washington, Dallas, Texas, has used with the "Fire Flingers." We may be pardoned for saying that we suggested that the line, not coined by us, but by Universal, "The story that made a nation lose its sleep" be used in all advertising.

There has been a distinct appeal made here to every reader of the Saturday Evening Post story, but there could have been a more effective one by using space that would have allowed the top line to read straight across the page and by using a larger and more striking scene picture.

Too many different sorts of type are used. It is a whole lot surer to confine the selection to three. The title of the picture should have been brought out stronger. Space used is two columns, twelve inches.

It's not the ache that counts, but the remedy.

WHOLE point of the story was missed in this display. Here is the story of a little working girl who found her only pleasure in the "movies," who dreamed of them and who wanted a romance just as she found in them—especially the "final close-up" which sees the lovers in embrace. Probably "missed" is a poor word here—IGNORED is a better one.

In the first place, the printing is very bad here and the three pictures of Miss Mason do not stand out as they should. Then the selling arguments are weak. At the left we have:

> If you are tired and indifferent, see this one.
> If you are out for a good time, head for the Princess.
> Gay, human, delightful, pleasing.
> Funny? Very funny.

Mere generalities these, and then when the smaller talk, based directly on the plot starts, it gets away from the big idea. This is what it says:

> She wanted a rest—the department store was a hard place.
> So Nora Nolan jumped right over to Winchester-by-the-sea, into the whirl of society.
> She made only one friend, but the way she did it brings out as much fun as any one has a right to expect in a story.

And what does it all mean? Why should anyone go to see THAT in a picture. Ad writer for the Princess theatre, Denver, don't waste eight inches across three columns again, but take a look at the Special Service Section of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. If you will turn back to the May 24 issue, you will find some of the chances that you have missed.

Maybe there's a good idea in your waste basket.

THIS display of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, occupied nine inches across eight columns and had a position at the top of the page. Therefore it is bound to have attracted attention, but we cannot imagine a display that is made so hard to read and so unattractive to the eye.

This is largely the result of the use of all capitals in the display type. There always must be relief in type displays and where there is not white space to do this there must be a change to lower case and to italics to get the effect. While there are four different kinds of type used here, the capital effect is so dominant that we don't believe one-tenth of the people read the whole thing. The appeal at a glance is to get the name Alice Joyce, and then the title of the picture and then to give the rest of it a single glance—without reading any. Also the mass of type largely kills the effect of the very attractive picture of Miss Joyce.

SPECIAL ADDED FEATURES

Here is a clear case where the theatre, the Madison, Detroit, has put the burden of selling the picture on the name of the star and the title of the play—a distinctly unfair policy. Why not say something about the picture itself, why not give some reason for the people coming to the box-office and buying tickets?

Hard lines are sometimes the stragihtest ones.

SO long as we have strength enough to pound the old typewriter we will continue to protest against the old bevel-edged border which many theatres continue to use in order to get the block effect in their advertising. In eight cases out of ten they fail to achieve the effect that they sought and in 999 cases out of a 1,000 it means nothing when this effect is secured.

Liberty theatre, Muncie, Ind., would have had a much neater effect by using a light double rule or, better still, some distinctive border and a name plate for the theatre and possibly running the border into the cut of Corinne Griffith. The whole display effect here is confusing with the result that the Billy West picture stands out as the thing that gets the eye first, and we are sure that is not what the designer meant to do. This is caused largely by the box effect about it and the smaller type matter being used full measure, instead of leaving ample white space at either side. As it stands it distinctly separates the name of the star from the title of the feature.

Scylla and Charybdis back us when advertising starts through.

MARY PICKFORD in "Daddy Long Legs" has brought out a large amount of clever advertising, and here is one of the most unusual of them, the work of the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky. It uses one of the designs prepared by First National to get the eye and then employs a number of pictures of Miss Pickford as the little orphan girl. It will be noted that the suggestion of Judy, after she had gone to college, for the appeal here has been made directly to the children. One of the lines tells the reader to "Play 'Daddy Long Legs' by taking your neighbors' youngsters to see 'Daddy Long Legs.'"

Unless there was other advertising making an appeal to the grown-ups we rather doubt the advisability of centering the display on the children and getting too much of an idea over that this is a picture especially for them, when as a matter of fact the adult enjoyment would be even greater. The very small line saying that this was Jean Webster's famous play hardly gets that idea over. For getting attention it is mighty good, but for convincing the public as a whole it is rather weak. Space used is twelve and a half inches, four columns.

The high sign that you need in your theatre is quality in everything that you do.

AVENUE A and Carlton theatres, Du Bois, Pa., furnish an example of the use of cuts supplied by the producer and then destroying their effectiveness by the mass of type. In this case it is not so much the amount of the type, but the type itself. And, again, the type seems to have been used without it being clear what the designer wanted to accomplish. It gives one very much the impression that the compositor simply strolled about the printing office and every time he needed a word reached for the nearest case. For instance, why the word "Charley" should be in a heavy black face and "Chaplin" in light could never be satisfactorily explained to any one.

In the first place, the two theatres should get themselves name plates and carry these in one of the corners of each display. This would to an extent systematize the arrangement. Then the different attractions should be separated and selling talks given on the feature. The picture of Vivian Martin and the cow with the line, "This is how she got her beau," means absolutely nothing unless it is explained and the same is true with the Gish offering. More uniformity of type is badly needed.

Space used is nine inches across four columns.

It's bad enough to worry your patrons with the screen tragedies, so keep your own to yourself.

DOWN in Lexington, Ky., they have gotten into the habit of using the one-inch streamers across the newspaper pages for motion picture advertising, a habit that we think is a bad one for the prosperity of the theatre and bad policy on the part of the newspapers. We are reproducing here three-quarters of the Saturday page of the Leader, and though the reduction is considerable you can see the messy effect. These spaces are one inch deep and crowded with matter, and as a result no display is obtained.

MR and MRS. SIDNEY DREW in "THE AMATEUR LIAR" and KINOGRAM

OUT in Tacoma, Wash., the theatres are doing some mighty good advertising and here is one four full columns from the Rialto theatre that is just about a hundred per cent. There is just one slight change that we would have made. At the lower right of the cut there is the sentence, "Famous Saturday Evening Post story by George Weston," and then at the left, "Founded on 'Salt of the Earth.'" All of this should have been together with the last line preceding the other matter. As it is the effect is disconnected.

The cut used is so out of the ordinary that it is bound to get attention and we are willing to admit that this is one occasion where it was wise to even sacrifice the beauty of Miss Ferguson to get the effect. The selling argument is specially good. It reads:

> With eyes of the world, the world saw him, a blinded soldier; called him a hero—and passed on.
> But she saw him with the eyes of her soul; knew that he had given his sight to save a wounded comrade—heard him sing:
> "If I am happy though I cannot see,
> "How very, very happy all of you should be."
> It was one of the songs he had made up over there—"To cheer other poor devils who were worse off than I."
> So her great woman's heart went out, not to a "hero" but to a man, and—
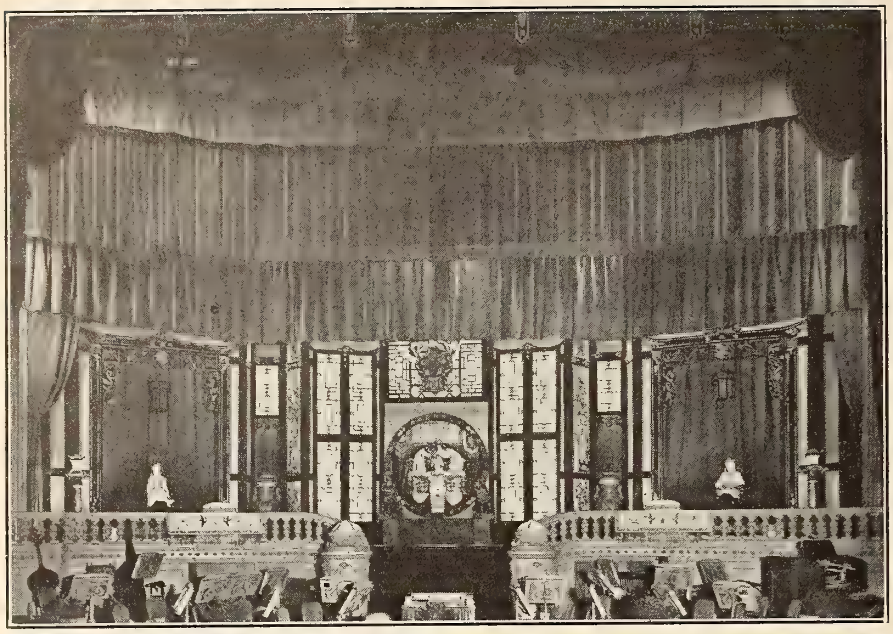
> But see Elsie Ferguson in this picture—a powerful, beautiful story of these days when the boys come home.

Other subjects on the program are just mentioned and therefore the selling arguments on the feature is all the stronger.



Throne hall of purple effulgence with a 60-foot setting at the California theatre, Los Angeles

California Theatre, Los Angeles, Reproduces Chinese Throne Room for "Red Lantern" Showing

ECLIPSING previous efforts of Los Angeles motion picture theatres in the matter of elaborate atmosphere creating settings, the California theatre has given its thousands of patrons during the two weeks showing of "The Red Lantern," a most wonderful added feature. This consisted of reproduction of the scene from the play representing the East Room of the Chinese Imperial Palace and was built under the direction of Presentation Director Harry Leonhardt of the theatre by Stage Manager Norman K. Wistler.

The prologue followed an overture by the orchestra of thirty-five. At the end of the Chinese music the great velvet curtain extending the full width and depth of the mammoth proscenium arch, sixty feet wide by forty feet in height, was raised and mystic lighting effect on transparent setting which taxes the size of the stage to the utmost gave the entire theatre an oriental atmosphere.

When the lights came on in full girls representing the daughters of the Manchu court officials gave the signal for the opening of the circular door, the only place of egress to the throne room of the Chinese empress. This door was beautifully decorated with Chinese dragons which was materially emphasized by the moving light effects. The door raised in the same manner as the one in the throne room scene of the play. When the throne room was opened Miss Paula Dohrmann, an operatic soprano, costumed in the role of Huang Tai Hou, Empress Dowager and Daughter of Heaven, was seen seated on the throne in the center and a moment later came to the opening and sang "Poor Mahlee," composed especially for "The Red Lantern" presentation by Louis Dimond, California organist.

The setting had more than one hundred lineal feet of scenery and had a backing of a lower curtain which required more than a mile of rope to hang, these curtains were of the imperial green shade reserved for the use of Chinese imperial households only, and its use being forbidden for any other purpose in the empire. The entire set was an exact reproduction of the room in the imperial palace known as Tzu Kuang Ko, or "throne hall of purple effulgence."

The musical program or setting for "The Red Lantern," at the California, was of particular importance, Nicola Donatelli, director of California orchestra of thirty five composed an overture especially for the presentation which has been named "The Red Lantern." Other musical numbers during the presentation were as follows: "In a Chinese Tea Room" (Langey); "Madame Butterfly" (Puccini); "A Chinese Allegretto" (Puerner); "Japanese Reverie" (Bartlett); "A Chinese Episode" (Kelley); "Iris" (Reynard); "A Japanese Sunset" (Deppen); "Sarashi" from Suite Japonaise (Yamada); "Kappore" from Suite Janonaise (Yamada); "Faithfulness" (Brahms), and "In the Garden."

COOPERATION

Omaha Chamber of Commerce Aids the Theatres

HOW a Chamber of Commerce can cooperate with the theatres and get business for the city as a whole is shown in a campaign that is being conducted out of Omaha. The commercial body of that city is so thoroughly converted to advertising that the various appeals of the city are being advertised in all of the daily papers in Nebraska, western Iowa, southern South Dakota, Wyoming, and in the Denver Post.

One of those recently appearing in these papers called attention to the fact that Omaha is an amusement center and stressed the point of motion pictures. The drawing used at the top is of a handsome motion picture house, suggestive of the Rialto, Omaha.

H. M. Thomas, live wire manager of that house, comments: "This simply proves my old contention that if you cooperate with the civic bodies of a city they will do their part in turn."

Lamoreaux Outdoes His Brilliant Efforts With Presentation of "The Red Lantern"

SCORE one more for W. C. Lamoreaux, manager of the Chateau theatre, Chicago, and an exhibitor who knows how to do things really worth while. This theatre of the Ascher Brothers is rapidly becoming known as one of the leading presentation houses of the country because of the attention to the artistic side that is being given by its director.

This latest endeavor came with the showing of Nazimova in "The Red Lantern." Several weeks before the first showing Mr. Lamoreaux began to make use of the lobby for advance exploitation. The lobby was transformed into a Chinese street. Quaint houses with thatched and green tile roofs, a mass of colors in the beautifully decorated walls, banners of many hues and lanterns everywhere gave the atmosphere of Oriental abandon.

In the center of the street stood the house of a Mandarin with carved orange lacquer doors and its peculiar pillared portico. Across the street was a wisteria covered gome on another wealthy Chinese, great panels with blue and white birds flanking the doors. On either side of the portico here stood jewelled trees, one with garnet leaves and pale blue and orange glass flowers,—the other shyly displaying milk white and crystal blooms.

Then toward the entrance to the temple there was a strange formed frowning god. There was a triple archway of bamboo leading up to the temple door which was a great ebony arch inlaid with mother of pearl and through this one viewed the high altar and the ten-armed Goddess of Destruction. Great folds of red satin curtains swept down behind the figure and these were lighted so as to give the glow of angry, red fire. In the dimly lighted sanctuary the walls were shrouded in black, great temple tapestries, heavily embroidered, swept majestically to the floor and on either side of the entrance were two panels of gorgeously wrought flowers and birds, great discs of blue, black and golden fish.

In a space to the left of the altar there stood a silver bird studded profusely with red. Down the semi-circular vista there appeared the dim outlines of gold and silver clustered foliage or perhaps great strings of lustrous beads hung in sweeping festoons.

Patrons were called into the theatre proper with the sound of Chinese gongs and when the curtain parted it was to show the same brilliant effects carried out on the stage. This represented the interior of a Chinese temple with three lacquered arches carved in flower, bird and dragon designs. The front arch was a rich purple-brown, the second vermillion and the third a brilliant yellow, all three framing the inner scene, a wall of blue and green splashed with silver and a great circle bound with ebony rim through which a vista of jewels could be seen. The first curtain was of woven silver, clustered with emeralds and brilliants, the second of woven gold with rubies and topaz, the third a mass of brilliants.

Silhouetted against the curtains in the front of the circle reposed a huge jade figure of Buddha resting on an ebony altar. On either side of the figure were masses of metallic flowers and to the left two great incense burners. As the curtains parted one by one they finally revealed a temple dancer who performed a ritualistic dance of the sacrifice. The costumes worn by Mrs. Moor, the dancer, were unusually brilliant. The outer garment was a coat of cloth of gold with a jeweled disc on the back. During the course of the dance the outer robe was dropped, displaying a gorgeous garment of misty blue-sea green, purple and cold pink veils embroidered in silver. At the conclusion of the dance the curtains slowly closed and the screen curtain came down, the picture immediately starting.

Here's the world's record breaking advertisement

"Double Truck" on One Picture Sets New Advertising Record—Even for Seattle

BACK in the days when motion picture theatre advertising began to be a thing for newspapers to consider the Seattle Times was out hitting the trail ahead. It has always been one of the leaders and often THE leader in the motion picture-advertising field. And with this progress the name of George H. Bellman, motion picture editor and amusement advertising manager, has always been connected.

When Bellman started out to get advertising from the theatres he believed that he had something more to do than to simply sell space. He sold ideas with that space. He gathered together the clipping from the Motion Picture News and from the leading advertisers of the country and had some concrete proposition to put before the potential advertiser when he went to him.

It was eight years ago that Bellman started his work and his path has always been clear, a straight road for other newspapers to follow. One of the first stories about newspaper cooperation that appeared in these pages told of the success of the Seattle Times in getting the exhibitors to advertise—to use large space and to use it wisely. We are not even taking the trouble to look back and get the figures showing the inches that were used, but, at any rate, they were sufficiently impressive to induce many papers to start motion picture departments.

And the increase has kept up. In 1915 there were 55,000 inches carried. The next year there was a jump to 64,000 and in 1917 the figure was 80,000. Last year there was an increase to 90,000. And one remarkable thing is that out of this staggering total there was not even a single inch charged off by the newspaper on account of the non-payment of a bill.

This leads up to the fact that Mr. Bellman has just put over another world's record, forty columns of advertising on a single picture.——"The Unpardonable Sin." So far as we know the Seattle Times is the first paper to carry a "double truck" or two page advertisement on a single picture, and this is only part of the campaign that covered two weeks. And in that Sunday issue of the Times there was a total of 41 columns or more than five solid pages of advertising carried.

type too large as well as too small, so that it may easily be understood. In this display, the uniform word spacing and white space between each line make it easily read.

"The Turn in the Road": Titles such as this often suggest a background or possibly an unusual arrangement of the photographs. In this display, the use of different type, illustrates how many facts can be made clear.

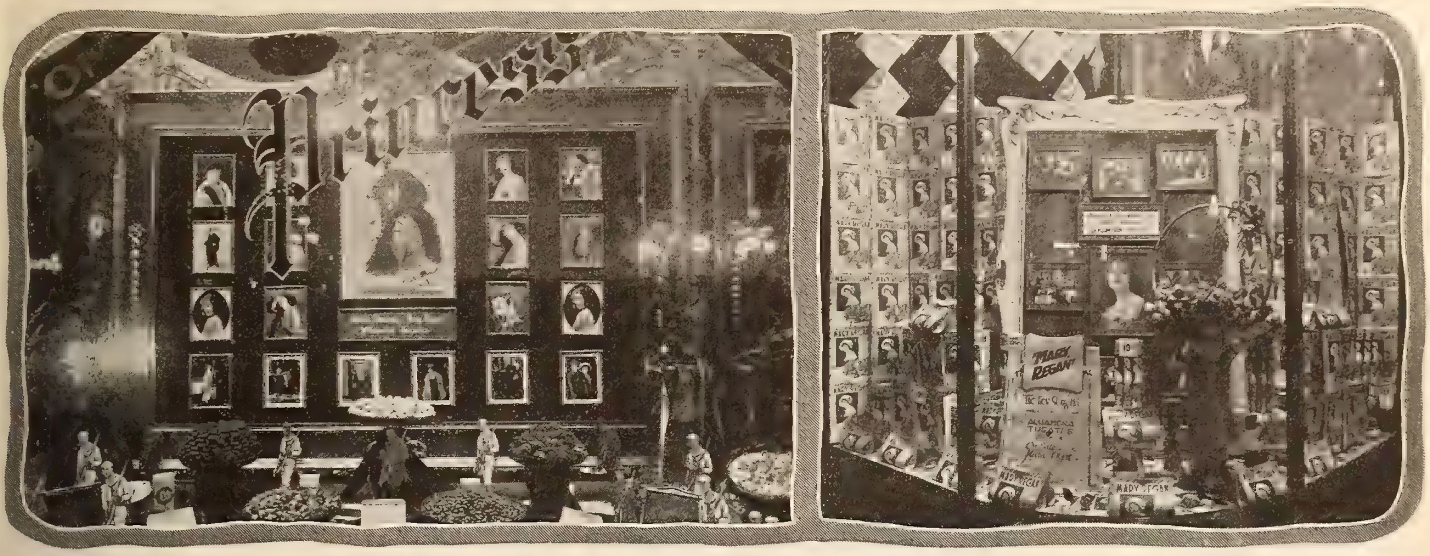
"The Woman on the Index": Where punch is required, single figures as a rule are very difficult to use. In this display, I have used one in conjunction with another "Still," which is in keeping with the selling power. Adding beautiful gown to mystery, I felt I was reaching both sexes.

Striking Musical Score Used at Broadway for "The Man Who Turned White"

IN preparing the Special Service Section "The Man Who Turned White" for the Motion Picture News we called especial attention to the musical possibilities of this picture. James C. Bradford, musical director of the Broadway Theatre, has arranged a splendid score which he has given us for the benefit of others who are to show this production later.

At screening, showing the desert with bands of Bedouin horsemen flitting over the sands, "In the Sudan," by Sebek, is played until the title, "Of all white men the one who—", where a quiet romantic scene between Capt. Beverly and Ethel Lambert (Barbara Castleton) is developed. During this episode "Egyptia," of Zamecnik, is played softly. When Ethel discovers that Ali (Warner) is a white man, "Melody of Love," by Engelmann, the love theme, is played until Ethel mounts horse and leaves, when a few strains of Tosti's "Good-bye" takes her out of scene. At the title, "In the ancient village of Mzab," the "Indian Legend," of Barron, is used with splendid atmospheric effect, and continued until the interior of the wine-shop is shown, with many scenes of Oriental dances, when the orchestra glides into Liuginis "Egyptian Ballet," Nos. 1 and 2. When Ethel enters the cafe and is recognized by Warner the love theme is repeated, and after she leaves the cafe No. 3 of the "Egyptian Suite" is played until the intermission.

The organ then takes up the score at the title, "With the passing days," playing the "Song Without Words," by Rebikov, with a repetition of the love theme when Warner and Miss Castleton are seated in the garden. The Love Theme is continued until the title, "He deserved it, and I knew—," when Grieg's "Heart Wounds" and "The Last Spring" synchronize with beautiful effect, followed by a misterioso and agitato until the conspirators are seen saddling their horses. A sinister misterioso is used at this point and continued until title, "She's gone straight into Joudar's—" etc. The orchestra takes up the music at this title with the rousing and charactteristic "Egyptian March," of Johann Strauss, which is played until the death scene of Capt. Beverly, where "Visions," of Tschiakowsky is used until the end.



At the left, how the Princess Confectionery, next door to the theatre, cooperated through a wonderful window display carrying pictures of Miss Stewart, and advertising "Mary Regan Kisses." At right, the sort of cooperation Mr. Fischer gets from Woolworth's store

Fischer Gets Window Displays for Two Weeks in His Exploitation of "Mary Regan"

GEORGE Fischer, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, is a strong believer in window displays in advertising big pictures, especially where he has one that couples up well with some particular phase of the picture. He has just shown what can be done by the way that he put over such displays for the latest Anita Stewart production, "Mary Regan."

A week previous to the showing of the picture Mr. Fischer induced the Woolworth store to sell and display copies of the song of the same name as the picture and bearing a portrait of the star. There was a splendid window display given this, and there also appeared artistically designed announcements that the picture was to be seen at the Alhambra the following week, together with some of the scenes from the production. The song was sung at the theatre at every performance during that week.

For the week of the showing he arranged with the Princess Confectionery Company for a special display of candies, and pictures of Miss Stewart. The candy people featured "Mary Regan kisses" in their window display, and the report is that not only was this splendid advertising for the theatre but that the candy itself sold with surpassing speed, partly because of the attention that was attracted to its display through the use of pictures of Miss Stewart in the window. When people heard the song at the Alhambra and then passed the Princess display it was hard to resist the temptation to go in and buy.

While the Alhambra is one of the most liberal users of newspaper advertising, Mr. Fischer is a very strong believer in these displays when he can get the co-operation of really high-class business houses on the principal streets. When the Alhambra was built there was no thought of the angle of selling a picture just as one would sell goods, and so such display space was not provided. However, Mr. Fischer arranged with the Princess confectionery, which is right next door, to co-operate with him, and now arrangements are made several weeks ahead of each picture that lends itself to that sort of display and some novelty is arranged. There isn't the slightest doubt that this has considerably increased the business of both theatre and candy store.

Trouble about the window display game is that exhibitors have worked it to death with many of the merchants, especially in cases where the merchant himself could get no benefit. It used to be the custom of the "arm chair" exhibitor in New York, when he could think of no other exploitation suggestion, to advise getting window displays. Of course, it is all very nice if the merchant will come across and turn his windows over to you, but it won't be long before he will be asking where he comes in. But the moment that he sees business increasing as the result he is sure to be the exhibitors co-worker for life.

Mr. Fischer always puts his window displays on that basis. He doesn't try to simply grab space from a merchant, but to prove to him how the stunt can make money all around. And so now when he asks for window space there is seldom any hesitancy in granting his request in full.

Eugene H. Roth, of the California, San Francisco, is another who has made a great success with this, even to the point of co-operating with the music dealers so that they can have displays on the songs his soloists are rendering and the music his orchestra is playing at the California. Result: Big advertising for all concerned.

Window displays do pay—as an addition to newspaper advertising—but when you want to try one go to the merchant with some concrete proposition and an eye to his profit as well as your own.

You don't have to wait until July to acquire a thirst for better exploitation methods.

HE'S LOSING SLEEP

And He's Going to Charge Us Up with a Vacation

HERE is a letter that we value highly. For obvious reasons we are not printing the name, but anyone interested can have the information:

"You people on the News needn't be surprised if you get a bill from my doctor and charge for vacation. You've got me losing the whole night's sleep once a week when my copy arrives. At first I didn't pay much attention to the suggestions in the Exhibitors Service Bureau and the Special Service Sections. Then I nibbled and began to try those ideas. Now you have me swallowing everyone of them that apply to pictures I have booked. Result is that I am putting in the total of about two more days into my seven days work.

"Seriously, there would be a wonderful growth if every exhibitor would read these every week. My business has increased ten per cent in the last year in spite of the various handicaps. You need't worry about that vacation bill; I am better able to pay it myself than I ever was before."

"Watch the Clock" Successful Slogan for This One

were told through the newspapers that 5,000 people saw Anita Stewart in "A Midnight Romance" on Thursday, "5,000 people will want to see it today," they were advised, and further advice was that they "come early and get a seat." Of course, on the last day the picture advertised itself and a small advertisement was sufficient.

The picture had one thing in its favor. Thursday, Friday and Saturday are splendid show days in Harrisburg. But no record ever surpassed the one registered by "A Midnight Romance."

A feature of the showing was the lobby display. Painted clock faces were posted everywhere, and attracted much attention.

How New York Stages the Show

FOR the first time since the opening of the Rivoli the three New York theatres are not showing three new bills this week, since the Rivoli is again showing Nazimova in " The Red Lantern."

All of the same music and settings are used, the only changes being that Educational's " A Trip Through China " takes the place of a somewhat similar Prizma picture, and Mutt and Jeff in " Hands Up " takes the place of the same pair in " Sir Sidney." Account of the original presentation was given in the May 22 issue.

Strand is showing the latest Griffith production, " True Heart Susie," with a special musical setting, and the ladies quartette in old songs as a prelude. While there is lots of comedy in the feature the slap stick is supplied by a Lyons-Moran chase affair, " Waiting at the Church," and there is an Outing-Chester scenic, and, of course, the topical.

Feature at the Rialto is Tom Moore in " One of the Finest," where again there is a lot of comedy, and then there is a cartoon comedy, Judge Rumhauser in " The Sawdust Trail," a new Robert Bruce scenic, " Men Met in the Mountains," and probably the longest and most varied magazines ever given at one of the " R " houses.

Next week Dr. Riesenfeld will again bring back a picture for a second week, but not at the same theatre. Douglas Fairbank's " Knickerbocker Buckaroo " which played last week at the Rivoli will be shown at the Rialto, and at the Rivoli the attraction will be " The Woman Thou Gavest Me." Strand will have Olive Thomas in " Upstairs and Down."

Rialto Theatre

WITH comedy predominating, there is certainly plenty of variety on the bill at the Rialto this week, including one of the most interesting Rialto Magazines on record. Music is another of the attractions, with the organ carrying a considerable portion of the feature and the orchestra left available for the remainder of the numbers.

Lights are in gold for the overture, "Euryanthe," which is called "a grand heroic romantic opera." It is not an ordinary selection and under the direction of Dr. Riesenfeld, himself, when he heard it, it got enormous applause from a crowd that was weakened by a very hot day. As a matter of fact, when people come to the Rialto with the thermometer the way that it has been in New York this week and frantically applaud the numbers, they must be good.

"Men Met in the Mountains," is the Robert Bruce scenic this week. This seemed to us to be rather scattered bits of scenic wonders, introducing a different man with each shift of location to break the monotony. Bruce and his two dogs appear through this picture which includes some particularly fine shots of falls and then some snow bits that are especially welcome on a hot day. "Down in the South" from "Two American Sketches" is the orchestral music, part of the accompaniment being carried on the organ.

Sascha Fidelman, who always evidences that his heart is in his playing, then renders as a violin solo a paraphrase from "Lucia di Lammermoor." For this the house lights are all in blue, the orchestra bathed in blue and a spot on the soloist.

Rialto Magazine opens with Pathe pictures of San Francisco's greeting to the returned sailor boys. There are particularly fine shots of the marching men that get a lot of applause and particularly one that shows them carrying a 800 foot battleship streamer. "Yankee Tar" is the music here. International shows us pictures of wounded soldiers being taught the secrets of bee culture at Washington and then Gaumont gives us a flash of "Just Kiddies," a touch of human interest. "The Bees Wedding" is played. Pathe shows pictures of the ruins of the starch factory fire in Cedar Rapids in which eleven were killed. The third movement of "Dramatic Music" is used with these, and continues through Gaumont scenes of a street car that jumped the track in Chicago endangering the lives of forty.

Kinograms presents pictures of British naval officers visiting Rheims, shown to organ music with the effects of chimes for the scenes in which the wrecked cathedral are shown. Now this picture is simply preparing the audience for the impressive views that follow. International pictures of the removal of the body of Edith Cavell, martyr to Hun blood lust, from Brussels to England. Organ and muffled drums are used for these scenes showing the removal of the body, the parade with the coffin on a caisson and then the final scene at the station. The final scene shows the four men who plead for the life of the brave English nurse, but there was no applause when we saw the picture for the very reason that the music was so impressive one could not respond to enthusiasm.

Gaumont then shows us pictures of guests landing from a dirigible balloon on the roof of a Cleveland, O., hotel and here "Violets," starting after the waltz is played and continuing through the next two pictures. Pathe shows us the new British tri-plane, "the Felixtowe Fury" and then Gaumont informs us that "even the women are doing it" and we have pictures of Miss Sylvia Borden making a parachute leap. At the point where she takes the leap the orchestra becomes tacet, except for effects and a drum rumble as we see the parachute coming down. Now the waltz is played with Kinogram pictures of the NC-4 and Lieut. Read. These were taken at Ponta Delgada and show her arrival there and then on her start for Portugal. There are also pictures of the NC-3 which was lost in the fog. Effects are used liberally with these. Follows a cartoon entitled "The progress of civilization," showing the evolution of methods of crossing the Atlantic and here extracts from "Rivoli Overture" are used and carried through "Sayings of Topplitsky." One of these goes: "Don't believe everything that you read. The fellow that said figures don't lie never saw corsets." And: "The best man at a wedding is the man who goes home single" with a whack at prohibition in: "After July come the dog day, but after July this year the dogs won't be the only ones with their tongues hanging out."

Kinograms then shows some views from the million dollar libel suit of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune being tried at Mt. Clemens, Mich, and then come Gaumont pictures of honors for Hank Gowdy, the first big league baseball player to enlist, at Boston. "Forget Me Not" is played through both of these, changing to "Victory Loan March" for Pathe pictures of a wrecked hull being turned into a new ship at Stonington, Conn. Gaumont shows pictures of the Harvard boat crew training and International presents Wellesley college girls rowing and then playing baseball, while there is a third of the rowing series with Gen. Pershing seeing the American crew beaten by New Zealanders at Paris. "Keep Going" is the music for all three of these. These lead up to the final punch which come with two pictures from Gaumont. The first shows British overseas veterans in their farewell march and being reviewed by the Prince of Wales. "Boys of Tipperary" is played with this and then comes Gen. Joffre decorating student heroes to the accompaniment of "La pere de la Victoire."

With all the lights red Martin Brefel and Eduoard Albano then sing the duet from "Otello."

"One of the Finest" with Tom Moore as the star is largely comedy. "Caressing Butterfly," the theme, is played at the screening and then with the title "There was a policeman" there is a change to No. one of "Children's Suite" and then with the title "Not exactly police commissioner" there is another change to "Follow the Girl." Then when we see the girl going to her father "Silhouette" is played. Then we see the girl taking her regular morning ride along the same route "You Bet" is used. Then when we are told that a man's job doesn't mean anything to Hudson, and that he is having Larry transferred "Bees" is played. Then when we see him with the kid there's a change to "Clematis" and with the title "The Irish smile that she can't forget" we have "Go Get 'Em." With the title "Four years old" "April Buds" is used and then with the view of the Hayes' dinner table a change to "April Buds" with a pause for the scene where grace is said. This is very effective.

With the scene at the wedding at the Hudson home "After All" is played and then as the orchestra in the picture is seen to start playing again there is a change to "I Gathered a Rose" and when the girl tells him that she is not always a snob "Kisses" is played, the organ taking up the music with "A few days later." This continues until the girl, after seeing Larry with Nellie Andrews demands to know who the woman is and here "Under the Leaves" is played, changing to a numbered selection as Andrews points the pistol. The theme is brought in where the girl asks Larry whether he can forgive her and played to the end.

Lights are all gold for the second orchestral number, selections from "High Jinks" and then comes the comedy, a Judge Rumhauser cartoon released by Educational, "The Sawdust Trail." All sorts of effects are used during the circus scenes of the Judge, charmed by the lady performer and "Dead Eye Dick," the villain. The selections used are: "Can You Tame Wild Women?", "Geraldine," "Wild Honey" and "Good Bye Alexander."

Schubert's "Marche Militaire" is the final organ solo.

Strand Theatre

FOR the showing of D. W. Griffith's newest picture, "Treue Heart Susie," Managing Director Joseph Plunkett is carrying out at the Strand this week our idea of what the music should be. In fact, in the Special Service Section on this picture printed in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week we advised that the music be of a high class and this is certainly the case at the Strand. The score is worth following in full.

There is an old-fashioned spirit to this picture and this has been well carried out at the Strand by having the ladies' quartette sing a couple of old songs, "Sunbonnet Sue" and "The Old Oaken Bucket" just before the picture starts and then carrying the strains into the feature. It gets the audience "set right" for the scenes that follow and adds greatly to the general enjoyment of the whole presentation.

Excerpts from "Aida" form the overture this week. As you know this is the tragic story of the love of an Egyptian prince for a beautiful captured Ethiopian slave girl and the Egyptian idea is splendidly carried out in the settings. The lights of the house are all dimmed down before the curtain rises and the number starts with the brasses and organ full, the gold lights on the stage slowly fading down to blue. Then the curtains part revealing the figure of the Sphynx in the foreground and pyramids in the background with the moon slowly coming from behind one of the latter, the lighting coming up gradually with the moon. The latter part of this is carried as a trombone solo.

Strand Topical opens with the Pathe pictures of the returning sailors at San Francisco to the music of "Blue Jackets," followed by views of the "Felixtowe Fury" to the accompaniment of "Fighting Tommies." Then there are a lot of laughs with Topics of the day including these: "Germany is getting off easy. She might have had prohibition forced on her." "These are the days of the miracle. Every time we get the right number on the phone it's a miracle!" "Lenine's army has been whipped on three fronts! Says a dispatch. If that's the case a few kicks in the rear ought to settle it." "Birch Canoe" is used during these.

Then follow the impressive International pictures of the removal of the body of Edith Cavell, which we have already described and during these "Beethoven Funeral March" is played. Pathe pictures of Gen. Pershing awarding Distinguished Service Medals to French soldiers is the signal for a great deal of applause and then more as we see him reviewing the French veterans. A close up of the American commander stirs the enthusiasm still further. "March Lorraine" is played. Now we have Pathe's version of "First Across." There are first shown pictures of the wrecked NC-3 at Ponta Delgada and a close up of the crew after they leave the ship to a big hand. Then there are pictures of the NC-4 and then we see her off for Lisbon and here we have the effects reproduced. "Glory of the Navy" is played for these with a change to "Yankee Doodle" for the cartoon showing the change in the methods of crossing the Atlantic.

Now we have the musical introduction to the feature, which we have already mentioned as so well carried out. We have a few bars on the harp and then the curtains part revealing a beautiful southern setting with the four members of the Strand Ladies Quartette dressed in cool and simple attire in the foreground and stretching away in the background a field, to the left the negroes' cabins. In the foreground, too, are two blooming cherry trees and in the centre about which the girls are grouped, a vine covered well. As they sing there is the effect of fireflies in the sky "Sunbonnet Sue" is the first selection and then "The Old Oaken Bucket."

Immediately at the end of the second song the screen curtain comes down and the orchestra takes "The Old Oaken Bucket" into the picture, following with "Sunbonnet Sue" and then following through with "Children's Games." At the scene where William is seen cutting his and Susie's initial in the tree "Rose and Memories," the theme, is introduced. At the scene where she and the boy are going to the neighboring town "Flirty Flirts" is played and then with the title telling us that the passing days bring no letters there is a change to "Call of the Angelus" and then where Susie is seen posting the letter containing the money "Shepherds Dream at Rondeau" is used.

"Then You'll Remember Me" is aptly used for the scene with William leaving for college. Then with the change to the scene where he is working as a waiter at the college "Bim Bims" is used up to the point where Susie is seen reading William's letter and the theme is brought in again. Then for the fight a furioso is played and when he tells the boys that Bill and not Butter is his name "Little Villagers' Dance" accompanies. Now we have William coming back to the home town, plus a moustache and many airs, and at the point where he calls at Susie's house "In Meadowland" is played up to the scene in the store where the two "flappers" from Brightville are seen and then we have "Cherry Blossoms." For the introduction of Betty Hopkins, the little milliner, "Most Anything" is used as this is at a dance and then with the milliner coming to visit her aunt the organ takes up the accompaniment and continues for twenty-two minutes.

Orchestra comes back with the scene where Betty rails at her husband with a dramatic effect and then with Susie's dinner "An Old World Garden" is used. Then we have a scene with Sporty, his crowd and the young wife dancing at the minister's house, while one of the girls plays the piano and here we have a rag time dance on the piano alone. The scene changes to that of Susie about to destroy William's letters and here the theme is used again, going back to piano effects as a fox trot with William coming to his home and hearing the music. There is a sharp pause and silence with the girl at the piano stopping suddenly and for the dramatic scenes that follow "Fourteen Fathoms Deep" is played. Then with the title "There are single track hearts" we again get the delightful theme.

With the scene of William and his wife at their home there is a change to "Schubert Songs" and we have the auto effects with the scenes in the car and then with the arrival at the Roadhouse "How Ya' Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm" is played. Where the girl is seen jumping over a chair "Woodland Echoes" accompanies. Then when we see Betty making her confession to Susie "Romance" is played and then the title "Your Wife Was Nervous" the organ takes up the music and carries it through the death scene until almost the end of the picture, when at the title "Freed at last from his vows" "Roses and Memories" is played to the end.

"Where the Screen Tree Grows" is the title of the Outing-Chester. Here we have the camera hunters making a trip from Key West to some of the little islands and there are some fine shots of the various tropical birds, including kingfishers, man-of-war birds, herons and egrets and then there is a wonderful shot at the end when the "screen tree" is discovered. The dead limbs are seen covered with birds and there are some remarkable close-ups. Organ music is used.

Preludes used at Grauman's, Los Angeles, for "Greased Lightning" and "Knickerbocker Buckaroo"

New York's Way

There is a surprising finish to the Lyons-Moran comedy, "Waiting at the Church." This is largely chase stuff and one is led to the belief that what the bride and the crowd are waiting for is the wedding ring, which the groom and the best man go to find, meeting all sorts of troubles. But as a matter of fact it is someone to play the wedding march and there is a huge roar of laughter with the flash of the muchly battered organist and then the wedding march on the organ. Prior to this the orchestral selections are: "Razzle Dazzle," "My Barney Lies Over the Ocean," "Gates of Gladness," "Singapore" and "Hindoo Lady."

Debut-Pouson's "Sherzo" is the final organ solo.

Unusual Campaign Book Gets Spirit of Rothapfel Program

Embracing all angles of exploitation and picturing the list of aids supplied to the exhibitor, an unusual press book has just been issued on the First Rothapfel Unit program. It consists of twenty pages of material that ought to afford the exhibitor the fullest insight into his material and aid him in getting the spirit of Mr. Rothapfel in creating this form of amusement.

As would be expected from the character of the program the advertising and most of the posters differ from the ordinary style. Artistry is evident in all of this and at the same time there is dignity and distinctiveness. For instance, most of the advertising and the cuts of the players are surrounded with the proscenium border that has been used in the advertising in the trade papers. Especially in the case of the larger cuts the exhibitor can use these as the top piece, or "eye getter," and then follow the same design in his border with the matter of his own below.

One of the one-sheets lists the elements on the program with the caption "Complete from overture to final curtain." The 24-sheet carries the same idea with an excerpt from a New York Times editorial at the left and a letter from the Woman's Forum at the right. The other one-sheet is built on the comedy alone and the three and six sheets on dramatic scenes from the feature.

Suggestions of Mr. Rothapfel and reviews of his career as an exhibitor are included. The double spread in the center of the book reproduces the review of the premiere showing from MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Interesting House Organ Issued By Toronto Theatre

One of the most attractive programs that has come to our attention is being issued by Allen's Bloor Street theatre, Toronto. It is eight pages, 6¼ by 9¼ inches, and the only advertising is at the bottom of the pages. The booklet is called "Shadowland."

Page three is devoted to the "Music Lovers' Column," and here there are listed some of the numbers played during the feature. There are talks on music or instruments by a member of the orchestra each week, the issue at hand telling about the saxophone.

The Bloor changes its bill twice a week and one page is given to each program, another to talks about the features for the following week, and still another devoted to questions and answers.

Song Helps Exploit "Good Gracious Annabelle"

"Good Gracious Annabelle," a new song which has just been published by McCarthy and Fisher, offers additional exploitation aids for those who are still to show Billie Burke in the picture of that name. The song itself has nothing to do with the picture, but the cover of the music bears a striking picture of Miss Burke with the picture starring Billie Burke in "Good Gracious Annabelle."

It offers another excellent chance to tie up with music dealers who can display copies of the song, and then all the exhibitor needs is a card stating that he will show the picture on a certain date. The publishers have prepared a special slide which gives the catchy chorus.

Speeding Auto Electrifies Crowd During Grauman Showing of "Greased Lightning"

DURING the showing of the latest Charles Ray production, "Greased Lightning," this week added a bit of realism to the race scenes that fairly raised the audiences to their feet at every performance at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles.

Behind the screen and in front of a loosely draped black curtain, a duplicate of Ray's badly battered car was suspended silghtly above the stage. At a tense moment in the race, the screen was raised and the picture faded out leaving the audience staring at what was apparently the real car with its driver bent low over the wheel tearing along through space at an unbelievable speed.

The speed effect was secured by the play of red and blue lights over the stage and by the fluttering of the black curtain behind the car stirred into ripples by an electric fan located just ahead of the machine and out of sight of the audience. This and the spinning wheels and the wide open exhaust created an unusually convincing illusion. The whole contrivance was simplicity itself but cut in, as it was, at the psychological moment in the race, it served to start the audiences to cheering as few of Grauman's previous successful novelties have done.

Last week as a prelude to Fairbanks' "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," Grauman duplicated a western scene from the production and used it as a back ground for a group of cow-puncher violinists to give several selections. The set was simple but effective, reflecting the wester atmosphere of the film and was rendered more impressive by the proper use of varicolored lights of a subdued sun-set glow. The novelty was well received and led into the spirit of the feature itself.

Live News from the Producers

Apfel Commences Second Play for World

Having finished "Phil For Short" with Evelyn Greeley as the star, his first production under his three year contract with World Pictures, Oscar Apfel has started on his second, "Bringing Up Betty," a Charles Sarver story with Miss Greeley in the stellar role. Mr. Apfel believes that notwithstanding, a director has been given a good story, he should not overlook the necessity of having a cast that is capable of interpreting the roles provided by the author. "It is inviting failure," says Mr. Apfel, "to let a matter of a thousand dollars or even more, influence a producer in selecting actors who can play a part but only indifferently.

Miss Greeley will have in her support Ben Johnson, well known on the legitimate stage.

Size Contrast with Willard Scared Arline

It would appear from a recent statement of Arline Pretty, that the size and bulk of Jess Willard makes a rather staggering impression at first meeting. Miss Pretty, who ordinarily is not at all timid confesses she was a little—just a little—frightened when it was first proposed to her that she appear in pictures with the champion heavyweight.

"He was so big, and I so small," said Miss Pretty. "But his voice reassured me, and I found him a gentleman in every way."

Name Feminine Lead in Universal Serial

Peggy O'Dare, formerly of Sunshine Comedies and later in L-Ko subjects, has been chosen to play the leading feminine role in Universal's "The Thirteenth Hour." She is in decided contrast to Eddie Polo, who is star of the serial, being of blonde inclination.

Miss O'Dare is said to be an excellent swimmer and diver, and a daring motorist.

Herbert Howe Returns

Herbert Howe, well known as a press agent in New York film circles, has returned to his desk at Vitagraph, from which he departed over a year ago for service in the tank corps in France. Mr. Howe is one of the most popular press agents in the field. He made his bow in film circles with the Triangle company and then joined Vitagraph. He has also handled publicity for individuals with great success.

Robertson-Cole Has Big Plans

Will Not Let Summer Dullness Interfere with Prospects it Foresees in Production and Distribution

Sessue Hayakawa Watches Her Assimilate the Caucasian Woman's Perquisite in "The Courageous Coward," a Robertson-Cole Offering through Exhibitors' Mutual

THE usual slack prevalent in the motion picture industry in the hot summer months will receive no recognition from Robertson-Cole according to the announcement of officials of the concern. There will be no material let-up in their production activities, nor in the selling efforts of Exhibitors Mutual. Confidence is felt that business will maintain the fast pace it has reached in the past three months.

Working in conjunction with the officials of Exhibitors Mutual, through which all its pictures are released, Robertson-Cole has formulated a plan which will insure the exhibitor a stream of pictures during the trying period between now and the fall.

It has now been definitely decided that the following productions, every one of which will bear the personal guarantee of quality of Robertson-Cole, will be released through Exhibitors Mutual in the course of the summer:

Sessue Hayakawa, in "His Debt"; Billie Rhodes, in "In Search of Arcady"; Henry B. Warner in the first Superior Picture, "The Man Who turned White," which last week started an indefinite run at the Broadway theatre; Bessie Barriscale, in "Tangled Threads"; William Desmond in "Bare-Fisted Gallagher", succeeding "The Mints of Hell", a snow picture which will make an ideal summer attraction; "Better Times", second of the Brentwood series by King W. Vidor, creator of "The Turn in the Road," and Beatrice Michelena in "The Deadline."

Then there are "The Love Call," with Billie Rhodes; Henry B. Walthall in "Modern Husbands"; Beatrice Michelena, in "Just Squaw"; Bessie Barriscale in "Josselyn's Wife", and William Desmond in "The Mints of Hell", which are now producing big results wherever they are exhibited.

Fox's Studio Culmination of Long Dream

"A DREAM of years, come true." That is what the Fox studios when built in New York, will be. For years, according to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, William Fox has planned in his mind every wall of the projected studio, every inch in it.

Thus it is that when he engaged an architect to draw up the detailed plans his own plans were ready, and proved of substantial aid to the architect.

In laying out the plans for the new Fox Building which is now in course of construction at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, Manhattan, within two minutes of Broadway, Mr. Fox was governed by four principles: The plant must be of a size never before attempted in the film industry; it must be scientifically efficient; it must be as safe as it is humanly possible to make a building, and it must contain features to insure the bodily comfort and welfare of the employees.

The reason for the immense size of the structure—it covers almost an entire city block in the heart of New York City with a floor space of 150,000 square feet—is that every building Mr. Fox ever built or leased had proved inadequate to meet the rapid expansion ot his business. This scrapping of building and shifting into new quarters was wasteful, and he decided this new plant should be of a size that would give the organization elbow room.

Mr. Fox has always believed that the health of a concern's employees is one of its greatest assets. Accordingly, in drawing up his plans he insisted upon placing in the building employee conveniences.

Cleveland Branch Manager

Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House, Inc., announces that Nate Fleischer has been made manager of the Film Clearing House, Cleveland branch, succeeding W. J. Haggerty.

Holmes Hesitates for Interview

Frank Leonard Finds His Views Very Interesting

TAYLOR HOLMES is a busy man.

With all the success that is his these days, when pictures of the sort he makes are in big demand, a man simply has to be busy.

But the interviewer caught up with him in the home offices of Triangle in New York.

"Tell me something about yourself, about your future plans," said the interviewer. "I haven't much to say about myself or my future plans," said Mr. Holmes, "but I have heard that my pictures are going well in France, England and many other foreign countries, including China, Japan, India and as far north as Iceland. And the Pennsylvania board of censorship, which is said to be the severest in the country, has never made an unfavorable criticism of any of my pictures."

Mr. Holmes then quoted a few remarks from letters he had received from Iceland in which a young lady wrote, "I liked the humor of your picture, 'Ruggles of Redgap,' although you did not ride good horseback." Mr. Holmes answered that he was sorry she missed the humor of the horseback ride because it was supposed to be bad anyway and that he was interested to know for the first time that Iceland had either pictures or horses but would "take her word for it" because she didn't write on perfumed paper.

He then produced several press notices, amongst which were two from France, which he recently received and which he would like to have translated. "But I am rather afraid to turn them over to a friend of mine who is a good French scholar," he said, "because he is a 'terrible kidder' and for that reason I may not be told the truth about their contents.

"I have been told by Harry Corson Clark, on his coming back from India that they have a peculiar word for me there which sounds something like "Casaba," meaning happy, comic, gentleman.

"In my pictures, I'd rather have a laugh than a smile but on the other hand I'd also rather have a smile than either a snicker or a 'guffaw.' I am trying to get an individual line of work which does not infringe on anybody else's efforts and I think there are volumes of possibilities for advancement in this line of work. I like slap-stick and think it is good but will not do it without reason. I will throw a pie the same as Chaplin.

"The higher the class audience you aim for, the higher you will appeal to, but the middle and lower classes, while they may not be as loud in their demonstrations of appreciation in their way they will like high class entertainment just as much and are as strong friends as you have."

Mr. Holmes thinks the average exhibitor cannot tell the value of a comedy in a projection room because it is necessary to have an audience, a goodly number of people together exciting themselves into laughter, when laughter is prompted.

"Sex stuff hurts pictures," he says, "and problem plays should be presented in a special theatre and not given to the public.

"The greatest advantage of pictures in the years to come is educational. The villian must be punished, the "vamp" must be stopped and the hero and heroine must be real. People want cleanliness and want to see the best there is in life. That is what I am trying to preach and am following out in all my pictures.

"How are your pictures going in America?" queried the interviewer. "Well," said Mr. Holmes, "Marcus Loew has agreed to take all my future productions, after noting the big business which my past pictures have done and Mr. Nirdlinger of Philadelphia said that if I cared to make a tour of theatres in his section, on account of my popularity, he would be only too glad to arrange a co-operation with other exhibitors, to which I had to answer that if I did, I wouldn't have time to make my next pictures.—Frank Leonard.

Projection Aid Dept. Formed by F. P.-Lasky

WITH a view to assisting exhibitors to obtain the best projection possible and reducing the damage of film to a minimum, thereby enhancing the presentation of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has introduced an innovation in its department of distribution.

This innovation is in the form of an entirely new department which will handle the varied projection problems which confront exhibitors, at the same time eliminating so far as possible the causes which, through incompetence of operators or carelessness of inspectors, contribute to the damaging of prints and consequent inadequate projection. The proposition has been occupying the attention of Walter E. Greene, vice-president and managing director of distribution, and General Manager Al Lichtman for some time, and the establishing of the new department, it is stated, is the direct result of their determination to leave nothing undone in the way of providing exhibitors every assistance in obtaining the best results.

In charge of the new department, the headquarters of which will be at the home office in New York, is Earl J. Dennison, a competent projection expert and engineer. Mr. Dennison's duties will take him at more or less regular intervals to every Famous-Players-Lasky Exchange in the United States. Besides establishing a standard system of film inspection in the various branches he will personally examine and report upon all film in stock, look into complaints from exhibitors and examine damage cards which are now being distributed in standardized from to all exchanges.

Although the new department has been in operation only a short time, the results already shown are extremely gratifying, Mr. Greene states. Exhibitors who have been called upon unanimously pronounce the innovation most valuable and progressive.

Fourth Director for Sunshine Comics Named

Hampton Del Ruth, editor and supervising director of William Fox Sunshine Comedies, has added Bin Moore to his directorial staff. This makes four directors now working under Del Ruth in his process of building up this comedy organization on the West Coast.

"We are after real fun-makers," said Del Ruth, "and real fun-making. The commonplace slapstick stuff without originality, which hitherto has counted for comedy, will not long continue to be tolerated by the public. One of the biggest needs of the hour is high-class comedy which will actually entertain and amuse, serving as a vital contributing factor at the box office. Knocking a man down and standing on his chest is not the only kind of comedy we are after, either. Each of the men on our present directorial staff has established a reputation for originality and good taste. Each will be obliged to maintain that reputation at its highest point in the making of Sunshine Comedies."

"Virtuous Men" Books Well in Three States

H. C. Simeral, general manager of Co-Partner Attractions, owners of "Virtuous Men," for western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, report san unusual number of bookings for the S-L Production, starring E. K. Lincoln. In less than three weeks activities on the part of his salesmen, Simeral has secured more than twenty playing dates for "Virtuous Men" in his territory. In several cases the production has been booked for runs of three days and a week.

Simeral will present "Virtuous Men" as a road show attraction in several sections of Pennsylvania and Ohio. The road production will carry advance men, managers, complete orchestras, and play at advance prices in many of the larger theatres in these teritories.

Commercial Publicity for Alice Brady

An unprecedented wave of commercial advertising and publicity on Alice Brady, star in Select Pictures, will soon sweep the country, says an official of Select, following her appointments this week to pose for five of the largest national advertisers in the commercial line. This vast amount of billboard and magazine advertising will keep Alice Brady's name even more prominently before the public than usually, and exhibitors will benefit thereby.

Houdini in Serial Gets Record Bookings

Contracts by scores for B. A. Rolfe's serial, "The Master Mystery," in which Harry Houdini is the handcuff king, is featured, is reported by those branches of the World Film Corporation handling the subject. Houses all through the Middle West are taking the picture for runs of several days.

Reports Exhibitors Eager to Book "Destiny"

"Authentic reports that 'Destiny,' Universal's new Jewel production, starring Dorothy Phillips, was being booked eagerly by the exhibitors throughout the country have been coming into the Broadway office," said an official of the company, and these announcements were given a decided boost recently when it was announced that the United Booking Office and the Fox circuit of theatres in the New York district had booked 'Destiny' for a total of 114 days.

"Although this may not be a record for a booking it is one of the biggest bookings given a picture this year. The U. B. O. circuit includes the Keith and Proctor circuit in Greater New York, New Jersey and New York State. The Fox circuit of theatres comprise practically the same territory. Many pictures by prominent producers are booked over these two circuits for a period of thirty to forty days, but few are given such an extended booking. This Jewel super-production is booked for sixty days with the Keith and Proctor houses and fifty-four days with the Fox houses. W. R. Wilkerson, manager of the New York Jewel exchange, closed the contracts with the two circuits."

Pickford Film Breaking Booking Records

A week before "Daddy Long Legs," Mary Pickford's first picture distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was shown in Philadelphia, 180 days had been booked for the attraction by the Peerless Feature Film Exchange, holders of the First National franchise for Philadelphia and territory. Never before in the history of the exchange has there been such a demand for any motion picture thus far handled by that exchange and William Heenan, manager of the Peerless, is out for a record booking list. In addition to the 180 days, numerous other contracts are being held up to allow dates that will prove equitable to all exhibitors. At the premier presentation, a private showing, in Philadelphia, a distinguished audience of society folk, jurists and well known business men were present.

Glucksmann Returns from Buenos Aires Visit

After a four months' absence, Jacobo Glucksmann is returning to New York from a visit to the head office of Max Glucksmann, his brother, at Buenos Aires, Argentina, where he went to make a study of conditions existing in the extensive South American territory operated by his, the oldest Argentine film concern.

Over two years ago, Mr. Jacobo Glucksmann established the New York Buying Office for Max Glucksmann at 110 West 40th street, for the purpose of supplying that concern with films for its own theatres and large exchange system which extends through Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, Peru and Bolivia.

Metro's New Non-Program Idea

Fewer Pictures and Distribution Solely on Merits of Pictures—Special Attention Given to Big Theatres

ANNOUNCEMENT of the new Metro production policy, which includes fewer and better pictures, open booking and especial attention to the big theatres, has been announced by President Richard A. Rowland.

"Ending with August 17 next there will be no more program pictures for Metro, as our new plans, which have been in preparation since January, will then become effective. These call for fewer and better pictures, which will be made with four stars, and in the coming year there will be thirty-six of these productions. In addition there will be several specials with all star casts, made from big material, which already has been arranged for, and such other popular books, plays and stories as will lend themselves to the manufacture of big productions.

"We are going after the big theatre business, making pictures for week runs and longer, and only material of absolute box office value will be made use of. There also will be some extra big productions. The first of the new productions will be "The Brat," in which Nazimova is starred. This will be released September 1.

"We have secured a number of well known plays which, when they are announced, will please the exhibitors generally because they are already well advertised attractions and demonstrated successes. Each of these pictures will be sold on its individual merits.

"Our production organization has been brought to a high pitch of efficiency, and we made certain of this condition before launching out along these better lines in production. An announcement will shortly be made of the stars who will be used and of the productions in which they will appear.

Mr. Rowland has sailed for a two months' trip through England, France and Italy to go over the film situation in the foreign markets.

"Thirteenth Chair" Will Be A Pathe Special

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that it will distribute as a special feature Leonce Perret's screen version of Bayard Veiller's melodramatic success, "The Thirteenth Chair." It is said to be the biggest picture of the year in its class. The play, following its production in New York, ran for more than a year to record business, it is said, and traveling companies played it in every section of the country.

"Mr. Veiller, also author of 'Within the Law,' brought to the making of what has been called 'a master-mystery play,' an amazing ingenuity and craftsmanship," says an official of Pathe. "Leonce Perrett has taken this great story and brought forth a picture which retains every feature of the original play and has the added values furnished by the screen to enhance it. He secured the screen rights to 'The Thirteenth Chair' after paying a record price to the producer, William Harris, Jr., since the principal producers in the industry were eager to secure it.

"It is difficult to recall any drama built along similar lines as strong, as clever in construction and as successful in stimulating curiosity and holding the attention of an audience.

"We have reviewed the finished version in the Home Office and it gives absolute promise of being a screen sensation," says Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. "It contains more thrills than a Pearl White serial and holds the undivided attention from start to finish."

Stories for Bennison Sought by Betzwood

THE Betzwood Film Company, producers of Louis Bennison productions, released through Goldwyn, is in the market, it was announced this week, for three big stories for its smiling cowboy star. Ira M. Lowry, director-in-chief for Betzwood, wants recognized book or stage stories, the bigger and more widely known the better. Stories that have made a reputation in book form or on the stage are desired at once for picturization.

The first series of Bennison productions now has been completed. Four—"Oh, Johnny!" "Sandy Burke," "Speedy Meade" and "The Road Called Straight"—have been released. Two are still to come—"Lord Jim" and "High Pockets." The latter has been sent for nation-wide release to big first run accounts on July 1. "Lord Jim" will follow in due course.

It is for the second series that Betzwood needs the new stories. Bennison is already to resume work in the big plant at Port Kennedy, Pa., as soon as suitable vehicles are found. It is announced that manuscripts intended for Bennison should be addressed to Mr. Lowry at the Philadelphia offices of the company, in the Real Estate Trust Building.

In "High Pockets" Mr. Bennison is supported by Katherine McDonald, who recently has become a screen star in her own right.

Christie Comics Program

The following Christie Comedies are scheduled for an early release: "Can Wives Be Trusted," featuring Bobby Vernon and Ethel Lynne. "A Full House," featuring Dorothy DeVore, with Earle Rodney. "Oh, My Dear," featuring Bobby Vernon with Patricia Palmer. "Anybody's Widow," Dorothy DeVore and Earle Rodney.

Organize $3,000,000 Corporation

United Picture Productions Corporation to Assure United Picture Theatres of Strong Releases

OUTSTANDING in prominence among the important news of the week is the announcement of the incorporation of the United Picture Productions Corporation, with a capitalization of $3,000,000 preferred stock represented by 300,000 shares at $10 each with 8 per cent cumulative dividends, and 300,000 shares of common stock, these latter accompanying the preferred stock in the form of bonus.

Interviewed on the subject of this new corporation, J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., said in part:

"United Picture Productions Corporation has been formed to further and accelerate the extensive plans and preparations United Picture Theatres of America has entered upon with a view to the activities of the business year commencing September 1, and to secure for its members additional productions beyond those already in hand for the continued carrying out of United's original promise of supplying the best pictures that the market affords. In order to obtain such additional pictures and to secure the biggest and best stars and productions, the United Picture Productions Corporation has been formed, and through it the financing of these productions will be further assured and carried out. The ultimate approval of the stars and plays that it desires to market will, of course, still rest with United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

"The United Picture Productions Corporation will be guaranteed a 20 per cent profit on each of its productions and as payment will receive 75 per cent of the rentals of pictures in the United States until cost and profit are paid. The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., will be the owner of 100,000 shares of common stock. This stock will prove a very valuable asset in that from it will accrue important dividends which in turn will reduce the cost of pictures to the United Picture Theatres, Inc.

"The officers and directors of United Picture Productions Corporation and the United Picture Theatres, Inc., will be substantially the same, a factor which will insure perfect harmony between the two companies.

"Having now more than 2,500 theatres using United pictures and having fulfilled the promises made at the inception of this corporation, we now take a further important step to secure for this gigantic circuit of theatres the finest productions and the best stars to supply in the highest possible degree the needs of that circuit.

"United's legal representatives are now drawing up contracts with several important stars."

Argonne Fight Re-Lived by Original Cast

AN original subject, produced with the original characters—the story of the Lost Battalion of the 77th Division—that is the novelty announced by the MacManus Corporation.

Realities take the places of subterfuge in this war document, it is said, and the producers declare they have something real, vital and thrilling to present.

The men of the composite battalion of two infantry regiments of the 77th Division, who slogged their way through the almost impenetrable Argonne forest for kilometers, leaving the dead as milestones of their progress; who finally lost liason with the units on their right and left as they bloodily progressed, and finally, surrounded paid with lives, blood, hunger and thirst for their American "never say die" spirit—those are the men who will be seen in this, the reproduction of their feat.

It has been prepared under the personal direction of Edward A. MacManus with the most extreme care both as to absolute fidelity to every phase of the history of the Lost Battalion from the day of the draft until the day they returned and saluted the dead they left behind in the Argonne in the Court of Heroes opposite the Public Library when they paraded in the Avenue. So interested was General Alexander and Lieut.-Col. Whittlesey in the proper production of "The Lost Battalion" that each gave his personal and undivided attention to the working out of every little detail. A site was selected that was exactly the counterpart of that spot in the Argonne Forest where the Lost Battalion was trapped by the Germans. The trenches they dug and the entanglement they had to prepare for their own defense were reproduced by the very men who carried out the work in the Argonne and each subordinate officer who had an important role assigned to him in the actual battle scene reenacted the same role for the MacManus Corporation picture.

Mr. MacManus was assisted by Harry A. Palmer, who mobilized the characters and helped devise the structure of the film, Burton King the chief director, assisted by Leander De Cordova.

Dusk to Dawn Session of Marion Davies' Company

Marion Davies and her entire company, consisting of over three hundred persons, worked the entire night a short time ago in the Biograph Studio, from 7.30 p. m. to 7.30 o'clock a. m. Miss Davies, under the direction of Robert Leonard, is finishing there one of her biggest features titled tentatively "April Folly," after the novelette of the same name by Cynthia Stockley.

The scene made was that of a party aboard a ship's deck. Strings of colored lanterns, with a one hundred candle power light in each, the whole representing 10,000 candle power light, were used.

Conway Tearle, Agnes Neilson, Hattie Delaro and the three Stewart children were other principals of the "party."

Thanhouser Laboratories to Be Used by Arrow

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, has announced that hereafter all prints of pictures sold by the Arrow Film Corporation will be made in the laboratories of the Thanhouser plant in New Rochelle. This plant is fully equipped to take care of an enormous business and is already handling about 250,000 feet per week, although it is just starting.

The Thanhouser plant some years ago was one of the busiest and most successful in existence, and under the new arrangements it is expected to again build up a reputation for the laboratory work.

Next Christie Special

Al E. Christie announces that he has nearly completed the production of a third Christie Special Comedy which he has titled "Mary Moves In." The picture will feature Fay Tincher, with Harry Ham, Katherine Lewis, Eddie Barry and Patricia Palmer, making up a special cast. George Pearce, Al Haynes, Edith Clark and Ward Caulfield complete the cast.

"Mary Moves In" is an original story by W. Scott Darling featuring Fay Tincher.

Additions to United Picture Theatres

The Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York City, head the list of 56 additions to its membership announced during the past week by United Picture Theatres of America. They have joined on a stock franchise basis.

It is pointed out by United that its circuit now embraces the bulk of the most important houses throughout the country.

Universal Anniversary

THIS is my appreciation of your appreciation of what the Universal—seven years old—has accomplished in those seven years.

Never in my life have I received, or heard of any company receiving so many or such sincere telegrams, letters and telephone messages of congratulation on what the Universal has done, and is doing better than ever to-day, for the motion picture business.

Best of all, you have shown us that you mean every word you say—for the bookings received on Universal-made pictures during the past ten days surpass anything we have even dreamed of.

That is why I say, "Thank you!"

Such a splendid Anniversary encourages us to make some promises. We promise that the Universal will keep right on making the very best pictures produced today. We promise that our methods with you—and with the Public—and with other producers will be steadfastly maintained on the same high plane as in the past seven splendid years.

Watch us make good on every one.

Harry Carey in "Riders of Vengeance"

THIS is a real western, but one with a strong love element and a happy ending, and exhibitors who are going to play Harry Carey in "Riders of Vengeance" should feature to the limit the action and the heart interest. The picture has the advantage above lots of westerns in showing you the motive for Carey's deeds with such force that your patrons are in full sympathy with him from the start.

One of the first titles tells us that this is:

"A story of the days when might was right and nine points of the law lay in the barrel of a gun."

That's a good line to use, in connection with the other matter, the girl angle, and we would certainly try to make this one appeal to everyone. We would suggest that you use for the big illustrations one of the many pictures of Carey and the girl instead of those showing violence, because the title itself is strong enough to carry that idea over.

Battle of vengeance and love makes a good theme for the advertising, especially if you leave the suspense and do not tell how the picture ends. Let the reader guess whether he wins the girl or kills the last man on his list.

HERE'S the plot: Dave Buell, murderer and cattle baron of Southern New Mexico, rules that portion of the state except for Jim Carroll and his son Cheyenne Harry, who stand for right. But even the sheriff, Gale Thurman, is a tool of Buell and the rich man has his own way.

Just the day before Harry is to be married he catches Yuma Kid, one of the outlaws, stampeding his herd and gives him a good whipping, but this act determines Buell to wipe out the whole Cranston outfit. He determines that no time could be better than when the party comes out of the village church. And while the Cranston party are armed on their trip to the village there they meet Buell who pretends to make up on the day of Cheyenne's wedding. And then as the party come from the church there is a fusilade and Harry's mother and bride drop dead and with the rest of the party wiped out and the father dying Cheyenne takes oath that he will get "Dave Buell and his gang to the last man."

Two years pass and Cheyenne is not seen in that section and it is only after the sheriff makes the announcement that his sweetheart is coming to teach the village school that there is a mysterious visitor and the next morning the town is aroused by the warning posted in front of Buell's saloon:

"I'm back and hunting for the following: Spada, Yuma Kid, Doby, Conners, Hondo, Buell, Thurman. (Signed) Cheyenne Harry."

WHILE they show bravado, they are all much alarmed, especially Spada, the first on the list, and it is only a little while later while the outlaw is drinking that he hears the church bells ringing and then a voice from behind a paper: "Been to any weddings lately, Spada?" Spada tries to draw, but he is too late.

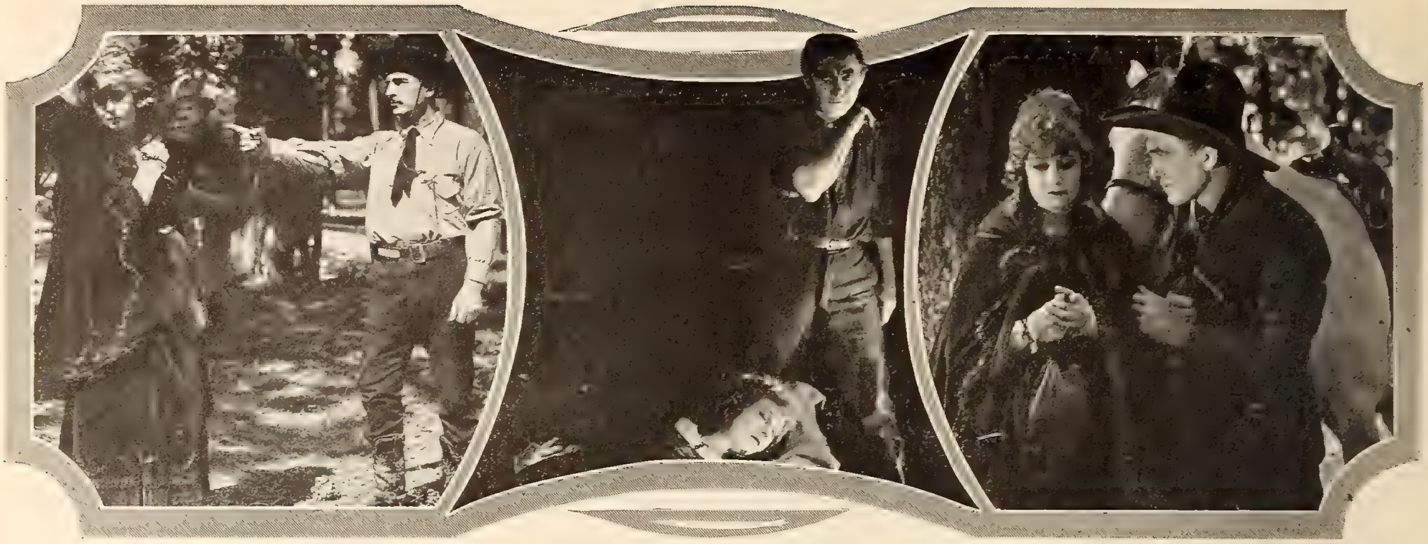
Cheyenne escapes and is making his way to his hiding place when he comes on the wreck of a stage coach in the driving rain. It had been attacked by Apaches, and the only living person is the teacher, Lola Madison. He takes her to his cabin, in love with her at first sight, until he learns that she is the betrothed of Thurman and there is a struggle with himself whether he shall kill the girl as she sleeps and thus avenge his dead bride, but the man in him prevails and the next morning he sets the girl on her way to the village, with her promise that she will never tell his hiding place.

Yuma Kid is the second. After the same question about the wedding, he tries to shoot, but again Cheyenne is too fast and a second chapter has been written.

Lola has told her affianced everything except where she spent the night and it is while the lovers are together when another of the gang comes up with the news of Yuma Kid's sudden taking off. It is then that Thurman sees Cheyenne's initial on the muffler she is wearing and telling her of this second killing insists that she reveal the hiding place. But still she refuses to betray the man, though she is now convinced that he is all that her sweetheart has said of him.

BUT Harry himself is now completely under the spell of the girl and when he comes to visit her at the school she turns a deaf ear to him. Even his "Look teacher, I brought you an apple" fails to get a response, but finally she comes out with "I'm sorry that I gave my word to a bad man." He tells her to ask those who know the circumstances and declares that he is going to keep his word until he gets the last man—even the sheriff.

Here are three pictures of Cheyenne and the school teacher. We suggest one of these will have the greatest appeal to the most people, if your selling talks are right



At the left the girl, true to her promise, refuses to tell the sheriff, her affianced the hiding place of Harry, but at right she tells Cheyenne that she doesn't love him. In the center, on their first meeting, he is tempted to make her life pay for the death of his bride

She seeks to make him promise not to do that, but in answer he takes her in his arm and kisses her, and then leaves.

Harry's trail leads the sheriff to the schoolhouse and there he finds the butt of Harry's cigarette, but still the girl refuses to tell Harry's hiding place. In the meantime the posse runs into a band of Apaches and the fourth man on the list is killed. It is then that Harry's resolve weakens and he comes to the girl telling her that he is going away and begging her to marry him. She replies that she does not love him.

Buell is now thoroughly terrorized and his fear increased when Thurman declares that he is through with the dirty work and resigns. He hides in his home, rifle in hand and liquor by his side to steady his shattered nerves.

BUT when Harry arrives Buell can do nothing but tremble, though Cheyenne declares he is going to have a chance for his life. But Buell will not shoot and Harry tries strategy, firing several shots through the window and flees. This brings shots back from members of Buell's own band that kill him.

Thurman now goes in search of Harry for a purpose. He is attacked by Apaches and Harry comes to his rescue and there the sheriff tells him that he had nothing to do with shooting up the bridal party and that Lola really loves Cheyenne. There is a desperate fight with the Indians and both are wounded. They get back to the village, but Thurman dies—and then the happy ending.

There is a clever scene right at the end after the doctor has examined Harry and in answer to a question of the two survivors of the gang whether we will live answer "yes" they announce that they are not going to pick any flowers on the way until they are across the Mexican border.

NOW get one of those striking pictures of Harry Carey and the girl in your advertising and use the name of the star stronger than anything else with the title secondary and then in sufficient type to attract attention use the line that we suggested at the start of this article. The remainder of the selling talk can be in smaller type, with plenty of indention at the sides to give the white space. Here is one:

"Cheyenne has seen his father, his mother, his bride and his brothers shot down by the murderous cattle baron's band, as they left the little church after his marriage. He swore to his dying father that he would not stop until he 'got' them one by one.

"In front of the sheriff's office he posted the list with the announcement that he was after them, and they pretended they did not fear him. But Cheyenne shot quick and straight. Number one, then number two fell—and terror spread.

"Then came something to interfere with his plans—a woman. He fell in love with her—only to find that she was the affianced of the sheriff, in title, and outlaw, in reality. And the sheriff was on the list of vengeance. The girl prayed with this man to spare the sheriff—and he loved her better than all the world—and wanted her for himself. What did he do—

"There's a thrill every minute in this picture and every problem is answered to your utter satisfaction."

FOR those that want to see the action picture of the west this sort of display offers promise and it will appeal to the woman element too, for there is not one of the fair sex who doesn't admire a fighting man provided that he is battling for right and especially if the love for a woman is one of the motives. It is, therefore, hard to get away from those two elements in the advertising. Here is another one:

"He had sworn to his dying father that he would never pause until he wiped out the band that took from him his parents and his bride as they left the chapel door.

"He shot straight and fast—and always gave his victims a chance. Two of the seven he got and the others quailed in terror. One man especially he wanted—the sheriff and tool of the murderous cattle baron. So he saved him for the last.

"Then all of a sudden the sheriff's affianced fell into his power. His own bride had been shot down, why not wreak such a vengeance on the man he charged with the crime? But he looked into his eyes—and he loved her. But she hated him—begged for her sweetheart's life until—

"The climax—the man and the sheriff alone in the desert—what happened then? —you've guessed wrong, and it's the sort of a thrilling story that you'll want to see—and remember."

Then here are some short ones:

"Cheyenne Harry has sworn that he would avenge the death of his father and mother and bride of a few moments. Seven men were on his list. Four of them perished —and then there came another woman into his life. To carry out his vow meant that he must slay her affianced. In either case he stood to lose her. What did he do? But he won all he sought. How? That's what makes it the most gripping of pictures."

"Seven men trembled when they thought of him—for their names were on his roll of vengeance. One by one they paid the penalty of their crimes and fear gripped at the others' hearts stronger than ever. Then came a girl—she was not afraid, and the avenger loved her as he had never loved before. Yet she was the affianced of the man that he hated most of all. But Cheyenne Harry made his way through successfully—both he and the girl got everything they wanted."

"His eye was clear, his aim true and right guided his bullets. He feared no man —and none could stop him in his career of vengeance—but then a girl came. Which should guide him—his vow to the dead or his love for the living?"

"The minister had spoken the words and a second later assassins' bullets had snatched his bride from him. Why should he spare a woman that she might become the wife of a man he held guilty of the crime against him? And why should he come to love this girl? And what should he do when she begged him to spare her affianced? He did —but there are greater things in the world —and they're told in this amazing story of the old West."

At left, scene between Cheyenne and Buell, the murderous cattle baron and cause of all Cheyenne's troubles and on his death list.. At right he fights to save the sheriff he had sworn to kill. Center, attractive picture of girl

Real American Appeal Should be Put Over with This

ACCORDING to all the reports that have come from the War Community Camp Service and the various organizations that have been working to supply amusement to the American soldiers both in training in this country and on the battlefields abroad the sort of motion pictures that were the favorites were those which had plenty of action and in which the characters were red-blooded Americans, with an element of romance of the sturdier sort entering in.

Certainly if it had been made with the purpose of filling those specifications "Riders of Vengeance" could not have done it better. You have a chance of getting an unusual bit of publicity by playing this as such a story, and if after the first showing you can get the opinions of some of the men who have been "Over There" and print these in your newspaper display it will be a good piece of work. As a matter of fact, it would not be a bad idea to invite a number of these former soldiers—all the better if they are still in uniform—to attend the first regular performance or a special one and then collect these views.

Such advertising is sure to arouse the curiosity of the public in general, especially if you use a little harmless camouflage saying that you have picked this picture because it fits in so well with the kind of stories that returned soldiers have told you they like to see on the screen.

LARGE heads of Carey can be used to decorate the lobby, but we would omit anything of the revolver effect here. It always makes an attractive lobby to use pine or fir trees and especially for summer these will afford a screen for numerous electric fans—and you know the drawing power of a cool lobby during the warm season.

One of the most successful lobby displays that we have ever seen used during the summer season gave the effect of waterfalls, with real water used. Now this will fit in well here not only with the season, but with the picture because the hiding place that Carey used was reached by riding through waterfalls.

MANY ADMIRERS

We'd Use the Name of Seena Owen in All the Ads

SEENA OWEN, who has had a remarkable come back in motion pictures, after being away from the screen for nearly a year, is the leading woman in this picture and we would be sure to use her name in all the advertising, of course secondary to that of Carey. There is a good line with: "Seena Owen as the girl."

These can easily be constructed with a background of water proofed compo board and trees at either side. Care should be used to prevent any splashing that would likely wet any of the patrons, but the combination of the three things is sure to create a lot of talk.

There is a simple thing on the stunt order that can also be effectively employed in the lobby. Simply post against one of the trees, if you are using them, or in some conspicuous post the list of names that Cheyenne posted in front of the sheriff's office and then draw a heavy line through each of the names down to that of Thurman, and after that a fanciful date to indicate the time of their taking off and then opposite or below the name of the sheriff a huge question mark. That is likely to arouse a great deal of curiosity and cause comment.

THERE is one effect in the music we would be sure to use and it can be employed either with orchestra or organ. Of course, at the point where there is a close up of the church bell ringing, it is apparent that the imitations should be repeated when Cheyenne questions Spada and then Yuma Kid and then for the scene in the retreat where Harry is debating with himself whether he shall kill and the girl, once more with the visit to Buell and finally at the very start of he scene where he goes to the rescue of Thurman. Its use in this way forms something of a secondary theme—or rather a motif. The prepared score suggests Pierne's "Izeyl" here.

Some pleasing love song should be used as the theme and it is suggested that "Love is a Story" from Victor Herbert's "Madcap Duchess" be employed. This is an excellent one and will serve well as a song for a woman's voice just preceding the feature. There is another, and a brand new one with "I Found the End of the Rainbow" and by announcing that you are going to have this sung and played for the theme with this picture it is very likely that you can arrange with the music stores to give you a special window display.

Eugene Roth, manager of the California theatre, San Francisco, has been most successful in linking up his orchestra and song numbers with music store displays, he advertising the stores in his program and the dealers in turn giving a considerable share of the window over to his attractive designed announcements. In this case a number of the stills—but only those indicating love scenes—should be used.

THERE should be a balance of comedy for this picture, the nearer slapstick the better, for though the picture is human it is quite tense.

You should not use any scenic on this program, because practically all of the scenes are exteriors and you will probably spoil the effect of the fine photography in the feature, by giving an overdose of scenery.

We'd arrange the remainder of the pictures so that you can advertise this as an "All American bill."

Miss O'Dare Rises to Serial Class

Tom Hamlin Interviews Her on Her New Job

DISCOVERED;—a new serial star;—Peggy O'Dare.

She is the new leading woman featured opposite Eddie Polo in the Universal Serial now being produced in both Europe and America, "The Broken Idol."

There were twenty-two good reasons why Peggy O'Dare should not adopt a screen career—her father, mother, and twenty (count 'em—Twenty) brothers and sisters.

For Miss O'Dare has more brothers and sisters than there are episodes in her next serial. And she is decidedly a decided blonde. And that perhaps explains why she so decidedly decided to enter motion pictures in spite of parental opposition. And now we are all happy;—parents, brothers and sisters, Peggy O'Dare, general public and trade journal interviewers.

During the last two years, Miss O'Dare appeared in a series of L-Ko two-reel comedies and for eighteen months she added lustre, activity and entertainment to Lehrman's-Fox Sunshine Comedies.

But it was after she took a prominent part in two of Eddie Polo's Cyclone Smith stories for Universal, that she was "discovered" as a serial artist. And now she is featured with Eddie Polo in the eighteen episode serial being produced by Universal. It is entitled "The Broken Idol."

This is what brought Peggy O'Dare from Los Angeles to New York, and this is what sends her to England and the European countries within a few weeks, accompanied by the leading members of "The Broken Idol" company.

And she evidently believes that her last name (O'Dare) is a COMMAND. And she does dare. Riding a frightened horse plunging recklessly down a steep cliff, is but one of the many stunts she has accomplished that should have earned for her the title of "Dare Devil,"—or, in the case of pretty, blonde, blue eyed, Peggy O'Dare,—"Dare Angel."

She is in love with her part in "The Broken Idol." A few scenes are being taken around New York before the company goes abroad. The role she is portraying in this Universal serial does not only call for fearless athletic stunts but also gives opportunity for real acting ability. And that is why Miss O'Dare is so enthusiastic about her part in the serial.

If dainty prettiness, a charming personality, a thorough screen experience, a capable actress, a clever and fearless athletic leading woman, is what Eddie Polo needed most, he appears to have all that and more in one of the coming Universal favorites, Peggy O'Dare.—Tom Hamlin.

A New Starless Play for Robertson-Cole

THERE is no star in "Better Times," the second Brentwood picture which Robertson-Cole will release through Exhibitors' Mutual. The prediction is ventured, however, by those who witnessed the production, that there is likely to be one after SaZu Pitts in the featured role, is seen by the public. Miss Pitts has appeared in other screen productions, including "The Little Princess," starring Mary Pickford.

The player came to her name honestly, it is announced, it not being manufactured as a press agent aid to popularity.

In starring no player in "Better Times," Brentwood followed out the theory it advanced with "The Turn in the Road," which had no featured player, but which nevertheless developed Helen Jerome Eddy into a popular player. To King W. Vidor, who directs all Brentwood productions, the Shakespearean line, "The play is the thing," strongly appeals. He believes in making his types fit his story, not vice versa.

Opponents of the star system found "The Turn in the Road" a most substantial approval of their contention that it does not take a high salaried performer to make a good motion picture. In "Better Times" they undoubtedly will find further support for their theory, for the second Brentwood offering is considered by Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors' Mutual officials, as perfect a comedy as "The Turn in the Road" has been acclaimed a drama.

David Butler, a member of the Alcazar Stock company, San Francisco, and Georgia Woodthorpe, known on the legitimate stage, have prominent roles in the production which they are said to portray with true color.

"Rainbow" Comedies are to Supersede L-Ko

WITH L-Ko comedies discontinued Julius and Abe Stern, producers of the Century Comedies, released through Universal, announce production of a new brand to be known as "Rainbow" comedies. According to the Sterns, this title covers the statement that the pictures will be made from stories, and played with stars, selected from all parts of the globe.

It is intended in the new policy of Rainbow and Century Comedies to cover a wider field than during the past year. More extensive advertising is planned, and the films themselves, it is claimed, will be produced on a larger and better scale. Many new players it is announced have been signed.

The Sterns are now at their California studios and will remain probably throughout the summer supervising the productions of their comedy organizations. In recent alterations of the studios many innovations are said to have been installed, and practically everything new in theatre equipment has been added.

The Century and Rainbow comedies will be released once a week alternately under the new plans. Twelve of the Century animal comedies are to be released in the year beginning in July, the end of which month will see release of the last of the L-Ko subjects.

Taylor Holmes' Latest Is "Upside Down"

"Having firmly asserted their intent that each Taylor Holmes picture in the Triangle star series of this former legitimate comedian shall be equal to if not better than its predecessor," says an official of the Company, "the executives who viewed the star's latest offering at a private showing express their entire satisfaction with reference to 'Upside Down,' just received from their film editing department.

"In selecting the script for 'Upside Down,' scheduled for release June 22nd, 'Lovely Reason,' a story by George Agnew Chamberlain, was the choice, not alone because of the author's popularity, but because of the story's unusual appeal and the enthusiasm with which it was received when it was published in Harper's Bazaar a short while ago. It was Chamberlain who furnished Holmes with "Taxi," and in this instance he is said to have provided him with a plot of equal interest and one which has furnished the star with even greater opportunities for his unique ability as a fun-maker. The popular appeal of 'Upside Down' seems vouched for by the fact that it is a story of divorce. In fact, those who have read 'Lovely Reason' will recall that the 'reason' signifies a reason for divorce."

World's Service System Beats Fire Threat

The system employed by World Pictures to insure no interruption of service, whatever happens, had a severe test in Philadelphia last week when fire broke out in the Philadelphia Exchange of World Film Corporation. The building was built on plans that gives to the films the greatest protection and at the same time prevents the spread of fire to adjoining structures.

Within fifteen minutes after the fire was reported to the New York office, George R. Meeker, General Sales Manager, left for Philadelphia to take charge of the situation. Meanwhile he had the Washington, Pittsburgh, Boston, Buffalo and Cleveland offices in readiness to supply prints and advertising material necessary in order that no holder of a World contract could suffer by reason of inability to get whatever his contract called for. Business is going on without a single minute's delay because of the fire.

Selznick Engages Rothe as Technical Director

Bert Rothe has been engaged as art and technical director for Selznick Pictures, it is announced from Myron Selznick's office. Mr. Rothe is an art designer of some note and just finished some designs for prominent Canadian Cathedrals.

Mr. Rothe served with some of the leading film companies prior to joining Selznick and is well acquainted with the studio as well as the stage.

He has already assumed his duties with Selznick and has designed and supervised the construction of several sets for "The Perfect Lover" starring Eugene O'Brien, and the third Olive Thomas production.

First Cassinelli Feature Nears Completion

Rapid progress is being made, it is said, by Director Albert Capellani in the filming of Dolores Cassinelli's initial starring vehicle for the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., temporarily titled "The Gutter," and it is expected that the coming week will find the production ready for final cutting and titling. In keeping with arrangements whereby the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will alternate the release of the June Caprice-Creighton Hale and Dolores Cassinelli subjects, "The Gutter" has been scheduled to follow "Oh, Boy!" in order of release. As previously announced, "Oh, Boy!" will be available to first-run houses through Pathe Exchange, Inc., on June 22.

The cast of stage and screen favorites assembled by Director Capellani to support Miss Cassinelli includes Vincent Serrano, Franklyn Farnum, Marie Chambers, Helen Lowell, Paul Doucet, May Hopkins and Albert Roccardi.

Diminutive Paramount Star Back at Work

Marguerite Clark following a short rest at Palm Springs, Cal., has commenced work at the Morosco studio, Hollywood, on her new Paramount picture, "Widow by Proxy," adapted from Catherine Chisholm Cushing's play which served as a starring vehicle for May Irwin some seasons ago.

Nigel Barrie, recently released from service in the Canadian Army, will be Miss Clark's leading man. Prior to army service he appeared with Miss Clark in several of the "Bab" series for Paramount.

Films Approved by National Juvenile League

Endorsement of the following pictures was given this week by the National Juvenile Motion Picture League:

Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplements Nos. 1 and 2; International News No. 22; Pathe News No. 43; Hearst News No. 22; Gypsies of the Arctic; Alaska Wonders in Motion No. 3; City of Mexico; Making Uniforms and Flags in a U. S. Arsenal; Wild Animal Study, Part 8; Simple Experiments in Electricity; The Manufacture of Paper in Maine and The Oyster Industry.

Auspicious Screen Debut of Evelyn Martin

Evelyn Martin's appearance as co-star in Arthur Guy Empey's "Hell on Earth" marks her debut in silent drama, and it is said that judging from her work the screen has won a new star. Miss Martin previously has been well known on the legitimate stage, and critics have declared she handles her roles with remarkable grace and ease.

In the part of Lucy Duncan in Empey's production, Miss Martin has been given opportunity to display her emotional acting.

Fineman Gets Big Star's Output

Katherine Macdonald Forms Her Own Company, and Will Release Six Productions in Year Through B. P. Fineman

Katherine MacDonald, Whose Productions Are to Be Released by B. P. Fineman

CLOSE on the heels of the release of the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," has come the announcement that the star of the production, Katherine Macdonald, has formed her own producing company, and will make six special features during the coming year to be released by B. P. Fineman.

No word had been had of Miss Macdonald's intentions until a trade press advertisement stated she had completed the first picture made by her own company.

Following this, announcement was made at the offices of B. P. Fineman this week arrangements had been completed whereby Mr. Fineman would release the Katherine Macdonald productions. The transaction was arranged between Mr. Fineman and Sam E. Rork, one of the executives of the Katherine Macdonald Pictures Corporation, who was in New York last week for the purpose of arranging for an advantageous release. Nathan Vidaver, one of the best known motion picture attorneys, represented Mr. Rork in the transaction, while Henry Herzbrun was Mr. Fineman's legal adviser.

Miss Macdonald's career in motion pictures has been unique. About a year ago she was comparatively unknown to the motion picture fans. The first real opportunity to display her talent was when engaged by William S. Hart. Later she played opposite Douglas Fairbanks, and then with Paramount.

In Mr. Fineman's statement regarding the release of the Katherine Macdonald pictures, this restriction of output is touched on. Mr. Fineman said: "Not more than six productions starring Miss Macdonald will be made during the next year, and the same number is the maximum planned for the following year. This will give Miss Macdonald's producing organization ample time to make pictures that will be worthy of her talents. More pictures in a given time might be physically possible, but I do not believe that they would be of the quality we intend to offer the exhibitors and the public.

"I regard Miss Macdonald as the star of the coming year. Her popularity has literally been growing by leaps and bounds. She has all of the attributes of stardom. She has youth, with its buoyancy and grace, remarkable beauty, and a splendid dramatic talent.

"Exploitation will be one of the big features of the Katherine Macdonald pictures—material which will enable the exhibitor to sell his show to the public so that he may reap the fullest possible benefit of his investment."

Interest Shown in Trade Showings of "Sahara"

W. W. HODKINSON managers in various exchange cities are arranging to hold immediate trade showings of the newest Hodkinson production, J. Parker Read Jr.'s presentation of Louise Glaum in "Sahara," a C. Gardner Sullivan drama supervised by Allan Dwan. It is claimed few productions in the past year have attracted so much exhibitor attention as "Sahara," which is a special production backed by the combination of an able author, capable director and a producer with definite ideals of quality.

The demand of the exhibitors for special productions is clearly revealed in their responsive attitude on "Sahara." Within twenty-four hours after the announcement that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation had obtained the distribution of "Sahara" exhibitors were asking for playing dates by telegraph.

A part of the W. W. Hodkinson policy of selling pictures singly on their individual merits also bans the selling of productions to exhibitors by executives of the Hodkinson home office organization. In no less than a dozen conspicuous instances "Sahara" could have been placed for first-run from the Hodkinson home office, but in all instances exhibitor applicants were told that the Hodkinson system of offering productions singly also made it desirable that exhibitors see the production before renting it and that all contract negotiations therefore were to be made through the Hodkinson managers in their territorial offices.

As a part of this method trade showings of "Sahara" will be held during the current week in Chicago, Seattle, Dallas, San Francisco and far western and far southern points, followed next week by showings in the east and in New England.

Kassel Scores in Lobby Display at Broadway

In the lobby of the Broadway theatre, New York, a realistic set of five large paintings, depicting "atmosphere" of the Soudan, were placed upon the opening of "The Man Who Turned White," featuring H. B. Warner. Mr. Kassell, whose many artistic efforts in the line of display on presentations of big photoplays in this theatre, have made him well known, received many compliments on this, his latest effort.

Value of Authors' Aid Revealed

"The Westerners," Great Authors' Pictures Production, Said to Show Effects of Writer's Supervision

FIRST showings of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners," the Benjamin B. Hampton production of Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., are confidently expected to bring about a better understanding in the minds of exhibitors and the public, of what the participation of the author of a story in its production means in the improvement of motion pictures. This subject will be released in the larger cities within a few weeks.

"The Westerners" represents the joint attention of Mr. Hampton, Stewart Edward White, the author, Edward Sloman, the director, and a technical organization which has been in the making in California since December—an organization drilled to do big things intelligently and well

Several years ago Mr. Hampton foresaw an evolution ahead in motion pictures. Out of a long time friendship with Rex Beach there came into being Rex Beach Pictures, with Mr. Beach giving personal supervision to the production of his own stories. This company was a Benjamin B. Hampton creation and the new Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., represents the fullest development of the earlier pioneering. Great Authors' Pictures, Inc., controls the novels of Stewart Edward White, Emerson Hough, Winston Churchill, Irving Bacheller and other authors shortly to be announced.

Already Mr. White's "The Westerners" is ready for pre-release and one of Mr. Churchill's biggest novel is ready to go into production. In the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., Mr. Hampton in association with Eltinge F. Warner has formed another organization based upon an author of wide popularity and their first production completed is "Desert Gold," considered by many to be Zane Grey's most powerful story and motion picture. "Desert Gold" is likewise ready for pre-release.

All Great Authors and Zane Grey Pictures are to be released exclusively through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation's national selling mechanism, which has recently been strengthened by the introduction of some of the ablest managers associated with motion pictures.

"The Westerners" is said to be filled with energy and action. Seen by a group of internal executives, the comment was made spontaneously by its spectators that it was one of the few pictures they had ever seen that contained so much excitement and suspense that it grabbed hold of the nerves and made them taut. The publisher training and instinct of Mr. Hampton is said to be reflected in every hundred feet of "The Westerners."

Marshall Neilan Discusses Film Trade-marks

"ONE of the remarkable things to me in the motion picture business," says Marshall Neilan, "is the careless way film organizations will place their trade-mark upon productions whether they measure up to the standard or not. I think this practice is one which causes the other industries of the country to look askance upon the claims of motion picture people regarding their status as 'big business.'

"One of the greatest calamaties which can happen to an organization manufacturing a standard product is to have their trade-mark appear upon something which proves bad. Enormous amounts of money are spent by manufacturers to prevent such happenings. A firm making a hat, would no more think of placing their trade-mark upon an inferior product than they would their corporation signature on a certified check.

"Why should this practice not be applied to the picture business? Why will companies release productions they know are below standard and place their trade-mark in jeopardy by so doing. Why not make it a rule to shelve or throw in the discard any picture not fulfilling the rules required of a good picture in all details.

"Of course, none of us can judge in advance the entertainment qualities of a picture but we do know bad photography, bad titling, and bad technical work when we see it. Yet, I can today go into any five theatres at random and pick out bad pictures boldly and prominently stamped with the trade-marks of big organizations.

"I want to say sincerely that any production which I make under my arrangement with the First National Exhibitors Circuit which does not come up to the standard set by those of my pictures which have proven successful will not be released. This is not because of any idealistic views on my part but purely a matter of what I consider good business sense.

"I feel that the loss entailed by the shelving of a bad production will be made up by the establishment of a thorough confidence among the exhibitors. A belief that when they see my trade-mark on a production that it means the result is the best I have to offer."

Florence Reed Has Own Summer Studio

Florence Reed, United Picture Theatres star, is to have her own summer studio, according to plans made for her next United feature and announced by A. J. Bimberg, whose company is to produce the picture for United.

A force of carpenters, property men and electricians is being dispatched to Otasaga Lake, Maine, where Miss Reed has her country estate. These will, with the first of June, set to work on the necessary preparations for the plan. Miss Reed, being under contract with J. A. Berst, president of the United, to produce a stipulated number of super-features within the year, conceived the idea of at once escaping the city summer heat and continuing her picture work, combining her usual vacation with business. The popular screen star's summer home is said to afford unique and splendid material for film settings.

Fox Trade Paper "Ads" Aid Exhibitors

"Advertising in the trade journals has been one of our most effective means in calling the attention of exhibitors to our production," says the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. "To be effective, advertising must be truthful, forceful and picturesque. Also it must reach the people sought to be influenced through a medium in which the reader has confidence. The trade journal in the motion picture industry is the logical medium for the producer.

"The newspaper, the poster, the program, the throwaway and the lobby are advertising mediums of the exhibitors. And the Fox Film Corporation endeavors to influence the exhibitors for their own good and to make full use of these.

"In this connection, the little 'advertise' editorials in the press books which the Fox Film Corporation sends to the exhibitors are brief, to the point, and based on the experience of the Fox Corporation in its utilization of the recognized trade journals reaching the exhibitors."

Selznick Companies Active in Production

Production is now going on rapidly, it is said, in the Selznick studios in New York, and the organization is now in smooth running order. With Eugene O'Brien already under way on "The Perfect Lover," in which he will make his first appearance as a star, under the direction of Ralph Ince; Elaine Hammerstein ready to start immediate work on "Love or Fame?" her first Selznick starring subject, and Olive Thomas about to begin the production of her next picture, Myron Selznick announces that by the end of the week the Selznick studio will be among the busiest in the country.

Frederick's Latest Is "The Feat Woman"

The cutting satire of the screen has been realized by Izola Forrester, it is said, as probably by no other cinema author. "The Fear Woman," Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn picture, was released June 8th.

Miss Forrester's character of Helen Winthrop (Pauline Frederick), at once a delicate, well-bred American girl of unimpeachable social position, represents a type only too often mistaken. In the case of the Winthrop girl, she sacrifices her own reputation to save that of a friend, the wife of a tired business man.

Broadway Star Goes West for Goldwyn Pictures

Will Rogers, of Follies fame, will leave New York this week for Culver City, California, where he will begin work for Goldwyn on a series of pictures.

The screen vehicles chosen for the first work of the lariat thrower is an adaptation of the first of the Billy Fortune stories which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Doubled Stakes." W. R. Lighton is the author.

Stories Wanted

The Universal wants new stories, finer stories, faster stories than are being shown on the screens of the world today. We want stories that contain that heart interest, and humanness that stands the crowds out in front for hours waiting to get in.

We want stories that possess the clever twist and novelty in the selling angle.

We don't care what the stories are about, so long as they are clean.

Do we want them powerful in theme? WE DO. Do we want them fascinating in action, powerful of title and magnetic in character? WE DO.

Will we pay the proper price for such stories? WE WILL and gladly too.

Then why not start your patrons thinking about this? Why not put it up to the people who themselves are the best judges of what constitutes real moving picture entertainment. Announce to them by slides that the Universal wants big stories and will buy them.

Let your patrons know that they themselves can improve their own entertainment either by suggesting extra fine stories that they have read or stories that they might write. If you know of some one who produced extraordinary stories, have them communicate with us immediately. WE ARE IN THE MARKET FOR BIG IDEA STORIES AND WILL PAY WELL FOR THEM. Start the ball rolling in your theatre.

Lewis Starts for Location on Next Feature

Mitchell Lewis, star in Select Pictures, and his entire company, left Los Angeles last Saturday for the Columbia River, Washington, to film his fourth attraction for Select. Mr. Lewis' latest Select Picture, "Jacques of the Silver North," will be released this week.

Mr. Lewis' forthcoming production, the title of which has not yet been announced, will require about three weeks of location work in the district around the head of the Columbia River. A number of mountain scenes are also necessary, but it is believed that the Select star will return to the Yosemite Valley district, where "Children of Banishment" was made, to obtain these shots. The studio work will be done in Los Angeles.

An announcement of importance in connection with Mr. Lewis' forthcoming picture is the fact that Robert Bradbury will be his director. Mr. Bradbury was last week appointed to the position of director general of the Mitchell Lewis Producing Company.

Director Seitz Plays in Pathe Serial

"Just to prove that he can act as well as tell others how," says an official of Pathe, George B. Seitz, head of George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., and director of the forthcoming Pathe serial, "In Secret," starring Pearl White, stepped into the firing line the other day and assumed the role of the principal heavy in one of the closing episodes.

"In Secret" has the unique distinction of having a different villain in each of the fifteen episodes, and this fact made possible Mr. Seitz's unusual attainment.

Unique Exploiting Device

Max Levey, manager of the Chicago branch of Exhibitors' Mutual, is planning some unusual "stunts" on his own account, for the first Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White, starring H. B. Warner.

Levy is planning a set of life-size cutouts in which Warner will be seen in Arabian garb and his face browned by the desert sun.

There will be a flasher concealed in the cut-out and every little while the light will flare up and the face of brown is turned to pure white.

Popular Actress Again to Enter Screen Work

Elise Bartlett, known to motion picture followers throughout the country as the "Paramount-Flagg Girl" through her work in James Montgomery Flagg comedies, will shortly forsake the legitimate stage in order to resume her motion picture career. Miss Bartlett, whose last screen appearance was in the leading role in James Montgomery Flagg's comedy, "Con and Economy," is said to be now negotiating with a prominent producer with a view to starring in a series of feature productions.

Universal Completes Big Feature

Believes That in "A Little Brother of the Rich" It Has Made an Exceptional Production

UNIVERSAL announced completion of "A Little Brother of the Rich," heralded as one of the biggest pictures it has ever produced. Joseph Medill Patterson is the author, and Lynn F. Reynolds directed.

Regardless of its present contracts Universal spent months of preparation on this production, an entire month being devoted to the selection of the cast. Neither time nor money was spared in the making of this production and critics who have seen it "in the rough" have declared it to be one of the greatest pictures of the year.

The story itself is known the country over and was very popular at the time it was published. The stars who were selected to play the title roles in the production are: Frank Mayo, Kathryn Adams and J. Barney Sherry.

Frank Mayo is cast in the production as a friend of the richer New York men and who earns his living as a "tipster." He has been educated at Yale and it was there that he declared his love to Sylvia Castle, which part is played by Kathryn Adams. But her father met business reverses and died. She was forced to go to work in a department store in New York. She longed for the stage and was finally made a protege of a formerly successful producer. He had succumbed to drink but succeeded through his love for his new star to brace up and she soon became a Broadway star. Her rise was phenomenal. Meanwhile Paul Potter's fortune had increased but he had become involved in several marriage tangles and when he later met Sylvia his old love for her was again aroused. She was about to marry him despite his many escapades when she saw in her manager, Laemington, which part is played by Sherry, a real man and she determined to marry him and reform him.

Sunday Law Aids Robertson-Cole

Makes Room for Pictures in Theatres which Had Been Booked Solid Before Law was Effective

FULL advantage of the Sunday opening option law whereby many New York state theatres are now open on Sunday, has been grasped by Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual, and their productions are now being booked into theatres which because of previous solid contracts were not enabled to show them.

Joe L. Merrick, assistant sales manager of Exhibitors Mutual, has just returned from a tour through up-state New York, looking over the Sunday opening situation, and his report has proved most gratifying to Robertson-Cole. Mr. Merrick also visited New England.

He reported that in the Albany territory nine towns have been opened since the Governor signed the local option bill allowing motion pictures to be shown on Sundays. Each one of these towns opened with a Robertson-Cole production, five of them using "The Turn in the Road."

"Every exhibitor interviewed regarding the Robertson-Cole productions is strong in his praise of them," said Mr. Merrick.

In the city of Buffalo alone, Mr. Merrick said, out of sixty theatres he found that forty-two were at present playing Robertson-Cole attractions, a record which speaks highly of the efficiency of the Buffalo exchange of Exhibitors Mutual and of the drawing power of Robertson-Cole attractions.

The same conditions existing in upper New York state were in evidence in all the Eastern branches he visited, Mr. Merrick said.

Big Advertising Campaign for Olive Thomas

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that the showing of Olive Thomas' first Selznick picture, "Upstairs and Down," in Chicago, will be accompanied by one of the biggest and most extensive advertising campaigns ever launched in any city. Fred C. Aiken, Select's Chicago branch manager, has already completed plans for two units in the big campaign, and other arrangements are now in the works.

Mr. Aiken's first step in the Chicago exploitation of "Upstairs and Down" was to interest the management of the Paradise Dancing Academy in a plan whereby the Paradise Academy held an "Upstairs and Down" night on the evening of June 12 Mr. Guyon, the owner and director of this amusement corporation, is one of Chicago's biggest advertisers, and it is said he has a contract for two one-sheets on every elevated station platform in that city. In connection with the "Upstairs and Down" night at the Paradise, the arrangements include, it is stated, an agreement by which Mr. Guyon will advertise Olive Thomas, "Upstairs and Down" and the Selznick Pictures Corporation on every one-sheet at his disposal. An additional line will give the names of the first-run theatres where "Upstairs and Down" is booked for Chicago engagements.

On the evening of the "Upstairs and Down" night at the Paradise, there will be distributed 1,000 photographs of Miss Thomas, on the backs of which will be printed the name of every theatre in Chicago and vicinity where "Upstairs and Down" will be shown.

James Oliver Curwood will again be represented on the screen this month when "Beauty Proof," the Vitagraph production with Harry T. Morey, reaches the exhibitor on June 23.

"Yvonne from Paris," the story of a French dancer, by Joseph Franklin Poland, in which Mary Miles Minter will be presented by the American, has undergone its second cutting. The film is on the list of "Flying A" releases for July.

Western Picture Minus Gunplay

"Bare Fisted Gallagher," Desmond's Latest, Unique Also in Lack of Usual Dance Hall

ANOTHER story that is "different" is promised in "Bare Fisted Gallagher," William Desmond's latest feature released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual. In previous productions Desmond has run a gamut of character interpretations from the society leader to a stone mason in a Latin-American country. In his latest production he has both comedy and drama to enact.

Speaking of "Bare-Fisted Gallagher," Jesse D. Hampton who produces the Desmond photoplays said:

"Bare Fisted Gallagher" contains about all the elements that motion picture audiences seem to like. There is plenty of drama action, and suspense with a strong comedy vein running through it. The action is limited to a few characters, which gives each one an opportunity to develop his part.

"Desmond is called 'Bare Fisted Gallagher' because he goes through the picture without a gun. He depends upon his smile and sometimes upon his bare fist to bring him through the many situations.

"This is a western story that is different from the usual run of western stories. No dance hall scenes, no saloons, and no heavy who is trying to kidnap the 'goil.' The story is fairly up to date. The heavy of the piece did have a saloon, but since the State has gone dry, he opens a grocery store with a soda fountain on the side. He has managed, however, to conceal a little of the liquor in sarsaparilla bottles. There is quite a run on sarsaparilla. Even the town's most ardent temperance advocate calls for it.

"Bare-fisted Gallagher" is really a melodrama, but played from a comedy angle, but not burlesque. His part never becomes a character slur. It is a picture which combines the big outdoors with a good active story. The story of "Bare Fisted Gallagher" is the type of story that might actually happen.

Phillips Completes "Right to Happiness"

WHAT has been pronounced by unprejudiced critics who have seen it as one of the most spectacular of the dramatic screen photoplays of the year has been completed at Universal City, says an official of the company. It is the new Dorothy Phillips super-production directed by Allen Holubar, the producer of "Heart of Humanity."

"Exhibitors as well as the public are promised a picture of extraordinary interest, apart from its theme, in that the cast includes four of the members of the cast of 'Heart of Humanity.' They are Miss Phillips, William Stowell, Robert Anderson, and Margaret Mann.

"The 'Right to Happiness' was written by Holubar himself and put into continuity by the director and Olga Linek Scholl, who also assisted Holubar in his previous production.

"This super-production was more than three months in the making, and in the cast besides the four previously named stars are: Hector Sarno, Henry Barrows, Winter Hall, Alma Bennett, and Stanhope Wheatcraft, one of the stars in 'Destiny.'"

The story deals with an American in Russia, who has two daughters, twins. One of them is lost and he returns to America, where he becomes money mad and a slave driver. The lost daughter comes to America a Bolsheviki, and is fatally wounded in a fight on New York's east side. Hardcastle, the father, discovers his lost daughter is dying and promises to build up a new business with co-operative business with his employes. A gigantic factory is built and prosperity is at hand for all. Vivian, the daughter, who came to America with her father, marries the foreman of the plant. The roles of the two daughters are played by Dorothy Phillips with true vividness it is said.

Advance Men to Exploit War Relief Series

IN keeping with the recent announcement that Universal would improve its service to exhibitors even more in the coming year—the eighth year of its existence—and that it would bring some surprises to the front, the announcement is made that three men will tour the United States and Canada visiting practically every large city in the country, to introduce the Stage Women's War Relief series, which are to be released through Universal.

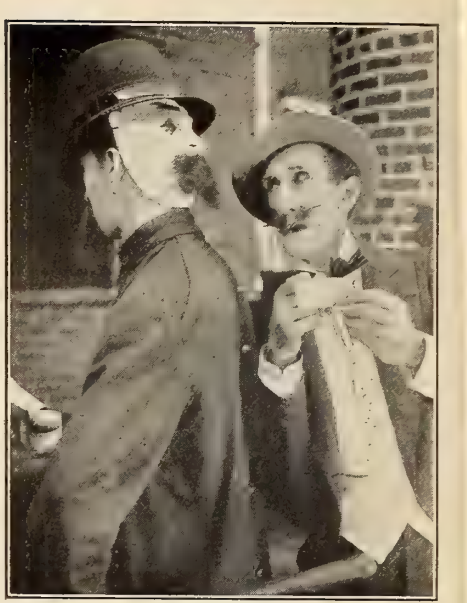
William Howard and W. R. Wilkerson have been selected to introduce the pictures. The third man has not yet been named.

The pictures are considered splendid productions, with foremost stars of the legitimate stage, many of whom have not before acted before the camera, in the leading parts. Each of the three men will carry a "stunt" reel to be screened for exhibitors, and every star of the entire series will be shown in some part of the picture she or he appeared in.

In addition Universal is preparing a press book for the entire series, and other exhibitor aids. Universal expects to book the entire series in the larger houses of the country, and believe the leading exhibitors will be more than glad to show the pictures to their patrons.

"A Girl at Bay," Next for Corinne Griffith

Corinne Griffith already has started work on "A Girl at Bay," her picture to succeed "Thin Ice." It is adapted from a magazine story by Joseph Gollomb. Tom R. Mills is directing the picture at Vitigraph's Brooklyn studio, and the supporting cast includes many popular players.



"A Self-made Lady" is one of the Fox "Lucky Thirteen" series

Soldier Author Now with Famous Players-Lasky

Major Ian Hay Beith (Ian Hay), soldier, lecturer and author, is now in Los Angeles and will start work at once as a member of Cecil B. DeMille's literary staff at the Famous Players-Lasky studio.

Major Beith's initial photoplay efforts will be in connection with the coming Artcraft production based on Sir James M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton," under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille. Miss Jeannie Macpherson is writing the screen version of the Barrie success and Major Beith will aid her in an advisory capacity.

Orphans See "Little Mary" in Their Role

Particularly appropriate was a performace of "Daddy Long Legs," Mary Pickford's production for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, given at Detroit before 500 orphans, guests of the management of the Washington theatre. Gleeful was the applause of the young ones as Mary triumphed at times over the matron of the mismanaged orphan asylum in which, in the picture, she was an inmate. "She's just like one of us" was the whispered thought of many of the youngsters.

"Way of a Woman" Has Strong Cast

Although work on Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select Picture, "The Way of a Woman," is practically completed, the retaking of several important scenes and the addition of two new names to the cast delayed the announcement of the complete personnel of Miss Talmadge's company until the present time. Miss Talmadge's support in this production will be Conway Tearle, Gertrude Berkeley, Colonel Vernon, Mae McAvoy, Jobyna Howland, Hassard Short, George La Guerre, William Humphreys and Stuart Holmes.

Special Service Section on

Wallace Reid in "You're Fired"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show Wallace Reid in "You're Fired" should get in a good humor with themselves at the very start. You have to put the spirit of fun, even kidding over if you are going to make the most out of this. Forget every problem that you ever had and offer this picture simply as one that will give delight. It is the sort of a picture that every one will forget all about a week after they have seen it, except that the impression will be left that they had a mighty good time while they were viewing it. That is the spirit for you to follow in ADVANCE.

As we have said to you before in these Special Service Sections it is not good policy to simply say that a picture is "the funniest ever." That is as bad as the old phrase "the greatest picture since 'The Birth of a Nation.'" Don't merely tell them that it is funny, but suggest WHY. There is a love story here and something of the romantic, but especially in these hot weather days we would make the appeal rather to the ridiculous. The title is going a long way to help you in putting over that angle for it is sure to attract attention.

You will naturally play the name of the star strong, but don't fail to take advantage of the members of the supporting cast which includes Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, Herbert Pryor and Raymond Hatton. Here's a good line:

"The perfect comedy—with a cast that guarantees it."

O. HENRY STORY

Mention of Basis of the Picture Worth While

THIS picture is based on "The Halberdier," by O. Henry, especially if you are in a city this should be mentioned in your advertising. Bookstores have been rather overworked on window displays, but you may manage to get this over.

If you can obtain from the local library the names of the readers of the O. Henry stories they are worth sending a special letter to, for they are likely to bring others along with them. Women's literary clubs should be notified, but to the general public don't make this a "literary" offering of any sort.

Laughs and the strong cast are the things to sell this picture to your patrons.

THERE isn't very much to the story. Billy Deering has so much money that all he has to do is to make love to Helen Rogers, much to her content but to the disgust of Gordon Rogers, who has earned his fortune by hard work and believes that every other man should get out and hustle, so when Billy comes around to look for the parental blessing Rogers tells him that he won't allow his daughter to marry a man who can't earn his living.

"I could get a job tomorrow," retorts Billy, and the old man comes back with: "Yes, so could any other loafer, but how about keeping it?" And on this basis there is an agreement signed that Billy must work for thirty days without being fired to win the girl, and at the same time keep the pact secret from Helen. So he seeks to explain the agreement to Helen by telling her that he is called away on business and even she laughs at him: "You? On business? Don't make me laugh."

Billy doesn't have any trouble landing a job as a transcriber in an office, but his use of a typewriter is confined to a one-fingered punch and when he sees the manager fire the office boy he decides to save himself by quitting, and produces, as he does on later conditions, a certificate to show that he resigned.

NEXT he is attracted by an advertisement for a xylophone player and at his first try-out he excites the admiration of the eccentric orchestra leader, a characterization that reflects credit on Raymond Hatton. But social engagements bring the orchestra to Mrs, Oglethorpe's ball where Helen and Bill's friends are guests. The hostess first recognizes him and there is a lot of comedy work in which Billy uses the mustaches disguise, but at last the girl is no longer fooled and demands that he give up the masquerade. His action in hitting a bald-headed violinist over the head results in a near fight and again Billy "resigns."

Then he is attracted by an advertisement of Capellano, who is opening a restaurant in Little Italy and who wants a "halberdier" to give atmosphere to the place. This gentleman, be it known, is a figure costumed like the knights of old who fought with mace and lance.

In the meantime, Helen, very much disgusted with the conduct of Billy is transferring her affections to Tom Graham, an adventurer. The latter is broke and when he goes to his uncle seeking more money

At right and left are two of the comedy scenes with Reid as the xylophone player, at the left "in disguise." In the center, Wanda Hawley as the girl

At the left the girl accepts, and at the right he makes an agreement with her father that he will hold a job for thirty days without being fired. But in the center he spills the soup and the old man demands he be ousted on the ground that he is about to effect a rich marriage, the uncle demands that Tom secure a merger agreement that Rogers has in his safe.

HIRING a couple of crooks to do the work and agreeing to meet them at Capellano's after the show, Tom invites Helen and her father to the theatre and then when he starts to the restaurant, to meet the crooks they insist on accompanying him. Of course Helen recognizes Billy and when he again refuses her pleas to abandon such a career she determines to humiliate him. But in the meantime he overhears the plot and when one of the crooks shows Tom the paper, Harry manages to get it.

Now comes Helen's revenge. She declares that she wants to have the novelty of the halberdier serving her, and the manager, flattered by the presence of the millionaire agrees. Rogers recognizes him on his first appearance and Harry shows him the record evidencing that he has not been fired and lacks only thirty minutes of finishing his month. All goes well until the soup is served and then Harry stumbles and the contents of the huge bowl go over Helen's dress.

Indignant, Rogers sees his chance and summons the manager demanding that Harry be fired or the manager face a suit. But Harry comes back with the argument that he was hired as a halberdier and not as a waiter and then a moment later hands the copy of the stolen agreement to Rogers and explains. The manager thinks his fortune made, and madly kisses Harry on either cheek. Then come explanations of the agreement from the father—and Helen and Harry in the happy ending.

NOW just one caution. A lot of you exhibitors have found that there is a feeling against the costume picture, and for that reason, if you use a picture of Reid as a halberdier, you want to be sure to explain just why he is wearing this costume, and explain it with the suggestion of a laugh.

As we have suggested we would make the love story side of it rather incidental, merely as an explanation of the farcical situation in which Reid is seen. This is not so very far from a burlesque melodrama and that angle is a good one to remember. We would use the picture suggesting that element and omit the close ambrace stuff.

Here is one that gets something of that line:

"Harry didn't have to do any work except to count his millions, but the papa-in-law he sought demanded that he hold a job for thirty days without being fired and to keep it a secret from the girl.

"For 29 days and 23½ hours he had slaved, enduring the snubs of the girl who didn't understand and living in mortal fear of the words:

"'You're fired.'

"Now he had just a half hour to go and the girl's father was just yearning to see him fail. Harry didn't have any beans around to spill, and so he spilled—THE SOUP.

"—And all over the girl's new gown. Of course papa-in-law, that seemed now only a lost chance. He was demanding Harry's job.

"But don't forget the POIPERS. Oh, yes, Harry had foiled the crooks and all of that and the old man was mighty glad to be an 'in-law.'

"No, you won't laugh—you'll scream."

IF you are using considerable space and especially if you can get good half-tone results in your newspapers we would advise using two cuts in the display. In one of the upper corners take the picture of Reid as he appears as the halberdier with the girl by his side and at the bottom use one as the xylophone player at the dance. Use of the former cut will leave you some space at the side and there we would try the short sentence effect. Like this:

"He didn't need a job.
"But he wanted the girl.
"He had to have her.
"But papa had something to say.
"He must work thirty days—
"And not be fired.
"He tried typing first and heard—
"'You're fired'—to another.
"And so he resigned.
"A xylophone player next—
"Then he quit again.
"Finally a halberdier—
"Whatever that is—
"And the girl's scorn,
"And the father demanding
"That he be fired.
"But—o-o-h—o-o-h—
"A regular hero—
"He had the poipers—
"And papa?
"'Bless you my children."
"That'll tickle you—
"But the main thing is—
"LAUGHS—
"Every minute—
"And a chuckle as you hit the street."

OF course that sort of stuff wouldn't be taken as a serious selling argument, but it is the sort that relieves the monotony of the usual picture and certainly this is one with which you ought to go out and appeal to those who want something that really is novel.

Then here are some shorter ones, just suggestions without attempting to put over any particular punch:

"He wanted that girl. He had all the money that he needed, but that girl's dad said he has to work thirty days without being fired. He got a job as a typist and beat the 'You're fired' to it. Then he was a xylophone player, and 'resigned' just before the fateful words could be spoken. Then he became a halberdier—come and see what that is—and you'll admit that he was a bird at halberdiering. Even dad had to admit that, and you'll applaud the victory a little, if you're not too weak from laughter."

"He didn't need a job any more than an Esquimaux needs an electric fan—until the girl's dad told him that he had to get one —and not be fired. Every minute he was hearing the sentence 'You're fired,' but he beat 'em to it—regular hero stuff—foiled the villains—grabbed the poipers and got the girl. But we haven't mentioned the best part of it. We don't expect you to hear much of the music this week—you'll all be laughing so hard."

"He couldn't typewrite, he couldn't get away with it as a xylophone player—but he had to hold a job without being fired. Then he had a chance to be a halberdier. Ever been one? Well, Harry was a perfect one, he foiled the villains, grabbed the poipers, won the girl—and all to the tune of your laughter. If laughing hurts you—miss this one."

Seeking a job as halberdier at the left, center scene with the girl which is splendid for use with both figures or Reid alone for ads., and at the right he gets the "poipers" from the two crooks

Title Itself Will Carry Out the "Teaser" Idea Well

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

TEASER campaigns on this one are so easy that it seems hardly necessary to stress them. Simple use of the title in small advertisements sprinkled through the newspapers for a week or so in advance of the first showing will serve to arouse the interest. We wouldn't advise any large amount of space to be used with this, as the smaller lines will get about as much attention as the larger.

The card system here will suggest itself, but even if you do use these with the title on one side we would be sure to carry the announcement that it is a motion picture, with the name of the theatre and the date of showing on the other. Any trick stuff of simply mailing these out may leave a bad impression, especially among the women folk. Teaser stuff that tends to offend in the slightest is always dangerous.

But when it comes to the announcement of the picture the title should be depended upon to attract the attention. Here are two short words that are catchy, and if they are properly displayed you needn't worry about the people seeing them, reading your selling argument and coming to the theatre. For that reason we would put the emphasis on the newspaper advertising.

SIMILARLY we would confine the lobby display to cut-outs. Both of the three sheets lend themselves to this one of them showing Reid as the musician and the other as the halberdier. Here the title should be played strong.

We would suggest that you may be able to get the co-operation of both men's clothing stores and musical dealers in advertising the picture. In the latter case the turn should be on the xylophone. It is not an instrument that is readily sold, and the dealer will probably use only one of them, but he can make his display on other things. There should be an attractively decorated card carrying scenes from the picture, preferably those showing Reid as the musician, and reading something like this:

"Wallace Reid plays a xylophone for a living in 'You're Fired,' at the Empire this week. Most enjoyment you'll get out of his performance is constant laughter.

"But when you want real music and real instruments, come to us—we have everything from the xylophone to the mouth organ."

Then for the clothing stores have them fit up a figure in the costume worn by Reid, which they can easily duplicate from the still, and on this card have the words:

"This is a halberdier. Wallace Reid is one that makes you roar in 'You're Fired,' at the Empire this week.

"We're just putting this here to let you know in advance what a halberdier looks like. We haven't any of these costumes for sale, but everything else that a man needs is here—and you wouldn't want to be a halberdier, any way, after you laugh at Wallace Reid's troubles."

THERE are unusual opportunities offered for the music here, but we would confine the score to the very lightest stuff. Even for the theme we would use one of the more popular selections, something with a lilt to it. If you have a girl singer available "Comin' Thro' the Rye" would make an excellent vocal selection with a background showing a field and the moon just coming up, getting the romance suggestion. This should then be carried through as the theme.

At the title which says that the old man believes in working there can be an intensified laugh with "Everybody Works But Father" played up, or "How'd You Like to Be My Daddy?" Early in the picture there is a scene with the girl playing the piano and here the theme can be used with piano only, and then where the girl says that the idea of Harry and business makes her laugh there should be a change with the orchestra to "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry."
